On the other hand, we are equally bound to endeavor to exercise the best strategy and tactics of which we are capable in doing the work which may lead to conflict with the would-be suppressors of divergence. We have to recognize the fact that many aspects of the sex question cannot adequately be dealt with under existing conditions. We do not know what is the better or the best course to pursue, because we have not had the opportunity to experiment and to compare the results of our experimentation. What men and women can or may do now is one thing; what men and women free from the bonds of superstition and individually independent can or may or will do is quite another thing. Therefore, I hold that much of the work attempted by Mrs. Craddock and Mrs. Stockham, as well as by their predecessors along that line of thought, was largely premature; there could be no full discussion of the issues involved; the scientific opposition could not be heard at all in public exposition, and even the proponents of the variously modified theory have been met by confiscation and imprisonment, which have, virtually, silenced them as public teachers. They taught some truth; they taught some very serious errors; they knew all the time, as we who opposed them knew all the time, that we could not be heard in any adequate fashion in exposing their errors or in reinforcing their expression of truth. Still they kept on in this direction, trying to do work that could have its place only when women and men should be fully free to experimentally investigate and publish the results of their practical researches without fear or favor. Now those of them who are alive know that their side cannot be presented when it goes beyond the merest assertion of the unproved, of the probably unprovable. Is it too much to hope that hereafter we may have more attention given to the entire emancipation of men and women, of women especially, as most in need of it, and less time wasted in speculating about what may be done when this hoped-for day of freedom comes or in trying to impress on the women who live in one world of thought and action what should be done, as it is asserted, by women who are to live in another world of thought and action?

Affirm the right of each woman to the control of her own person.

Affirm the right of either one of any couple to separate life when that person desires it, precisely as in business partnerships.

Affirm the normal nature of sex and its manifestations, the unshame and the sanity of it, from the caress just beyond friendship to the recreation of life.

These affirmations carry with them the denial of all the tyrannies, all the superstitions, all the inanities, all the perversions, of the prevailing sexual existence. In their amplification and exposition there is enough work for a score of Luciferes, for ten thousand speakers and writers. Yes, and for all who really wish to live freer and better. But if any is attacked by the Censorship or the mob for other teachings, defend that one as you would defend yourselves. So thinking, I sent this letter to the Chicago paper named:

Editor Chicago Daily Journal:

You speak of the fate that would befall any paper which should publish the writings of Mrs. Stockham. But is not this largely a matter of geography and time? What, to illustrate, would have been your fate in Russia any time during the last half century had you published there the matter on politics and religion that you have printed here with impunity? In 1784 the publisher of the first edition of Col. Ethan Allen's "Reason, the Only Oracle of Man," destroyed it because he feared the vengeance of offended heaven. A work is not necessarily treasonable or impure because the laws or the public opinion of a certain age or country condemn it, nor because the mind of its publisher age or country condemn it, nor because the mind of its writer or publisher becomes panic-stricken under the shadow of the yesterday of thought.

You admit that Mrs. Stockham may be sincere, that she may think women should be instructed as she seeks to instruct them, but this would only be proof to you that she is suffering from erotomania. Would the fact that a dress or food or drink or exercise reformer thinks the people really need instruction such as he is trying to give them, prove to your mind that he is the victim of some kind of mania and hence has no right to expression, has no place behind the shield of equal law?

It is asserted by you that Mrs. Stockham's books are "dangerous to public morals." In what respect do public morals differ from private morals? And what does the word "morals" mean, anyway, as used in this connection? Does it connote physiological rightness? If so, and if Mrs. Stockham's works tend to produce physiological wrongness, then her arguments should be answered by "the absorbent substitution of the opposite good" in precept, argument, and demonstration. The shame and danger are not that Mrs. Stockham has frankly given her opinion and endeavored to support it by reason and facts, as she uses reason and perceives things in relation, but that others are not permitted to give their opposing opinions and support them by their reason and their perception of things in relation, which we call "facts," for short. But if you use the word "morals" in its supernatural sense, its ghost sense, then it is useless for us to try to get on to a common ground for an examination of this question.

The closing paragraph of your editorial is mildly astonishing, even to one who has read a great deal on the side opposed to thorough investigation of all human problems, including the sexual. You say that "either the prison or the asylum is the proper place for people who can't stop thinking and writing about sex." The human race is on the earth and persists because of two facts, the first of which is its reproduction of its units through the association of the sexes, and the second of which is its utilization of food products. I may be more than usually obtuse, but for the life of me I cannot see why the first named of these facts is not as important to us individually and to the race as a whole as is the fact last named. If those who "can't stop thinking and writing about sex" should be in the prison or the asylum, then, by a parity of reasoning, those—a goodly number, by the way—who cannot stop thinking and writing about food also should be in the prison or the asylum. "The matter Mrs. Stockham's mind runs on" may be "most filthy, disgusting, and pernicious," as you say, but it is not, intrinsically, in the nature of things, one whit more "filthy, disgusting, and pernicious" than is the subject of food, and its cognate subjects, clothes, shelter and exercise. EDWIN C. WALKER.

This is written and mailed before the result of the Editor's trial is known here; may he be more successful than was Mrs. Stockham and my old friend Beckwith. And if beaten in the trial in the court of first action, may he carry it up just as high as is necessary to win, or as high as he can, if the end is the worst. Every victory that the Censorship wins should be permitted to it not at all; it should be compelled to wrest it from our very best, our most protracted, determined, and adroit defense. EDWIN C. WALKER.

HARMAN AND YOU.

It is a mistake to regard the present fight as directed solely against Moses Harman. That veteran champion of freedom is simply your representative and mine. If he goes to prison, every friend of progress is personally assaulted. The revived activity of the enemies of honesty and liberty is part of a gigantic conspiracy against the people of this country. Even the wretched McAfee is but a pawn in the game.

The fight is on. It is medievalism against evolution, superstition against enlightenment, ignorance against intelligence, darkness against light. No censorship can be anything but evil. Only a bad cause fears free speech. Persecution is a confession of weakness and imbecility. The desperation into which the reactionists are thrown is evidenced by such an organ as the Chicago Journal, which has the effrontery to declare that all who write about sex should be sent to the prison or the asylum. Medievalism is indeed near its last ditch, when it so plainly shows the workings of its foul mind. That any subject pertinent to human welfare should be shrouded in darkness, is a conception which only a knavish or incredibly stupid mind could allow itself to entertain.

There is some encouragment in the present situation. If truth were not making some progress, its inveterate enemies would not be so startled and desperate in their efforts to arrest its progress. If their old fetich were not tottering under the assaults of reason, they would not need to prop it up with the shattered fragments of inquisitorial instruments. The martyrdom of Moses Harman, if it must come, will not be in vain. The future is for progress, no matter what fools try to stay her car.

The pity of it is that in the meantime the bravest and most earnest must be sacrified to the sluggish indifference of the mass. A united and unswerving movement for free speech ought long ere this to have been an accomplished fact. It is monstrous that such crises as the extradition of John Turner and the practical murder of Ida Craddock should have produced no universal arousing of public sentiment. Had professed Liberals seized on those occasions to force the issue to the front, the present outrage might have been spared us. As it is, will we awake NOW? Let us save Moses Harman, if not already too late. But if the bloodhounds have claimed him as their victim, let us at least now awake to a realization of the fact that the peril to free speech in America is an issue which far dwarfs all others, and unite, not in a spasmodic outcry, but in a systematic effort to force the fight on this line at all times until the battle is won. The pretended "Liberal" who will not stand firmly for Moses Harman in this fight is an imposter who has no business in the ranks. Only a coward or a traitor would desert at such a crisis.

Once more sincerely thanking all our co-operators in this line of work, since last credit, we ask all who have not yet ordered books or papers to be used in educational work, to the amount of their cash contributions, to do so as soon as convenient. In this way the good results of their contributions will be cumulative.

TO "FREE SOCIETY" SUBSCRIBERS.

We have now been sending you LUCIFER for some three months, or more. While a comparative few have answered our request to let us know whether they want LUCIFER, a large majority of F. S. subscribers still remain silent. Once more we earnestly request an early answer to this question:

Do you want to be considered subscribers to Lucifer, and are you willing to help win the fight for freedom of speech and of press on ALL lines of reform?

If you do not want LUCIFER it will cost only one cent to so notify us on a postal card.

Hopefully yours for the right, M. HARMAN.

DON'T FORGET, good friends all, to send us names of independent thinkers—New Thought people, Rationalists, Agnostics, Spiritualists, Materialists, Free Religionists, Theosophists—to whom we may send sample copies of Lucifer, "Son of the Morning," "Herald of the Dawn," "Harbinger of the Good Time Coming"! We have some hundreds of copies printed extra each issue for the express purpose of sending them out as samples, and, if possible, we want several hundred new names each week, or each fortnight. And if with the names a few postage stamps can be sent to help pay the cost of wrappers and of mailing, all the better, but send the names!

To those who have ordered and not received the "Truth Seeker"—Bradford, England, will say we again have a good supply of the two quarterly issues, dated respectively, January, February and March, and April, May and June, which issues will be sent to any address postpaid for five cents each in stamps.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. B. Phinney, Springfield, Mo.—"The enclosed dollar is for ten copies of the 'double number.' May take ten more."

Alex. McVeigh, Miller, W. Va.—"My dear old pioneer, I send ten dollars on the cost of your defense. All I ask is your photograph with autograph. May you win!"

A. B. Fish, Newburgh, N. Y.: "Enclosed find one dollar for defense from Mr. Israels, and sixty cents for six copies of the Inquisition number of LUCIFER to be sent as follows: . . . . Hoping for a speedy victory."

J. G. Lambrigger, Niobrara, Neb.: "Here's a dollar for another year for the bravest paper and the bravest man in America. May you physically survive all your persecutors as your good work will survive their hypocrisy and persecution. Yours for Liberty."

J. K., Boston, Mass.—"Am glad to be able to send in eleven names and an order for $2.75, for eleven three months' subscriptions, hoping more will come of it for LUCIFER. You will certainly need all the bravery, all the patience and all the money you can summon at this time."

Tom White, Krebs, I. T.—"Enclosed find $2—one for renewal of subscription and one for defense fund. . . . So long as the people worship custom for their god, just so long will the workers for humanity be persecuted. But you are good enough and brave enough to stand it. Cheer up! That is all I can say."

J. E. Phelps, West Sutton, Mass.—"It is a pity that our officials so often leave crime unmolested and persecute virtue instead. Regret I cannot now send something towards your defense; may do so soon. Am a subscriber of many years' standing and hope to receive LUCIFER as long as I live. The enclosed dollar is to renew for another year. Best hopes and wishes."

H. A. Libbey, Boston, Mass.: "The seventy-five copies of 'Love's Protest' received. Would like to send you a check for $200 instead of the two dollars, as enclosed, for which please send copy of 'Child of Love,' $1, and some copies of 'Significance of Divorce,' also a copy of 'Social Freedom,' by Hulda Potter Loomis when ready. The $200 I would send you would be to fight for the cause of freedom as you see it."

Geo. B. Higgs, Kiel, Germany.—"I enclose ten marks in bank notes and if I can do more later I will. It is impossible for me to say much on the subject [of the prosecutions], as I do not know all of the facts, but I do fully realize the importance of the matter and how interested must be every believer in liberty. If you are reprinting Dora Forster's papers in pamphlet form I would like a copy of it. Send me LUCIFER regularly."

Mrs. A. C. Zimmerman, Vineland, N. J.—"The enclosed $2.50 is for two bound volumes of LUCIFER—1904 and 1905. I also want five copies of the Postal Inquisition number. I sent a dollar to Dr. Foote, treasurer of the Free Speech League, for myself and one for a friend who prefers not to have her name published. Whatever becomes of this case, I believe it is telling on the sentiment, the conscience, of the people and will continue to tell."

O. L. Harvey, W. Lafayette, Ind.—"I believe in the sanctity of plighted faith, but would not allow any man or woman to dictate to me or determine for me whom I should love or marry. On all proper occasions I shall say what I think, even though I die for it. If I had been taught the uses and hygiene of the sex organs in childhood it would have saved me years of sickness and failure. Let us teach our children the truth. The truth will make them free. In your coming trial I hope you will bring all the forces of science and of constitutional rights to establish freedom of speech. Whenever I see a man imposed upon I feel like defending him, even if I think him in the wrong. I have never seen anything in LUCIFER that could be called 'obscene.' LUCIFER is incomparably cleaner in this regard than a great many novels that are thrown broadcast upon the public."

Dr. B. L. Hermstadt, Cincinnati, O.—"Next Tuesday your trial comes off and I sincerely hope there may be enough common decency in those that will try you to be just. James Morton told me when here that you were cheerful as ever in your troubles, and it certainly did me good to hear it. I send enclosed $5. Many thanks to you for continuing my papers. Credit both of them and send both in same cover. Send me a copy each of Motherhood in Freedom, 25c; A Freeman's Creed, 25c; The Ascent of Life, 25c; Life, Health and Longevity, 25c; Sex Radicalism, 25c; Marred in the Making, 25c; Sexual Love, What It Is and What It Is Not, 25c; New Hedonism, two copies, 10c. Send bill for these and I will remit soon."

E. S. D., California.—"The larger portion of us men have abnormal sex desires, and I think it of the greatest importance in winning the battle you are engaged in for woman's emancipation that this abnormality be overcome. 'Male continence' is one of the grandest discoveries of the age, but with our present abnormal passions few of us men will, or can, practice it. But let any man live for two years on fruit, nuts and grains, properly cooked, and he will find a wonderful change in his cravings for sexual food, and he will have lost all appetite for tobacco and whisky. . . . Cut out all meat, tea, coffee, condiments and pastry, and fill our tables with fruits, green or dried, and with nuts and whole wheat bread, or rye or oatmeal cakes, and we will soon raise a race of men that will have clean bodies and clean brains to work out plans that will not only emancipate women, but greatly enlarge everybody's happiness. Yours for going to the roots of the evil."

C. J. Zeltinger, Zeltonia, Mo.—"Should have forwarded the enclosed $5 promised the 'Defense League' long ere this. I am on the sympathetic side always, but especially so in your case, and hope you may not have to serve a fourth term in prison for the cause of freedom in the love relations of human-kind. You have set us all to thinking on the most important subject which concerns our present and future welfare. I believe we stand at the threshold of the emancipation of woman; but if it comes within your time, it is my confident opinion that it must be along lines of mathematical exactness. So long as we have governments we shall have an intrinsic money system, and we all know that money is the ruling spirit of the realm, therefore we simply have to inaugurate an equitable system of assurance, thus put motherhood on a paying basis. In this wise much could be done to lift the burden of expense from the mind of prospective mothers and subsequent rearing of her offspring.

"Please send copy of 'Social Freedom,' by Hulda Potter Loomis; also Wentworth's essay on 'Significance of Divorce.' Yours for the higher and better humainty."

David A. Modell, New York City.—"Circumstances wholly beyond my control having kept me in arrears shamefully long, I now send you two magical dollars, one in renewal of my own subscription to LUCIFER, the other to pay for four trial subscriptions of three months each. . . . So you are again threatened with a spell of persecution at the dirty hands of Mrs. Grundy's self-appointed representatives! Will the bloodhounds never tire of pursuing their lean game? Even dogs are possessed of the feeling of fair play, and do not constantly attack the weak and helpless. The postal authorities would not dare to meddle with the affairs of LUCIFER if it could boast of a circulation anywhere approaching those of the popular magazines. That is why the latter can say what their subscribers want to read, while LUCIFER must not say what the postal censors (non-subscribers, mark you) don't want, do not read, and cannot understand. When by chance or evil design they do look at a copy of LUCIFER their morbid imagination renders all sorts of sights possible to them which to innocent minds and pure hearts do not actually exist. They see but their own shadows. And no wonder they are alarmed! But even the dog in the fable does not chase his shadow forever, let alone barking at it. . . . And if our government censors are not equal to the task of extracting a moral from Aesop's fables, how eminently qualified they must be to sit in judgment upon a publication such as LUCIFER! . . . May you find the strength—and especially the funds—necessary to repulse this last cowardly attack of the enemy. If every permanent subscriber were able and willing to carry all the time four trial subscribers, LUCIFER would soon double its circulation and would no longer have cause to fear prosecution by the postal censors."

Ed. Secrest, Randolph, Kans.—"My Dear Old Friend Harman: I see by last week's LUCIFER that the powers that be intend to put you through, and that many of your friends fear that the fate of Dr. Stockham will be yours. So I hasten to send you the enclosed mite ($2.00) toward the defense fund. . . . Little did we think, now nearly two years ago, when we met and mingled with mutual friends under the roof tree of the lowly cottage sheltered by the stately eucalyptus trees on the beautiful avenue in lovely Santa Clara valley, California, happy and free in a 'feast of reason and a flow of soul,' that another outburst of bigoted persecution was in store for you, and that the vial of governmental wrath was to be poured out upon your venerable gray head. . . . While light is breaking in despot-cursed Russia, and a muzzled press hails with joy the dawning day, and hears the death knell of censorship, America, free America, seems to invite the hideous Hydra to our shores, and to offer to expiring Czarism a hospitable asylum under the Stars and Stripes! . . . Rest assured that with your other hundreds and thousands of friends, collaborators and sympathizers I shall watch with bated breath the outcome of the drama to be played in the federal courts by the Great Lakes. While I wish you all the courage and fortitude you need in your hour of trouble and old age, I know that you are ready to say with that of another: 'I am master of my fate, I am captain of my soul!' If more help is needed, command me!

DID ROOSEVELT ADVOCATE HIGH QUALITY?

In Lucifer No. 1,041, William Windsor points out that President Roosevelt has done a public service in drawing attention to the sex question. I fully agree, and also believe that Roosevelt will be chiefly remembered in history because his way of handling this subject aroused indignant protest from the women of America against the man's one-sided views of women and of the maternal function. Mr. Windsor states that Roosevelt advocated that men and women should desire plenty of children and that these children should be "of the very highest quality." Can he tell us where Roosevelt advocated this ideal of high quality, not to speak of "the very highest"? And whether any method to this end was suggested? . . . I ask this, because the gravest objection that has been found against our present marriage system is that it does not produce children of the highest quality, and I believe Roosevelt ignored this.

I also want to ask Mr. Windsor whether he really knows any sex reformers who think that the highest happiness results from a childless home, in a flat, with frequent changes of partners? If their thinking "seems" this to him, I believe he has colored it with his imagination. I know many sex reformers, and none advocate childlessness or frequent change of partner, but many deplore the sterility of many of the best men and women caused by our present sex system.

I would remind Mr. Windsor that the selfish have never been apostles of a movement; nor can selfish ideals inspire the courage which faces persecution and imprisonment for a principle.

DORA FORSTER.

FROM A VETERAN FIGHTER FOR FREEDOM.

[The following characteristic paragraphs are from a private letter written by one whose name was a "household word" during the border wars that gave rise to the phrase "Bleeding Kansas." Dr. Brown is old enough now to be put on the "retired list"—eighty-five years, if I do not forget—and if any man deserves a pension from the United States treasury this veteran worker for liberty and right deserves such pension.

So far as I know, he gets no pension, asks no pension, but is still a diligent worker with his brain and pen, though for reasons best known to himself he seldom or never signs his name to what he writes—editorially—in a very popular and eminently successful reform journal.

Though not written for publication I have permission to select from his letter such parts as show his attitude toward the postal censorship and allied subjects.—M. H.]

I have always read Lucifer with pleasure and I guess with profit. Probably I would have exercised greater caution, so as to avoid the blood-hounds, had I been in your place, but that perhaps because I passed through so much adverse criticism while I was publishing my anti-slavery views, both in Pennsylvania and Kansas. [Dr. Brown was editor of the "Herald of Freedom" in Kansas during the fight over the question whether that territory should be organized as a free or as a slave state.]

I send you my book entitled "Reminiscences of Governor R. J. Walker, with the True Story of the Rescue of Kansas from Slavery." The author takes you behind the scenes and tells you what would have been very improper to relate at the time the events occurred. And it is a quietus to the professional libeller who manufactured falsehoods at $5 a lie for the eastern press. . . . .

Probably you never knew that at the session of the territorial legislature of Kansas for, I think, 1859-60, Erastus Heath, a member of the House, offered a bill emancipating all persons bound by marriage, provided they did not in a limited time, I think it was one month, file a statement in the District Court that they were satisfied with their present relations. It was a great shock, but there were reported three hundred bills pending in that legislature divorcing parties, and Heath thought the fair thing would be to release all that were not harmoniously married in one general bill.

If all the mismated could express themselves without Mrs. Grundy's opposition, don't you think there would be a universal smash up? I believe it. And the mourners about the streets would be mighty few!

But these are not my subjects for present thought. I sincerely hope you will not be arraigned before a Christian bigot, of the Comstock persuasion. The latter attempted to get me in his coils, but I "smelt a rat" in good time, and he gained no hold on me. "Damn him and damn those who won't sit up nights to damn him," was the expression of an angered, drunken man, some fifty years ago, when speaking of a person he did not like, and I feel the same way about Anthony.

Your friend, G. W. BROWN.

[Dr. Brown uses language that will seem shocking to many readers, but sometimes it is necessary that people be shocked in order that they may be roused from a dangerous stupor.—M. H.]

SOCIAL FREEDOM.

Asking the forbearance of subscribers for the booklet, "Social Freedom," for what seemed unavoidable delay, we wish to say that a part of the edition is now ready for mailing. By request of the author, Hulda I. Potter-Loomis, part of the edition contains nothing but the essay itself, with preface and half-tone, full-page picture of herself. Another and larger half of the edition will contain, besides the essay, picture and preface, about ten pages of addenda and advertisements of LUCIFER and its literature.

To those who have read "Social Freedom" when first published in installments, no word of commendation is believed to be necessary. To all others we would say that few if any essays published by us have received warmer or more nearly universal approbation.

Price, 20 cents single copy; $1.50 per dozen; $10.00 per hundred, carriage paid.

THE RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL.

From time to time, for about one year past, articles have been printed in Lucifer with this title. The type of these articles has been kept standing, hoping to put the several chapters into a pamphlet about the size, shape and price of Dora Forster's "Sex Radicalism." One more chapter only, as I think, is now needed to make a booklet of fifty pages, or thereabout. If those who have subscribed and not paid for one or more copies of this booklet, will now send the amount of their subscriptions the chapters will be put into the hands of the pressman and binder.

One of the most confusing problems of the age for conscientious thinkers is that which considers mankind in its relation to sex. It is probably true that after this little word of three letters stands the colossal interrogation point of the universe.—"The New Way."

A red or blue cross means, your subscription has expired, and you are respectfully requested to renew, or at least to let us know whether you wish the paper continued to your address.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 6, E. M. 305 [E. C. 1905]. WHOLE NO. 1043

THIS ISSUE ALSO HELD TO BE UNMAILABLE.

LUCIFER No. 1043, date July 6, regular issue, went to press on that day, and copies of the paper addressed to about one thousand of our subscribers were deposited for mailing at the Chicago postoffice. After due deliberation Mr. Hull, Superintendent of Second-Class Mails, decided that selections from "Tokology," by Dr. Stockham, giving advice in regard to painless childbirth, were "ob scene." Copies of LUCIFER containing these extracts are held at the postoffice here, awaiting the decision of the officials at Washington. This decision, Mr. Hull thought, would be received here not later than Wednesday, July 12. As it had not yet been received Thursday noon, I decided to wait no longer, but to adopt Mr. Hull's suggestion to issue the paper with the objectionable matter eliminated. In its place I have inserted a letter and an appeal by the Free Speech League of America, to which letter and appeal it is hoped due attention will be given by every reader of LUCIFER. M. HARMAN.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCESS IN AMERICA.

To Lovers of Freedom Everywhere:

In Russia to-day the fruit of the tree of the administrative process is ripe and more, and the government and people of that country are gathering the rotting harvest in flame and terror and blood.

In the United States the Postal Censorship for a decade or longer has been planting the seeds of that deadly tree in the soil of this country. Shall that mad planting continue and extend or are the people at last ready to say it must stop and stop NOW?

Moses Harman, Editor of "Lucifer," was tried and convicted and sentenced in the federal court in Chicago, on the threadbare charge of "obscenity". We have no doubt the whole series of proceedings was in every step a mistake and an injustice, a wrong to an honest man, a denial of salutary liberty, a menace to the peaceful evolution of better social conditions. But at least the forms of law were respected; at least the accused was confronted with his accusers; at least he was informed in advance of the charges against him; at least he had opportunity to employ counsel, to summon witnesses, to prepare his defense; at least he had a trial "by the country," that is, by a jury; at least he was not robbed of property and freedom without judicial investigation, partial and prejudiced though it was; at least he had some chance to defend himself, at least he was not THERE a victim of administrative process.

THAT was to come later in the crowning outrage of all to which he has been subjected during a full twenty years. He prepared a double number of "Lucifer," containing a resume of the history of his struggle with the Censorship and a number of letters from his friends. This was printed, drawing heavily on his very slender resources. It was deposited in the postoffice at Chicago for transmission. Days passed and no subscriber received his paper. Inquiries came to Mr. Harman. He went to the postoffice. He found that the entire edition of No. 1042 had been "held up." He asked why. The Superintendent of second-class mails told him there was "obscene" matter in the paper, and he pointed to two articles which he said were in violation of the postal law. These are all conservative from the viewpoint of any rational person of orthodox opinions, and they are even reactionary in a measure in the eyes of many intelligent men and women. The Superintendent says they are obscene; they are NOT OBSCENE and the official does not mean they are. He means that they are dangerous to the existing order of disorder, as he thinks. He admitted this when he said to Mr. Harman: "If your ideas should prevail society would be in a state of chaos." It is not obscenity but heresy that is scented and attacked. The paragraphs used as a pretext for confiscation by administrative process are pleas for a lessening of sexual indulgence. Would THAT produce social chaos, in the opinion of Superintendent Hull? But the writers of the paragraphs, and Mr. Harman, demand that woman shall have control of her own body. THAT is what has frightened the Censorship.

Other days passed. Again Mr. Harman went to the postoffice. He found that his papers had been sent to the dead-letter office in Washington, there to be destroyed, of course.

MARK WELL WHAT IS DONE: An edition of a paper is seized. The publisher is not notified of the fact. He is left to discover as best he may what has happened. He has no opportunity to defend or explain. His property is taken from him without "due process of law," without a hearing of any kind. The subscribers are left in like doubt; THEY ARE DENIED THEIR CHOICE OF READING MATTER; they are despoiled by administrative process, without inquiry and without hope of redress. And most of them are American citizens, supposedly under the protection of the Constitution!

Why not complete the installation of the Russian machine? Why not place a censor in "Lucifer's" office, with full authority to read all "copy" before it is sent to the linotype, and to blacken all words, lines, and pages that the Censorship can not approve? This would remove doubt, prevent worry and needless expense, and in all ways be a decided improvement on the present method of conducting the administrative process. Besides, it would have the merit of being logical. There would be no delusive suggestion of the republic, of liberty of press, of justice.

What are YOU prepared to say and do in the light of these facts? Will you now and hereafter, so long as these monstrous abuses shall continue, bear testimony against them? Will you protest? Will you do everything you can to help Moses Harman in this crisis, sustaining him by argument and appeal, with your influence; WITH MONEY, now as always the sinews of war? He is the victim to-day; you may be the victim tomorrow. The destruction of the rights of one, though the humblest and most unpopular, menaces the rights of all, opens the way for worse tyrannies, for more extended ruin. HOW MUCH do you sympathize with this hunted editor, with liberty of inquiry and expression?

FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT.

Moses Harman has been convicted again, and unless the Circuit Court of Appeals reverses the sentence of the District Court, he will probably serve a year in the Joliet Penitentiary.

The statue under which he was convicted prohibits lewd, lascivious and obscene publications. Articles which have a tendency to stimulate erotic emotion can with some certainity be classified as lewd and lascivious. It is, however, extremely difficult to designate in any terminology that which is obscene. Judges vary greatly in defining it, perhaps depending upon their neuropathic conditions.

Dr. Stockham's "The Wedding Night" was sold at $3 a copy; it omitted no details. Its publication was largely a commercial proposition. It was, from a conventional standpoint, exceedingly more suggestive, lewd and lascivious than the most suggestive portions of Venus and Adonis.

Dr. Stockham was found guilty and fined $250.00. Moses Harman, for a less offensive article, is sentenced to the penitentiary. This discrimination in fixing a sentence is void of all reason and justice and only has a tendency to increase the already very great disrespect for the law.

Moses Harman, in a sense, was trapped into prison. In discussing the subject of sexology, it is impossible for Harman to go to a lawyer or judge for assistance or guidance.

The Police Gazette and the Elite are admitted to the mails and there seems to be no Judge Landis or Bethea or public prosecutor startled into action. That Richard K. Fox is a man of great means cannot be the reason, but the fact remains that they send through the mails, coarse, smutty and suggestive pictures and paragraphs.

In Russia there is a censorship. It not only prohibits but points out what can be published or printed with impunity. If you violate the instructions, you take your chance in prison or Siberia.

In "my own, my native land" we have a censorship, the postal authorities and the other officials have the authority to stop non-mailable matter and to confiscate the same by sending it to the Dead Letter Office; they prefer not to confiscate, but to permit the offense then prosecute and convict.

Harman could go to the United States authorities, submit his paper, and they refuse to answer. He could go to a lawyer, and the lawyer may misinform him. He only learns his right, or rather his privileges, within prison walls.

A lawyer to venture an opinion, must compare his knowledge of what is ordinarily permitted to go through the mails with the the two articles which were published by Harman, which have absolutely no tendency to excite the passions, and, passing a favorable opinion, pass his client into the penitentiary.

For instance, the following poem appeared in the Literary Supplement of a Chicago Daily.

It was written by Gilder, editor of the Century Magazine and is also to be found among his "Poems and Inscriptions." The Chicago Daily was circulated indiscriminately among young, old and infants. With some trepidation I suggest its publication in LUCIFER, feeling that as it passed through the mails that precedent will not be broken for the purpose of sending an old man to jail.

I ask Judge Landis, the prosecuting attorney and the readers of this paper to read this poem:

"If lest thy heart betray thee,
Thou to one lover would not constant be,
And yet thou would love me—
This boon I pray thee:
Divide the dark from light,
Love me by night.

"If thy sweet thought would find me,
Not through the garish day Oh, Give it wing,
In shadows clasp and clasp and cling,
And bless and blind me!
When stars are still and bright—
Love me by night.

"In longing dreams I'll name thee;
In secret hours when breathes the midnight rose,
Thy heart in mine shall close—
Great love shall claim thee,
O mine in dark and light,
In day and night."

Now eliminate the beauty of the style and considering only by comparison the articles in LUCIFER with this poem, does it not appear more suggestive and inviting than the cold bald statements appearing in Harman's paper?

The indictment was a myth, the trial a farce and the cause of imprisonment an equivocation. A paper with only two or three thousand circulation is not racy; a racy paper would have 100,000. Harman's crime is that he opposes the present marriage system and publishes a paper in opposition thereto. Without monogamy, without inheritance through the father to the legal child, the present property system would fall into shreds. Harman is attacking the institution of private property, the property of the man; of the man holding capital in the ox and in his wife.

The state—the capitalists—will not care for children; the woman cannot; so man must individually be made to care for them. Love, affection, compatibility do not enter into present society ethics. The absence of any one of these elements will not justify separation or divorce. Monogamy will only exist when the women insist upon it, and they can do so only when they are economically free.

With sincere hopes that no over-susceptible reader will discover any unusual stimulation of his cerebellum and paralysis of the cerebrum, I remain sincerely,

SEYMOUR STEDMAN.

THE REAL CAUSE OF LUCIFER'S OFFENSE.

Mr. Stedman errs, it seems to me, in his characterization of Dr. Stockham's judicially condemned work, Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," if I remember correctly, is a glorification of physical love. Dr. Stockham's "Wedding Night" is a clearly worded letter of instruction to the married, written apparently with the purpose of teaching them the laws of health in marriage in order that both man and woman could live happy, healthy lives, and pass on a heritage of health and happiness to their children. To Oliver Wendell Holmes, I believe, is attributed the assertion that "To reform a man we must begin with his grandmother." Dr. Stockham realized that it is impossible to reform the grandparents of the present generation; but she evidently believed it both possible and desirable to properly instruct the potential grandmothers of future grandchildren. I believe that "The Wedding Night" is a work of great value in the hands of young women who seriously desire to so live that their offspring may be healthy, strong, happy, intelligent.

In asserting that the articles on which the editor of LUCIFER's prosecution and condemnation were based were "less offensive" than Dr. Stockham's "Wedding Night," Mr. Stedman does not take into account, for the moment, the real cause of LUCIFER's offense. That cause is LUCIFER's advocacy of self-ownership and self-control in the intimate relations between men and women, and its ignoring of the man-made rules which nominally attempt to regulate such relations. This real cause of offense was plainly stated by Mr. Hull, the superintendent of second-class mails at the Chicago postoffice, when he told the editor that in his opinion every issue of LUCIFER is "unmailable," and gave as his reason not that every issue contains obscene and indecent language, but his belief that "If your [the editor's] ideas were to prevail, society would be in a state of chaos." In this view of the case, and when due consideration is given to the fact that Dr. Stockham does not oppose the present marriage system but simply informs people how they may live in marriage in a way to insure their health and happiness, it is not surprising that the sentence of the editor of LUCIFER was the heavier; rather, is it surprising that Dr. Stockham was not let go free, and the editor of LUCIFER given the extreme penalty of ten years' imprisonment. But though courts may emulate the example of the old lady who tried to sweep back the sea with her broom, they will as signally fail as did she; for they cannot stop the advancing tide of thought even though they should succeed in suppressing LUCIFER and imprisoning its editor for life. Fortunately progress does not depend entirely on the life of one paper or of one man; though each individual, even though in himself weak, may be a factor in the progress of the race.

The father of Judge Landis fought, and, if I mistake not, died, in the battle of Kenesaw Mountain in the so-called civil war. Thence the judge received his name—Kenesaw Mountain Landis. Had the judge's father, I wonder, "formed the eccentric habit of courting" death in battle? Surely it would be as fair to so assert as it was for Judge Landis to assume that the editor of LUCIFER had "formed the eccentric habit of courting imprisonment." It is probable that the soldier did not really desire to be killed; perhaps he thought that in risking death he was being of service to humanity. Certainly the editor of LUCIFER, like other men, prefers freedom to imprisonment, life to death; but, like the conscientious soldier he willingly risks liberty and life in the endeavor to be of assistance to his fellow men.

WHAT OUR EXCHANGES SAY ABOUT IT.

"The people's Press," a small but very much alive weekly paper, published at 111 Blue Island avenue, Chicago, has this to say in regard to the late sentence against LUCIFER's editor:

"Moses Harman, publisher of LUCIFER, the ablest paper published on the sex question and woman's freedom, has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary for obscenity in publishing an article by Dora Forster. This article was too far advanced and too broad for the narrow minds of Christians (?) Any one who has heard Mr. Harman lecture or who knows him personally can have nothing but respect for that grand old man, over 70 years old, and we hope that all lovers of freedom of speech and press will contribute to raise a fund to appeal his case. Send contributions (be they ever so small) to 500 Fulton street."

Many thanks, Brother Lenau, for manly protest and for kind words of appreciation. Though mainly devoted to industrial or economic freedom, the "People's Press" recognizes the importance of the agitation to which LUCIFER's pages are mainly devoted. For many months it has carried an advertisement of our "Son of the Morning," and has long shown a bravely fraternal spirit toward us in many ways. It is published at the low price of fifty cents per year of fifty-two issues, or less than one cent per copy. It is the determined foe of all slaveries, all superstitions, and well deserves the earnest and liberal support of all lovers of freedom and of justice.

And here is what a much older and much larger reform journal, the "Truth Seeker," New York, has to say:

"Both of the Chicago prosecutions under the Comstock law have resulted in conviction. On June 6 Judge Bethea of the Federal court directed a subservient jury to bring in a verdict of 'guilty as charged in the indictment' against Dr. Alice B. Stockham, author of 'Tokology' and other works of that nature, and against Edward B. Beckwith, Dr. Stockham's business manager. On June 15 a similar verdict was returned against Moses Harman, the publisher of LUCIFER. In both cases an appeal will probably be taken. Dr. Stockham and her friends, it is said, are well able to 'make a fight to the finish,' but the case is different with Mr. Harman, who needs all the financial assistance he can get. Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, will receive contributions for the defense. A strong protest should be made against these prosecutions. Though it may not be fully effective, it will influence the public mind against further proceedings of the same nature. Communicate with Dr. Foote, learn the facts in the matter, and then, if you believe in it, do something to help vindicate the liberty of discussion."

The "Truth Seeker" is published weekly at $3 per annum. If any reader of LUCIFER has never seen a copy of this, the largest, and, as I think, the oldest, of the American Free-thought journals, I would advise such reader to send ten cents for a sample copy. The thanks of all lovers of truth and human progress are due to the editor of the "Truth Seeker" for his fearless championship of freedom of speech and of press.

A PROPHECY.

The great Swedish botanist, LINNAEUS, saw his works burned by an ignorant mob a little over one hundred years ago, because they treated of the sex of plants. Now every student of botany is familiar with the reproductive functions of the vegetable kingdom, and Mr. LUTHER BURBANK of Santa Rosa, California, is astonishing the world with the use he is making of such knowledge. Now, I predict that some day—maybe another century hence, judging from present indications—school children will be so thoroughly educated in regard to the human reproductive functions that the most perfect specimens of the human family ever born into the world will appear on this planet—not by chance, but by wise propagation. With the present discouraging indications, my prediction may look decidedly dubious, but it is sure to be realized some time, and the martyrs of to-day are preparing the way. You and Dr. Alice B. Stockham and others engaged in this educational work must suffer the penalties for your crimes (?) and misdemeanors (?).

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

ANOTHER EDITION CONFISCATED.

Wednesday, June 21, 305—1895—there was deposited in the general postoffice at Chicago, an edition of LUCIFER numbered 1042, for mailing to subscribers. It was a double number, 16 pages instead of the usual eight.

Much time and labor had been expended on this edition, to say nothing of money. We had promised our readers something of a history of the "Postal Inquisition," both as to origin and practical working. We had asked for orders for extra copies of this edition for free distribution, or for sale among the friends of subscribers, hoping in this way to get some help towards defraying extra expense. To this request some of our old-time friends and helpers had responded promptly and liberally.

Several subsequent or supplementary bundles of this edition, in answer to calls, were deposited for mailing within the next seven or eight days following the first deposit, never for one moment suspecting that the first and main deposit had not gone to the subscribers.

After a week of anxious waiting, having received many complaints from subscribers of the non-arrival of LUCIFER, I decided to investigate. Calling at the office of Mr. Paul Hull, Superintendent of Second Class Matter, Chicago, I was informed by him that the edition had not been sent to subscribers, giving as a reason that the paper contained "unmailable matter."

When asked for the articles or paragraphs objected to I was shown the letter of Sarah Stone Rockhill, and a selection signed Nancy McKay Gordon, both printed on the last page of the paper except one.

In reply to further inquiries Mr. Hull said the edition would be held till word could be received from headquarters at Washington, when, if the decision should be that these articles are not obscene the edition would be sent to subscribers; if the decision should be adverse, the papers would be held subject to orders from the postmaster general's office.

Next day I received the following notice:

General Postoffice, Finance Division, Chicago, Ill., office of Second-class Matter. P. H. Chicago, June 30, 1895.
Moses Harmon, Publisher LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, Chicago, Ill.

Sir—The Postal Department at Washington has ruled that the issue of your publication of June 22 contains obscene matter and is unmailable.

Respectfully,
P. E. COYNE.

Accompanied by my lawyer, Seymour Stedman, I immediately called on Mr. Hull and asked for the return of my property, maintaining that the P. O. department, having refused to send LUCIFER No. 1042 through the mails, has no further right, duty or concern in the matter. That the postoffice department is not part of the judicial branch of the government, but simply part of the executive branch and that until condemned by the judiciary my property cannot lawfully be confiscated.

In reply Mr. Hull said, "this is a question with which I have nothing whatever to do. I simply obey orders. My orders are to send the paper to the dead letter office at Washington. I have done this. The papers have already gone.

We then, Stedman and I, went to the Assistant Postmaster, Mr. Hubbard, and received similar answers. He said our only hope for recovering the edition lies in writing to the First Assistant Postmaster General at Washington.

In reply to a question in regard to the right of the P. O. to confiscate my property without any judicial proceedings Mr. Hubbard said, "Such things are done by the police department, as when they destroy 'chips' and other furniture of the Chicago gambling houses"—forgetful, apparently, that the police have a warrant from the city government to destroy the furniture of gamblers of a certain class, but that no warrant has been issued, so far as known to this deponent, to any one to destroy the property of LUCIFER'S office without first bringing the publisher into court and giving him a chance to defend himself against the charge of printing and trying to mail unlawful literature.

I asked Mr. Hull if he would read "the proof sheets" of my next issue of LUCIFER and decide whether the matter is mailable before the edition goes to press.

"No, I will not," said he.

"Do you read copies of all the papers published in Chicago before you allow their several editions to go into the mails?" I asked.

"Certainly not," said he.

"Then why should my paper be discriminated against? You say you read a copy of each edition carefully before allowing it the privileges of the mail," said I. "Why this discrimination?"

"You know the answer to that question as well as I do," said Mr. Hull, with a meaning smile.

As I write these lines there comes to my ears the continuous roar of burning gun-powder, the offerings of a grateful people for the blessings of liberty, of justice to all alike, and of special privileges for none.

How much reason have the publisher and the patrons of LUCIFER for thankfulness that we are living in the United States of America and not in England, France or Russia?

M. HARMAN.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

That is, what of the future of LUCIFER, THE LIGHT BEARER—sometimes called "Son of the Morning," "Herald of the Dawn," and other synonyms of the grand old name Lucifer—one of the oldest, most beautiful, most expressive, most honored and honorable of all the names connected with the most ancient, most noble and ennobling of all the purely physical sciences, the science of astronomy—science of the stars.

Yes, what of LUCIFER'S future? Our Son of the Morning has passed through many critical periods, many trying times, in the twenty-five years, nearly, of its existence, but in none of these critical periods did there seem to be such combinations of adverse forces as at the present moment. Never before have we faced judicial rulings so thoroughly hostile to freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of discussion upon the subject that of all subjects needs the light of free investigation, of fearless, honest, untrammelled investigation, as does the subject of SEX, involving and including as that subject does the right of woman to self-ownership—ownership of her creative powers and functions, and the right of the child to be born well, if born at all.

Out of the sex-enslavement of woman—as can be easily shown, grows all other slaveries, including economic or financial slavery, industrial slavery, political slavery, religious slavery, intellectual or mental slavery, and so on to the end of the chapter of slaveries. As so forcibly argued by Grant Allen, Walt Whitman and other independent thinkers and writers, "Sex contains all!"

Hence all other reforms must wait upon sex-reform. Hence all ologies are subsidiary to Sexology; all sciences secondary or third-rate in importance to Sexual Science.

Looking for causes, is it not because of their knowledge of these basic facts that "the powers that be" are now so thoroughly bent upon silencing all inquiry—through the public press and by private letters even—into the morality or the immorality of our present sexual and marital codes?

Do not these ruling powers instinctively feel and know that freedom of discussion on sex-lines would, in the end, destroy the present division of mankind into the two divisions of rulers and ruled, of robbers and robbed, of masters and slaves? and that sex-freedom, including freedom of womanhood and motherhood, would make an end to the power and privileges of these ruling classes?

As stated elsewhere in this issue the Superintendent of Mails at Chicago has given LUCIFER'S editor plainly to understand that in his opinion no edition of LUCIFER should be allowed to pass through the mails. This was said after declaring that he has no personal feeling against said editor, but that, on the contrary he has uniformly tried to construe the postoffice rulings favorably to that individual.

If these utterances mean anything at all they would seem to mean that any future edition of LUCIFER is liable to be held up in the mails, confiscated and sent to the "Dead Letter" office, there to be destroyed, as was done with number one thousand of that publication, and as it now appears probable, the much larger and much more important number 1042 will share the same fate.

Facing this contingency I now ask LUCIFER'S subscribers, "WHAT SAY YOU ALL?"

Yours for the fight for the right of free discussion,

M. HARMAN.

ELECTED FOR A FOURTH TERM.

The following City Press Dispatch, of June 28, is self explanatory:

"Moses Harman, 74 years old, was sentenced to one year at hard labor in the penitentiary by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis of the United States District court, this (Thursday) morning. The court allowed the man the privilege of bail in $1,500 so that he may take his case to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. He made no demonstration when he learned of the sentence and feels confident that the upper court will reverse the findings of the jury in Judge Landis' court.

"Harman is an advocate of liberalities in married relations and publishes the magazine known as LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. He has served three short terms in a Kansas penitentiary for persisting in publishing this paper. His publications strike at the base and sacredness of marriage on scientific grounds, and lengthy discussions on this subject are carried on in the publication from various writers. A motion for a new trial and an order in arrest of judgment were denied by Judge Landis yesterday (Wednesday)."

The reporter was quite correct in saying, "when he (Harman) learned of the sentence," for I did not hear the sentence delivered by Judge Landis, although sitting within a few feet of his chair. Partially deaf I tried hard to follow what he was saying, but his tones were low and weak, for the most part, and must have been particularly so at the close of his talk, else I would have heard enough to understand that he was sending me to prison for a year.

I had come to the court-room prepared to make a little talk, in view of a possible sentence. Not for one moment did I suppose the judge would fail to ask if I had any thing to say why sentence should not be entered against me, in case he should decide not to grant me a new trial. He had denied me the citizens right to address the jury in my own behalf, which denial was wholly unexpected and wholly without precedent in similar cases, so far as I then remembered, but to deny me my manhood right to say a few words to the judge before receiving such a weighty sentence as a year in prison would be to add outrage to injury—as I then believed and still believe.

Through life I have adopted, as a leading maxim the admonition,

"Judge not, that ye be not judged."

That is to say, I have habitually declined to sit in judgment upon or to condemn the motives of those from whom I may differ. We can take cognizance of the word and the act of our fellow human beings and approve or condemn, but the motive that prompts the act and the word must always, more or less completely, elude our ken.

But while this is true we all very naturally seek for the causes of all phenomena, including, of course, all human acts and words. Very naturally we seek to know the hidden springs of human conduct. We all seek to know, as far as possible, the whys and the wherefores—in accord with, or because of, that other well known principle or maxim, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and "The tree is known by its fruits."

Why, then, should I be denied the right—or privilege, if the reader prefers that term—of addressing a few explanatory words to the jury that was to determine the question of my guilt "or innocence," and why should I be denied the right or privilege of addressing a few words to the judge whose official duty it becomes to affix the penalty, in case the jury decides that I am guilty of violating the man-made statute concerning what is technically known as "obscene" literature?

Imprisonment for one year at hard labor is a punishment so serious that no sane and humane man, it would seem, would or could inflict it upon a fellow human being without very grave reasons for so doing.

The question of motive, of probable motive, is always a factor, if not the chief factor, in determining the guilt or innocence of any act. To ascertain the motive of human actions the most important method, as well as the most natural and rational method of procedure, is to hear what the actor himself has to say in explanation of his act. No one can know what the real motive underlying any act was, or is, so well as the individual who performs the act, and in the absence of overwhelming evidence to the contrary the testimony of such actor should be accepted as conclusive.

So much impressed with the truth of this principle were the sturdy, the truth-loving and liberty-loving old Romans, during the earlier and better years of that great nationality, that it was accepted by them as a fundamental principle of jurisprudence that no one should be condemned until heard in his own defense. Civil laws and customs in England and her colonies—of which colonies the United States are part—are supposed to date back to ancient Roman laws and customs for their authority.

While wishing to give Judge Landis the benefit of the doubt—while remembering that he is comparatively a young man and that he is one of the later appointees to a chair in the Federal court, and therefore liable to make unintentional mistakes, I simply cannot escape the inference, the mental conviction, that he did not want the defense of my motives in publishing the indicted articles to be heard in the Federal court room, because of the possible effect of such defense upon the minds of the hearers, upon the minds of those who have hitherto paid but little attention to such subjects, and especially that he did not want the jurors to hear my motives defended.

Several utterances of Judge Landis seem to confirm this inference. As when he said in summing up, that "While the defendant claims to be conducting his paper in the interest of scientific investigation alone, an examination of the paper itself does not confirm such claim"—or words to that effect, and yet he utterly failed to point out or quote anything in the copies of LUCIFER, held in his hand, to prove the truth of such statement.

Again when my friend Stedman was presenting his exceptions to the rulings of court, and asking for a new trial, Landis used words like these:

"Your client, Mr. Stedman, has apparently formed the eccentric habit of seeking Imprisonment"—thus plainly indicating that he considered me a fanatic on the sex question, and that to gain notoriety as an apostle of sexology I court incarceration in the penitentiaries.

If I correctly understand the meaning of these and of similar utterances it is not strange that Kenesaw M. Landis should think it useless, or worse than useless, to give me a hearing in my own behalf, and that he agrees substantially with Judge Bethea that sex, or sexology, is not a proper subject of discussion, public or private.

Judge Bethea, who with Landis, is a recent appointee to the Federal "bench," in his ruling in the Stockham case, took the ground that sex is not a proper subject of discussion, either in public or private, and we all know that courts have the habit of following precedents, instead of trying each case on its merits alone. By this method courts are tied back to the past; they become ultra conservative, reactionary, non-progressive, non-humane if not inhuman.

In other words, by depending on precedents the tendency is always to make a fetich of the letter of the law. The law is magnified and made honorable at the expense of justice, at the expense of humanity, of manhood, of womanhood, until the opinion or doctrine seems to prevail that human beings are created for the law, for the honor and glory of the law, and for the honor and glory of the officials who expound and enforce the law, rather than the doctrine that laws are made for man, for woman, for the use and benefit of human beings; not for the honor, glory and emolument of law-makers, of judges, of sheriffs, prosecuting attorneys and other officials connected with the administration of human law.

The quoted press dispatch gives correctly my present status before the Federal courts in this city. M. HARMAN.

Once more sincerely thanking all our co-operators in this line of work, since last credit, we ask all who have not yet ordered books or papers to be used in educational work, to the amount of their cash contributions, to do so as soon as convenient. In this way the good results of their contributions will be cumulative.

TO "FREE SOCIETY" SUBSCRIBERS.

We have now been sending you LUCIFER for some three months, or more. While a comparative few have answered our request to let us know whether they want LUCIFER, a large majority of F. S. subscribers still remain silent. Once more we earnestly request an early answer to this question:

Do you want to be considered subscribers to Lucifer, and are you willing to help win the fight for freedom of speech and of press on ALL lines of reform?

If you do NOT want LUCIFER it will cost only one cent to so notify us on a postal card.

Hopefully yours for the right, M. HARMAN.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

Bas relief medallions of the bust of Moses Harman, size 9 by 14 inches (oval), the work of La Verne F. Wheeler, a well-known Chicago artist, can be had at the following prices: Plain white, $1; old ivory, $1.50; plain bronze, $2; Etruscan bronze, $2.50. Thirty-five cents additional for boxing and shipping.

The proceeds of sales, after deducting bare cost, are to be devoted to the defense of LUCIFER's editor.

Send orders to La Verne F. Wheeler, 3323 Michigan avenue, Chicago, Ill.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Otto Wettstein, La Grange, Ill.: LUCIFER No. 1042 has not reached me. What's the matter? Are we living in Russia or in the country founded by Washington, Jefferson and Paine?

O. L. Harvey, W. Lafayette, Ind.: No LUCIFER has arrived yet. One reason I subscribed for your paper was to learn about your trial and its outcome. I am still in ignorance; but I see you are not in the penitentiary.

T. Sakai, editor of "Chokugen," Tokio, Japan, May 23, 1905.—"Dear Comrade: I have received your letter and 'Sex Radicalism.' Am now reading the book with great interest. Thanking your kindness, I am yours fraternally."

F. H. Bergman, Chicago: Find inclosed $3. Credit my subscription one year; send LUCIFER six months to inclosed address, and use balance for your defense fund in your gallant fight for free thought and free motherhood. With great esteem and fraternal greetings.

Mattie Day, Philadelphia, Pa.: LUCIFER No. 1042 has not reached me. Is it a postal hold-up? I want to receive LUCIFER whether the postal officials think it is best for me to have it or not. I can decide that matter for myself. My heart's best wishes to you and yours.

H. C. Hanson, Aurora, Ill.: We have not received LUCIFER No. 1042 [the suppressed number] yet. Find inclosed $1 to apply on my subscription and 25 cents for trial subscription to accompanying address. With emphatic protest against the postal inquisition, I sign myself your friend and comrade.

H. Scott Bennett, State Parliament House, Melbourne, Australia.—"I strenuously object to the suppression of free speech under almost any conceivable circumstance. Will send subscription later. Yours in the cause of mental and economic freedom. . . . Would be glad to have correspondence with readers of your paper."

Elmer Ellsworth Carey, [associate editor and manager of "Suggestion," Chicago.]—"Dear Mr. Harman: Just a line to tell you that your work will some day be appreciated. You have the consolation of knowing that while you are punished for daring to express your thoughts, you have a long line of goodly company extending back even to Socrates."

B. F. Cheney, Chicago, Ill.—"I am very sorry to hear that you are again sentenced to go behind the bars for trying to enlighten people in regard to social relations, and in truths relating to sex. But the sex relations and all matters pertaining to sex are under the ban and woe to him who does not obey orders and keep quiet in regard to such things."

O. N. Bancroft, Bartow, Florida.—"I enclose a mite, $2.50, to assist in your successful (as I hope, forever) defense of free speech, and a free press, as constitutionally provided. . . . I hope you will win out in freedom, and may the right prevail. Your paper is very interesting, and I like its present form. Should my time expire while I am absent this summer and fall, keep it coming and I will pay for it all."

Dr. S. A. West, Rock Port, Mo.—"My Dear Brother: Your communication has been received, also the books which you mailed. I have gone through them with you, and I must say the work which you have done is by far the most important ever undertaken and championed by any man in the open field of this great world of mind. . . . It has required a steeled and invincible spirit, and you have certainly ruled this spirit with a rod of iron! You have scattered the fire of truth; you have arranged the records and opened the 'way' for coming generations, who will, in due time, understand your spirit, and call you 'blessed!' Whether a hundred years or as many minutes, life is sweet in the moment in which a duty has been rendered unto ourselves through service to a principle belonging to all! You are father, son and brother to womanhood, and there is no higher estate or reward than this."

Geo. J. Callender, Trinidad, B. W. I.: I herewith inclose $3.11—$2 for the good of the cause, and $1 for LUCIFER to be sent one year to inclosed address. I have received a circular from the Free Speech League requesting aid for your cause, to which I shall endeavor to contribute later. Yours for liberty and progress.

A. B. Fayve, Chicago: I have received but one of your papers since the middle of May. If I wish to read and will pay for as clean and instructive a publication as LUCIFER, I don't understand the right of government to keep back my mail from me. As I understand it, the government is the people. I am one of the people, and I want to receive LUCIFER.

Lady Florence Dixie, Glen Stuart, Scotland: I shall be most anxious to hear the result of your trial. It will be a cruel injustice, indeed, if you are imprisoned or fined for publishing plain-spoken opinion. Why, we are freer in antediluvian Britain than in Rooseveltic America! With sincere good wishes, I am always most truly your friend and sympathizer.

J. F. Paulson, Chicago: Received sad information of your sentence, the meaning of which is understood only by those who love liberty. Not many do we find who appreciate your work in the cause of true motherhood, mankind, and liberty. You are a century in advance of the common understanding, for you to be a target for persecution is certainly most painful to your friends. I should be glad to render some assistance now, but must wait a little longer.

E. B. Foote, Sr., M. D., Larchmont, N. Y.—"Inasmuch as the Junior has been taking LUCIFER right along, I have had access to it each wek, but as every subscriber counts, I think I ought to add my own name. I therefore enclose $3, for which you will mark me up for the time it will pay for. There are no names that I could give you from this place, for it is a very conservative neighborhood. I trust you may come out of your difficulty right side up."

Bertha Moore, Portland, Ore.—"I enclose $2. One is for re-subscription and the other is to help in the cause of free speech. I enclose an article which you can publish if you wish. If published, I want two or three hundred leaflets struck from the same type, perhaps more.

[The article is a good one and will be printed if we can find room. Thanks for present help as well as for many similar favors in the past.—M. H.]

Olivia Freelove Shepard, Home, Wash., June 2, 1905.—"Moses Harman, Dear Friend of Freedom: I have just read Lois Waisbrooker's new edition of "Woman's Source of Power." It is a clear, calm, strong, highly vitalized statement of the greatest need of the age—woman's ownership and control of her own being. Its logic is simply unanswerable, and I wish I had means to put it in the hands of every woman and those of every man who has an awakened conscience concerning his treatment of her."

A. E. Clark, Hecla, S. D.—"If I were big enough, I would have things different. Of course, I think your work has crowded old Mother Grundy off of a considerable portion of her easy seat, but it will take a few generations that are at least well born to entirely knock her out. . . . As long as we have so many pin-headed blatherskites in the country, they will crowd themselves into the offices, as I have not observed any office seeking the man. I do not go much on that old saw, and we find our offices filled with men who never made a success of their own business, and have no capacity. Men who are capable of successfully managing their private business are not looking to the public for an idle teat. . . . So I do not look for much improvement until we get intelligence enough to grade up the whole mass to a higher degree of perfection, and look upon our officers as our servants. Now we elect and appoint men to rule and govern us, and they would be simple, indeed, if they did not give us what we deserve. We are as Bryan says of the Democratic party. . . . The first thing we should do is to deserve success. When we as a people deserve to govern ourselves, we will do it, but until then we will have to be governed by the incapable class, who hypnotize themselves into the belief that they can govern us very much to our advantage. . . . I send you draft for $2.00 to extend my subscription two years. Occasionally I hand out LUCIFER, but it does not seem to tickle the common palate as well as the popular rifraff. . . . I hope your fare in prison will develop your muscle so you can wield the pick with renewed vigor, that you may get a hole through the shell of ignorance and hypocrisy and let in the light of reason, which will right all wrongs."

A. L. Heuple, Hot Springs, Ark.: We send $1 as a trifle to help you in your fight, and would make it more if we could. I cannot see what there is to find fault with in "Sex Radicalism" though I re-read the tenth chapter, which I understand is the one complained of. It is certainly ideas that they are fighting this time. I cannot see how a charge of obscenity could possibly be maintained before any fair-minded person, but where there is so much prejudice everything is possible. Mr. Heuple says he is glad you gave Mr. McAfee an idea of what you thought of his prosecutions. We hope you will come through all right.

Martin Nortvedt, Laurium, Mich.: I did not receive LUCIFER No. 1042. I suppose you were not able to get out your paper on account of your trouble with "Mother Grundy." Hope you will come out of it with flying colors. You know I don't like to miss a single copy; that's why I write to you. Yours for freedom of thought, press, and speech.

[A considerable number of our subscribers have also concluded from the non-appearance of LUCIFER that none was issued; when, on the contrary, a double number was printed and deposited in the postoffice as explained elsewhere in this issue.]

Arthur Wastall, East London, Cape Colony: Have been wanting LUCIFER to take up with the "Round About" correspondence plan, and the R. A. to embrace the wider field of sex ethics which LUCIFER champions, and now comes a woman who promises to do the very thing with a new organ. Well, we shall see what she turns out. I am convinced that both Miss Bacon's journal and yours will be benefited. There is lots and lots of room along these lines. Glad you save your eyes as much as possible, but you mustn't suppose I expect you to reply to my scrawls. You are too busy a mortal for that. Stick to the helm as long as possible and save yourself all possible in order to do this, and we shall all be thankful. With every good thought.

Lucy E. Parsons, Chicago: I have just this minute learned of your sentence to one year in prison. To say that I am shocked and saddened by the prospect of your threatened incarceration is to use language too mild to express my real feelings. It matters not how we may differ as to which must be first secured—economic freedom or sexual freedom—we know that both are necessary and must come, and those who suffer in the cause of either must not be allowed to suffer without enlisting the sympathy and support of the other. I inclose $1 now and will try to do more later on. Dear old comrade in the cause of woman's emancipation, I had hoped that you would be able to pass your few declining years in freedom, but it seems that it must be otherwise.

M. M. J. M., Chicago.—"A shudder runs over me as I realize the purport of your note stating that you have been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. . . . Possibly it is needless to state that I am not in thorough accord with the utterances of LUCIFER on the marriage question. Probably not one-half of those who subscribe for the paper believe as you do. Still it is the boast of all Americans—and I am proud of my birthplace—that freedom of thought and speech are guaranteed to all. I know there is a free press! The Chicago American is ample proof of that. Or, can it be that I am mistaken; that it is only the fear of what might be done with the glittering hoard of wealth that Hearst controls that keeps the 'law enforcers' at a distance?

"It would appear to one who would see fair play that the punishment is uncalled for. But you are not the only martyr. Joseph Dunlop suffered imprisonment for publishing a line of 'ads.' that had previously been allowed to appear in other papers of Chicago. A similar line has been running in one of the dailies since Dunlop's imprisonment. Why the discrimination? Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in a recent article, practically voices the sentiment expressed in LUCIFER. Yet neither Mrs. Wilcox nor the publisher are prosecuted. One law for all would seem to be fair. I presume the inquisitor concluded I might suffer morally, so he refrained from delivering the last issue of LUCIFER.

"Brother Harman, I trust your days at Joliet may be brightened by your honest belief that you are doing a good work. It seems too bad that you should suffer at your age for a cause that at best can bring you little reward and scant thanks from those whom you seek to benefit."

Tom Swinburn, Charleston, W. Va.—"From my inmost soul I hate tyranny, whether it be in Russia or in the United tSates. I shed my blood for the preservation of this Union. Am crippled for life, and if anything could make me regret the suffering and sacrifice freely laid upon the altar of Union, it would be such damned idiocy and despotism as the postal authorities are displaying to please a set of ninnies. They show the quality of their bravery and magnanimity by jumping with both feet on a poor little sheet like LUCIFER, while they never disturb the powerful dailies nor large magazines. . . . I am paid up and intend to keep paid up as long as LUCIFER interests me as it does now, no matter whether I agree with it or not, and I will get as many more to subscribe for it as I can."

Frank Kremer, Chicago: Inclosed find $2, for which send LUCIFER three months to each of inclosed eight names. The last number of LUCIFER which I received was 1039, and I thought it was suspended until you got through your trouble. I will not express my sympathy to you in regard to your sentence. I suppose you get enough of that, because it is cheap; and what you really need for your fight—that is, money—it is something of which I can send but little.

[One of the best ways to help LUCIFER—if it is not really the best—is to send trial subscriptions; but we hope our friends will let us know if the names are sent with the consent of the trial subscribers. If consent is not given when names are forwarded, we wish to be notified so that we may write and ask if papers are desired. Such assistance in the circulation of LUCIFER is gratefully appreciated.]

S. Gelus, Worcester, Mass.—"Enclosed find $5.10, for which credit me one year on subscription. I hasten to renew, since I appreciate the contents of LUCIFER better than any literature received by me. Send me the following: 'Woman's Source of Power,' 25c; 'Law of Population,' 25c; 'Curse of Maternity,' 25c; 'Prodigal Daughter,' 25c; 'Creative Life,' 25c; 'Strike of a Sex,' 25c; 'Woman in Her Relation to Church and Canon Law,' 10c; photo of M. Harman, 25c. For the rest send me 'Wedding Night,' by Dr. Stockham. Sorry I cannot contribute more to the Free Speech fund. Must do something later, for it is my liberty as well as yours that is assailed."

["Wedding Night" cannot be obtained for love or money. The fine exacted from the author, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, by the United States authorities, in obedience to the demands of the postal inquisition, closes the sale of this very excellent educational document until a wiser and better administration of public affairs comes into power.—M. H.]

POSTAL CENSORSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES.

An address issued from New York by the Free Speech League (Dr. E. B. Foote, treasurer, 120 Lexington avenue), calls attention to the development in this country of a usurpation of power of the most threatening character—censorship of the press. The particular instance referred to is the case of a Chicago publication named LUCIFER, edited by Moses Harman, and charged with publishing something obscene; but neither the particular paper or its editor, nor the particular charge, is important, in view of the arbitrary method of suppression. The vital issue raised by this case is not whether obscene publications shall be suppressed; it is whether the postal department shall be permitted to pass judgment ex-parte, on the question of obscenity, and, without due process of law, to destroy newspaper properties upon the ipse dixit of postal clerks.

This is what appears to have been done in Harman's case: Having deposited a regular edition of his paper in the mails, he supposed it had been distributed to his subscribers; but he learned later that, instead of being distributed, it had been sent to the dead letter office and confiscated upon a charge of containing obscene matter. Whether the matter was obscene we are in no position to judge, for the paper is not before us; but every intelligent citizen is in a position to judge of the importance of the right of a newspaper publisher to a fair trial on any accusation, even of indecency, before being deprived of his property. If postal clerks may at will suppress and confiscate any edition of any periodical which they are ordered or are pleased to regard as obscene, then no periodical which in any respect offends the powers that be is quite safe from censorial malice.

It is easy to convict of crime when the accuser is also prosecutor, judge and jury, and the accused is given neither opportunity to be heard nor notice of the accusation. Especially is this true when the same authorities who thus confiscate property without due process of law, refuse to disclose in advance of publication what their judgment as to the legitimacy of printed matter may be. For illustration: The editor of a perfectly clean periodical, feeling called upon to discuss in a decent manner some questions relating to the philosophy of sex relationships, might in good faith submit his article to the proper postal authorities with a view to avoiding the penalties of censorship. But the authorities would refuse to advise him, although, as their functions are executive and not judicial, there is no reason for such refusal. Yet, after the article had been published, and the edition of the periodical deposted in the mails, the same executive bureau which had refused to disclose its attitude toward the article in advance of publication, would promptly confiscate the edition without allowing the editor any opportunity to be heard. This is precisely what is said to have occurred in Harman's case. It is precisely what the postal authorities assert the right to do in any case. It is absolutely in contravention of American principles of jurisprudence, and it is a most dangerous usurpation of censorial power.—The Public, Chicago, Ill.

PERSECUTION OF LUCIFER.

We hope that many of our friends will see their way to sending to Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, the needed assistance. Mr. Harman has already served three terms of imprisonment. He is now nearly seventy-five years of age; and, though we are not entirely in accord with his object or method, we sincerely hope he will be saved from the fourth term.

The system under which a postoffice underling can practically ruin a man's business by a stroke of his pen, can refuse to allow journals to be delivered to thousands of subscribers who have paid for them, and can usurp the post of Moral Dictator for the whole community, is one that should be changed in the most peremptory manner, and will certainly be changed when the United States becomes a free country.

Mr. Harman needs to show a large subscription list. LUCIFER is published at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, $1 per year.—J. S. Ellis (Editor), in Secular Thought, Toronto, Can.

MOSES HARMAN CONVICTED.

It looks very much as though the postoffice department had determined to put Moses Harman out of business and to entirely suppress the paper. The same treatment is being extended to him as was extended to Ezra H. Heywood and his "Word" some years ago.

In the issue of LUCIFER for June 22 Mr. Harman printed a criticism of the postoffice methods, and in the same issue he printed a letter from a contributor and an extract from a book, both of which the postoffice officials promptly declared to be obscene or unmailable matter. Whether the postoffice officials were influenced by the criticism upon the department, as Mr. Harman insinuates, we can not tell, but think it unlikely, for the reason that in an interview with one of the postoffice officials at Chicago Mr. Harman was informed that if his theories were carried out society would be in a state of chaos. The official added that he had read every copy of the paper for two years, and if he could have his way not a copy would be mailed. The officials are evidently using their executive power to suppress what they do not like.

The articles condemned as unmailable are before us. Had they come to the Truth Seeker we should have rejected them for a variety of reasons, but the idea that they are obscene would not have occurred to us. There are no offensive words used, and the main thought of both makes for real morality. As a matter of information purely we would like to print them, being sure that our readers would see the point in each, but as the department has declared them unmailable that is impossible, as we would then be in a hole with LUCIFER. Mr. Harman is also under conviction for circulating a previous issue of his paper, and has appealed.

We do not know how any one can help Mr. Harman except by sending him money to fight the case. The postoffice officials have the power to decide what is unmailable matter, subject to reversal of their decision by the court. Knowing the conservative spirit of the United States courts, we do not believe they will reverse this decision, and the issue of LUCIFER for June 22 probably will never be read by its subscribers.

We have now, it seems, a complete postal censorship of ideas. The language of all the articles for which Mr. Harman is under the harrow is pure enough to suit everybody except some half-educated people like the members of the Purity League, mothered by Granny Grannis. The objection to the articles, therefore, must lie against the ideas conveyed by them. The world is full of hypocrites, and the very persons who will readily violate the commonly accepted code of sexual morality will protest the loudest against those who seek to upset that code. Too much protestation, however, lays the protestant under suspicion. D. M. Bennett was imprisoned for circulating an idea; so was Ezra H. Heywood, so was and probably will be Moses Harman unless he agrees to quit. He is so old that almost any judge would grant him clemency would he but promise to be good.

The remedy for this state of affairs must lie with congress. The postal laws should be amended so that they will not suppress, at the whim of an official, matter obviously written and printed with good and pure intent. Obscenity, like petty larceny, should be dealt with by local authority, and not by the United States. There should be no censorship of printed matter by any official, for when the editor of the Truth Seeker is made post-master-general the temptation to declare the Bible unmailable may be too great for him to resist.

Mr. Harman desires his friends to write to him and tell him what in their opinion he should do—whether to suppress sex discussions, let LUCIFER die, or fight it out to the bitter end. Address him at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.—Truth Seeker, New York.

FROM A GERMAN CONTEMPORARY.

Teachers like Moses Harman should be honored and rewarded, not punished. He defends free motherhood and the right of the unborn child. Whoever knows how much misery is caused by jealousy and ignorance in sexual matters, will know how needed teachers like Harman are. There should be an appeal against the verdict. Such appeals cost much money. Subscribe for LUCIFER by paying the dollar at once and write to Lillian Harman, 500 Fulton street.—Neues Leben, Chicago, Ill.

"LORD, HOW LONG?"

"Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not.

"Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed.

"Then said I, Lord how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitants, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate."—Isaiah, vi:9, 10, 11.

If Isaiah was living to-day he would not be compelled to see these things in a vision. Eyes and ears we have but see and hear not, and our hearts are so fat that we feel not.

I am reminded of this when I see by the papers that Dr. A. B. Stockham has recently been fined $250; and Moses Harman of Chicago, a man 74 years old, and the editor of LUCIFER, is on $1,000 bail pending the action of a federal grand jury. For what crime? Circulating obscene literature.

If the jury were composed of physicians, the charges would fall flat, but if it is composed of men with mental calibres similar to informers and spies, he may be fined and possibly imprisoned.

Who are Dr. Stockham and Moses Harman? Retormers and educators. They are apostles of Sex Enlightenment, a subject that the world is sadly in ignorance of; and the lack of the knowledge these two veteran reformers are agitating and teaching, is the cause of much mental and physical degeneration.

These two persecuted and prosecuted people are honest, conscientious, humane and educated. I do not know Dr. Stockham as well as I do Mr. Harman, but I do know that she has grown old in an honest endeavor to enlighten the world. Mr. Harman has specialized on the subject of sex reform until he is one of the greatest authorities.

Sex science is one of the greatest and most important subjects before the people—if it can be said to be before the people—the fact is, the people are grossly ignorant of it except in a most careless and haphazard way. Because of false teaching the general ignorance is walled in by a public sentiment that brooks no enlightenment on the plea of immodesty. The subject, and those who would agitate, educate and reform, are tabooed and shunned as unclean.

If those who think they are good and modest because of their ignorance could see the crime against public health and happiness, and the actual brain dwarfing that is directly due to the suppression of knowledge on this subject, they too would become agitators for a more liberal education in sex science.

This subject must be met squarely and dealt with fairly if the world is ever to evolve a higher ethics and religion.

These two veterans of reform have grown old in the work. A charge of obscenity lodged against them is so absurd that it is hard to meet it with sufficient composure to reason deliberately. Denunciation of their persecutors appeals to one as being the best remedy and in keeping with the treatment being meted out to these unselfish reformers, but I do not forget that abuse is never argument, and the latter is what is needed most, for the mass of the people needs to know something about who these prosecuted people are.

I believe that it is a fundamental principle of law that an act to be criminal must have an evil motive, and if these people are not criminals they should not be prosecuted.

That these people are not depraved is proven by their lives. They are healthy and robust notwithstanding their advanced age. Mr. Harman is nearly seventy-five and has all the mental vigor of a young man. This is positively a sweeping refutation of the charge that he is vicious or depraved. He can not be charged with mercenary motives for if he is fined, even a small sum, his friends will have to pay it if it is ever paid. His poverty is not the result of extravagant habits; it is due to the fact that he has made no money; reformers do not make money; they do well, as a rule, to keep from starving to death. He is a man of force, good health, education, and a thinker; just the kind of a man who, had he devoted his life to making money, would have been a successful business man or a successful professional man.

If he is insane he should not be abused; he should be treated in keeping, unless we would revert to the jurisprudence that burned witches or tortured those possessed of devils.

The fact that these people have grown old in a wholesome manner is proof that their opinions are not the result of unbridled passion; it would indicate that when the hot blood of youthful passion was waging a rebellious warfare against reason, the latter came out of the fray more than conqueror. Either passion or reason must be the master, and when passion rules, old age, if reached at all, is diseased, decrepit and imbecilitated; when reason reigns, health and vigorous mental power are retained to the end.

Having robbed the charge of crime against these people of any motive, except that of love for humanity to the sacrifice of selfish comforts, and quite conclusively proven by the physiological law that they can not be charged with depravity and a vicious intent, and that a charge of insanity is not probable (if they are insane they are not amenable to the law), it appears to me that sensible, reasoning justice must say that the only crime connected with this disgraceful prosecution is on the side of the prosecution—that law is the criminal, not its victims.

Sex is a dangerous subject to write or talk about. It is loaded with the dynamite of ignorance, and when handled, even by the most skilled hands, is liable to explode, and when it does it shatters the stained glass of church and cathedral; the foundations of court houses are shaken and even the dome of the national capitol quivers with agitation.

This subject has been suppressed, and it will continue to be until, through the force of evolution, it receives the recognition it deserves. Men may be persecuted because the hand of nature moves them to the work of agitation, and the instrument of nature may be subdued, but a time will come when generation and all that pertains to the subject will be common school education.

To-day generation is knocking for admittance at the door of our nation's understanding, and if refused, its place will continue to be filled by degeneration; a choice must be made. The permanency of civilization depends on the choice. Until this subject is understood a people can not know their destiny; origin prefigures destiny. A silly mock-modesty is always an indication of ignorance, and so long as virtue and purity depend upon ignorance, disease and crime will flourish under the cloak of hypocrisy.

Fathers and mothers, teachers and law-makers, must understand that the sex nature is the strongest force in the world, and, like all powerful forces, it requires the wisest treatment to control it and lead it into the channels of great usefulness. Ignoring the subject, or handling it behind closed doors, or punishing its perversion as crimes instead of disease, is not in keeping with an enlightened age.

No one knows the prevalence of sex perversion so well as physicians; it is seen on every hand; few, if any, families escape being cursed by it, which is all due to ignorance of the subject. This being true, is it wise, is it just, is it in keeping with intelligence, to prosecute those who give their lives to the work of sex reform?—A Stuffed Club, Denver, Colo.

HOW THE COURTS GIVE "A SQUARE DEAL"

When the editor of LUCIFER was on trial in Judge Landis' court the prosecuting attorney endeavored to make a strong point of the defendant's alleged contempt for the law under which he was arraigned. The attorney for the defense in reply stated that there were few if any men who did not have contempt for some particular law or laws, and that if only those who respected and obeyed all the laws on the statute books were allowed to remain out of jail there would not be enough prisons to contain these criminals. The attitude of the court on this, as on all occasions from the enforcement of the witchcraft and the fugitive slave laws down to the present, was that all laws, right or wrong, constitutional or unconstitutional, must be obeyed implicitly. I was forcibly reminded of lines occuring in verses by Eugene F. Ware, which I set in type years ago. They were:

"When upon thy frame the law
Places its majestic paw,
Though in innocence or guilt,
Thou art then required to wilt."

It occurred to me that LUCIFER's readers might benefit by the great moral lesson of obedience to law contained in the verses, so here they are. It should be borne in mind that the author, far from being sent to jail for making light of a court decision, was appointed U. S. Commissioner of Pensions by that great champion of all the laws, Theodore Roosevelt.—L. H.

THE INSCRUTABLE LAW.

[The following poem by Eugene F. Ware, Esq., of Fort Scott, Kansas, is descriptive of the case of State vs. Lewis, 19 Kan., 260, to the official report of which it is appended as a reporter's footnote.—Chicago Law Times.]

LAW—PAW—GUILT—WILT.
When upon thy frame the law
Places its majestic paw,
Though in innocence or guilt,
Thou art then required to wilt.

STATEMENT OF CASE BY REPORTER.
The defendant while at large,
Was arrested on a charge
Of burglarious intent,
And direct to jail he went.
But he somehow felt misused,
And through prison walls he oozed,
And effected his escape.

Mark you now: Again the law
On defendant placed its paw,
Like a hand of iron mail,
And re-stocked him into jail—
Which said jail, while so corraled,
He by sockage-tenure held.

Then the court met, and they tried
Lewis up and down each side,
On the good old-fashioned plan;
But the jury cleared the man.

Now, you think that this strange case
Ends at just about this place,
Nay, not so. Again the law
On defendant placed its paw—
This time takes him 'round the cape
For effecting an escape;
He, unable to give bail,
Goes reluctantly to jail.

Lewis, tried for this last act,
Makes a special plea of fact.
"Wrongly did they me arrest,
"As my trial did attest.
"And while rightfully at large,
"Taken on a wrongful charge,
"I took back from them what they
"From me wrongly took away."

When this plea was heard,
Thereupon the State demurred.

The defendant then was pained
When the court was heard to say
In a cold impassive way,
"The demurrer is sustained."

Back to jail did Lewis go,
But as liberty was dear,
He appeals, and now is here
To reverse the judge below.

The opinion will contain
All the statements that remain.

ARGUMENT AND BRIEF OF APPELLANT.
As a matter, sir, of fact,
Who was injured by our act,
Any property or man?
Point it out, sir, if you can.

Can you seize us when at large
On a baseless trumped-up charge,
And if we escape, then say
It is a crime to get away—
When we rightfully regained
What was wrongfully obtained?

Please-the-court sir, what is crime?
What is right and what is wrong?
Is our freedom but a song—
Or the subject of a rhyme?

ARGUMENT AND BRIEF OF ATTORNEY FOR THE STATE.
When the State, that is to say
We, take liberty away—
When the padlock and the hasp
Leaves one helpless in our grasp,
It's unlawful then that he
Even dreams of liberty.

Wicked dreams, that may in time
Grow and ripen into crime.

Crime of dark and damning shape
Then, if he perchance escape,
Evermore remorse will roll
O'er his shattered, sin-sick soul.

REPLY BY APPELLANT.
Please-the-court sir, if it's sin,
Where does turpitude begin?

OPINION OF THE COURT, PER CURIAM.
We don't make law. We are bound
To interpret it as found.
The defendant broke away;
When arrested, he should stay.

This appeal can't be maintained,
For the record does not show
Error in the court below.
And we nothing can infer;
Let the judgment be sustained.
All the justices concur.

LUCIFER'S IS FREEDOM'S CAUSE.

To Comrades of LUCIFER and Friends of Freethought Everywhere: Oh, that I had a myriad voices to reach you all! What thousands of you there are—enough to make an invincible phalanx were you only effectually marshaled and guided! But organization is needed. The work of scattered units, while valuable for outpost work, must of necessity be fitful and sporadic. Now, in every organization, while the units composing it may be free as air and remain there only so long as they individually choose to keep their place, there must be leaders, men who point the way for the great rank and file to tread—or, if you like the simile better, men who act as wedges to force the way—men who are not free to leave the arduous duty they have chosen, for, being flag-bearers, they can never lower their colors! It is related of a young officer who, bearing the colors of his regiment, had advanced dangerously far in front of his comrades, that, receiving the signal to fall back, he refused, shouting, "Bring the men up to the colors!" Now just this is needed in our great movement for the right to free expression of thought. This movement is world-wide, is of universal import and appeals to friends of liberty everywhere. How, then, can the spectacle be borne of one old man, LUCIFER's editor, bravely fighting the battles of the rest, fighting for a world-wide cause, yet almost alone, supported by only a comparatively few of similarly devoted souls? He stands with his little paper, LUCIFER, a point of light, for a free and unashamed motherhood, for the right of the child to be born well, for the right of every man and every woman to the love that is theirs truly and naturally. He stands for the right to sane and rational and open discussion of all sex questions, and he stands for the right of individual opinion and free expression of the same. For this sacred cause of liberty he has given mind, heart and soul; has patiently and uncomplainingly borne poverty, imprisonment, misrepresentation and persecution—all that makes life worth living to most of us has this man placed upon the altar for Freedom's sake! And he thanks us for every little help, as if it were not as much our cause as his! The most pathetic part of it all is his humility—giving all, he yet reckons it nothing! Does this not touch us, whoever we are, whatever we have so far done? Come, let us sound the reveille, let us better ourselves! If we but put forth one-half of our strength, earnestly and steadfastly, the field is won. But we must act unitedly. We must learn to mass our strength at the point of attack. At present it is LUCIFER and its standard-bearer we must defend to the death.

A THOUGHT EXCHANGE.

Editor of The Truth Seeker: I am pleased to read the many approving letters of your liberal editorial policy, making the Truth Seeker a genuine thought exchange view, where one may enjoy the stimulus of a new, different, or even queer idea. This mental prodding does us all good. Your recent editorial, "No Cause for Alarm," was one of your finest, and there have been others equally good on a small scale, without heading.

Your generous sympathy with Mrs. Stockham and Moses Harman is in accord with the Truth Seeker's past history—and what we might expect, except that we find so few editors with nerve enough to speak out. The suppression of two editions of LUCIFER for really no good and sufficient reason, merely to show the arbitrary tyrannical power of minor-grade postoffice officials, is the worst blow yet to freedom of the press. If this precedent be sustained, and the method becomes established as legal postal censorship, it is the largest nail yet in the coffin that various governmental tyrants are preparing for the final interment of freedom of the press.

The Free Speech League is making all the effort possible to draw the fatal fang and nullify its effects, but we have as yet not found one friend where ten are needed, merely because, no doubt, those who might be intensely interested and active have not been awakened to the desperate situation.—E. B. Foote in Truth Seeker.

Children should be taught the truth concerning themselves just as soon as they are capable of understanding it or show a disposition to inquire, as ignorance of themselves is the cause of more suffering, crimes and insanity than all other causes combined.—Medical Brief.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

PRESENT STATUS OF LUCIFER.

In the revised edition of LUCIFER, No. 1043, mailed about July 14, but dated July 6, it was stated that the first edition of that date had been held at the Chicago office awaiting the decision of the Washington authorities as to its mailability. After waiting a week for said decision we decided to eliminate the matter considered unmailable by Mr. Hull, Superintendent of Second-Class matter, Chicago—namely, certain extracts from Dr. Stockham's book Tokology, and to insert instead a letter and appeal by the Free Speech League of America.

After reading a copy of the revised edition Mr. Hull decided in favor of its mailability.

"Then," said I, "you do not bar out criticisms upon the acts of the Postal department?"

Mr. Hull: "No; you can roast us as much as you like."

"Well," I replied, "the department officials can not object to 'roastings' from us when they themselves take the initiative in the roasting business, as they have done in their treatment of our paper. So then, I would just say, if it must be scar, let it be a fair fight, an open, manly, honorable battle, give and take."

"Oh well," said Mr. Hull, with a beaming smile, "I think you need not put it that way. Only be careful to keep out of your paper articles containing references to sex association and there will be no trouble."

"Will try to remember your admonition," said I, "but now, just one question, please, since you object to controversy in your office:

"Is it true, Mr. Hull, that the act of sex association is an 'obscene' act?—the act without which neither you nor I would be here, is this act essentially and necessarily obscene?"

Mr. Hull: "No; but all the same, plain references to this subject are unmailable, under present rulings of the postoffice department, notwithstanding the seeming contradiction."

These are not the exact words of the superintendent of second-class mails at the Chicago postoffice, but they certainly give the substance of his answers to my questions.

On the same day that the revised edition of No. 1043 was declared mailable by Mr. Hull I was informed that his decision in regard to the mailability of the first edition had been sustained by the Washington authorities. I then repeated the demand that my property be restored to me, and was told that his orders were to send the edition deposited for mailing to the dead letter office, as in the case of the double number, 1042.

"Can not you wait a few days," said I. "We have sent a man from New York to Washington to see what can be done in the matter of having my property restored to me."

"No," replied Mr. Hull. "If I could hold the paper twenty-four hours I could hold it twenty-four days. I have no such discretion," or words to that effect.

DECISION OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The following letter forwarded to us from the office of the treasurer of the Free Speech League, tells of the failure of Dr. Pfeiffer, who went from New York to interview the authorities in Washington in behalf of LUCIFER:

Office of the Assistant Attorney General for the Postoffice Department, Washington, July 18, 1905.

"Hon. F. H. Hitchcock, First Assistant Postmaster General.
—Sir:

"There has been submitted to me informally by Mr. Wyman, Acting Chief of the Correspondence Division, a letter from Immanuel Pfeiffer, dated July 17, 1905, and clipping from "LUCIFER" 1043, Chicago, Illinois, date of July 6, 1905, with the request that I advise you as to whether said clipping is obscene within the meaning of section 497, Postal Laws and Regulations, and 3893 of the Revised Statutes, and should therefore be denied admission to the mails. In answer thereto, I have to say that in my opinion there is no possible doubt that said clipping is obscene, and that papers containing the same should be denied admission to the mails.

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

(signed) R. P. GOODWIN,
"Assistant Attorney General for Postoffice Department."

Dr. Pfeiffer informs us that the double number 1042 was destroyed at the dead letter office, July 8, and from all we can learn the probabilities are that the one thousand or more copies of No. 1043, deposited for mailing at the Chicago postoffice, have shared the same fate.

For comments upon these acts and rulings of the American Bureaucracy I would refer the reader to the correspondence columns of this week's issue and to the remarks of LUCIFER'S contemporaries.

LUCIFER'S QUARTER-CENTENNIAL.

Next month, August, will mark the first quarter-centennial of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. Twenty-five years—as measured by the revolution of the planet Earth round its parent, the Sun, is but a moment, an infinitesimal fragment of time in the life of our planet; still less when measured by the life of the solar system of which the Earth is a relatively insignificant part, and infinitely less when measured by the life of the nebular system called the "Milky Way," of which system our Sun and its attendant planets constitute an almost imperceptible speck—and yet when measured by the life of the average man or of the average journal, twenty-five years seems a long, long time.

When we remember that the average length of human life is about thirty-three years and that it takes more than half of these years for each human being to reach maturity sufficient to even begin to understand the real value, the real significance or purpose of living, we begin to see and realize something of the meaning of the words, "a quarter of a century knocked out of my life."

When two persons of opposite sex, a woman and a man, have lived together in the conjugal relation twenty-five years it is customary to signalize or commemorate that fact by what is known as a "Silver Wedding," that is, the conjugal partners celebrate the success of their "experiment in marriage" by a renewal of their marital vows, their youthful troth, presumably in the hope that they may live to see another similar anniversary which they will then celebrate as their "Golden Wedding."

Four years ago we celebrated LUCIFER'S "coming of age"—twenty-one years old, by a double number of sixteen pages, mainly filled with a biographic sketch showing the chief features of interest in the life of the paper. For some months past I have been wondering whether it might not be well to celebrate the close of the first quarter-centennial of LUCIFER'S life in the same way—or in some other way.

Though a little late it is perhaps not too late to consider the matter. What say our readers and helpers?

All who may have a thought for or against, are hereby requested to send us a condensed statement of that thought, and if favorable, say in what way they would like to see celebrated the Quarter-Centennial Anniversary of the birth of LUCIFER, "Son of the Morning," "Herald of the Dawning"—it is hoped, of a brighter and happier day for mankind.

THE RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL.

INTRODUCTORY.

The chapters that follow are designed to be suggestive of thought, provocative of thought, rather than clearly demonstrative of any doctrine or theory. To treat sexologic problems with the candor, the straight-forwardness, the clearness, the singleness of purpose to arrive at truth, that is expected or demanded in all other investigations, is full of danger to him or to her who would avoid confinement in prison or confiscation of his or her money or goods.

This fact was painfully illustrated at the recent trial and conviction—June, 1905—of Dr. Alice B. Stockham, the aged, the honored, the universally respected and loved teacher, writer and publisher of books on Sexology. For more than thirty years Dr. Stockham has been lecturing and writing on this vitally important subject. Her books have had world-wide circulation. One of them—"Tokology, a Book for Every Woman," has reached a circulation of more than half a million copies, and has been translated into more than one European language, and has been highly commended by leading writers and thinkers the world over, among whom may be mentioned Count Leo Tolstoy.

Among her smaller works is a type-written essay entitled "The Wedding Night," not intended for general circulation but sent out as medical advice under sealed cover, to prospective brides and bridegrooms. It is well known to all physicians that the lack of knowledge in regard to physiology and hygiene of sex has wrecked the health and happiness of many thousands of women at the very threshold of married life. As a physician of large experience and observation Dr. Stockham decided that it was and is her duty to warn her younger sisters against the dangers that beset the ignorant and inexperienced in matters that popular prejudice will not allow to be discussed through ordinary channels. The result was the booklet or leaflet called the "Wedding Night," sent only on application and when the author had reason to believe the purpose of the applicant to be a good, honest and honorable one.

This booklet or leaflet was not entrusted to the mail carriers but sent through the Express companies, in order to avoid the danger of prosecution under the postal "obscenity" laws enacted in defiance of the constitutional provision that prohibits the national congress from making any laws abridging the freedom of speech or of press. Notwithstanding this precaution a "postal inspector" named R. M. McAfee, known far and wide for his many exploits in this line, secured a copy of the "Wedding Night," and entered complaint against Dr. Stockham in the Federal court in Chicago, which complaint was followed by her arrest, trial and conviction for alleged violation of the aforesaid unconstitutional and, we may add, wholly irrational, arbitrary, invasive and despotic laws.

The penalty exacted, or inflicted, upon Dr. Stockham by the judge was a fine of two hundred and fifty dollars, with costs of prosecution.

At the same time and place, E. B. Beckwith, her business manager, was fined five hundred dollars and costs, for his connection with the circulation of this type-written booklet. These fines and costs, amounting to more than one thousand dollars in all, were promptly paid. How much was paid for legal counsel I do not know, but if these defendants paid the customary price for first class counsel the cost for this item alone was not less than five hundred dollars.

Another and more recent illustration of the fact that it is dangerous in this supposed land of freedom and of equal rights, to discuss questions relating to Sexology—including, of course, the right of children to be born well, and how to practicalize that right—is the arraignment and trial of the writer of these lines in another Federal court room in this city, ending in his conviction and sentence to one year at hard labor in the Illinois penitentiary at Joliet.

And still other illustrations of the fact that discussion of sex is dangerous—a fact that shows more plainly than any mere words can show, the falsity of the boastful claim of Fourth of July orators that this is the freest and best government on earth—are seen in the arrest, confiscation and destruction of three editions of the journal called LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, published at 500 Fulton street, Chicago. This arrest, confiscation and destruction was done without legal process, without any authority whatever except the arbitrary will of the postoffice officials, in Chicago and in Washington, D. C.—done without giving the publisher the shadow of an opportunity to defend his personal or property rights, or the rights of his patrons who had paid their money for the paper; destroyed not only without compensation but even the postage he had paid on part of these papers was not returned to him when such return was demanded.

Other illustrations of the worse than Russian methods adopted by the American Bureaucracy to suppress investigation along sexologic lines might be given did space permit. Enough is here given to show that there is now in the United States of America a veritable "Revival of Puritanism," a revival of the nature-hating cults, the reason-hating cults, of the Protestantism of two hundred years ago, and of the Roman Catholicism of the "dark ages" of human history. A revival of the era when books were burned by the "Holy Office," and their authors and readers imprisoned, fined, tortured and put to lingering deaths because of nonconformity with established creeds and customs; because of blasphemy against popular standards of godliness, of purity, of virtue.

As it was then, is there not now evidence of conspiracy on the part of church and state authorities against the spread of knowledge? Is there not now a new "movement in favor of ignorance?" Now, as then, is there not a denial of the right of private judgment?

The battle for the right of private judgment in religion, in theology, was long, bitter and very costly, and is not yet completely won, after the lapse of many centuries. Must the battle for the right of private judgment in matters moralistic, in matters sexologic, be as bitter, as costly and as long continued as was the older conflict to secure religious freedom? Time alone will tell.

The denial of the right of private judgment in theologic matters was doubtless instigated chiefly by the lust of power; by the desire on the part of the ruling classes to perpetuate their rule over the masses by keeping them in ignorance. Is it not equally probable that the denial of the right of private judgment in matters moralistic, especially in matters sexologic, is prompted by the same lust of power on the part of the ruling classes, and by the fear that knowledge of sex would make the masses discontented with the slavery of their lot, and cause them to demand self-rule, self-law, self-ownership, self-control, in all things, and an equal share of the earth and of what it holds?

While taking a vacation on the Pacific coast during the closing months of 1903 and the opening months of 1904, a number of public talks were delivered on the subject of the "Right to Be Born Well," and how to practicalize that right. The opening chapters of this booklet give something of an outline of these talks.

It is almost if not quite certain that some names are omitted that should receive credit in this list of LUCIFER's helpers, and perhaps some names are inserted with insufficient credit. Shall be glad to correct all errors if our friends will kindly let us know what they are.

LITERARY NOTE.

The Truth Seeker Company, 62 Vesey street, New York, has just issued a fine translation by Frederic Mitchell of Edgar Monteil's "Freethinker's Catechism." This is the Catechism which created such a sensation in France some years ago, the clergy being particularly infuriated at its bold opening declaration that "God is an expression." The book was introduced into some lay schools of France, which caused intense excitement among Catholics. Monteil, the author, was imprisoned in his younger days for his book, "The History of an Ignorantin Brother," but to-day he occupies an honored position under the French government, being prefect of the Haute-Vienne at Limoges. The price of the "Freethinker's Catechism" is 35 cents.

The Truth Seeker Company has also just published new and large editions of the famous books, "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," and "New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." Illustrations for both are by Watson Heston, who recently died at Carthage, Mo. The two books are issued in identical form and at the same price for each,—$1.50 in board covers and $1.50 in cloth covers. They are also combined in one volume under the title, "The Bible Comically Illustrated," the price of which is $2.00 in board covers, and $2.50 in cloth covers. These books may be ordered through LUCIFER office.

THE RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the introductory chapter to the booklet entitled, "Right to Be Born Well." Most of the chapters of this booklet have been standing in office for many months, the delay of publication in book form being caused mainly by lack of available funds, also the loss of time attending court proceedings, together with diversion of mental energy in meeting the persistent attacks upon the life of the paper for the regular appearance of which I am chiefly responsible.

While it is not prudent to make positive promises the prospect is that the booklet "Right to Be Born Well" will be in the hands of the binder within one week from this writing, and will be sent to subscribers thereto on or about August 1. It will contain about sixty pages and will be sent postpaid for twenty-five cents in paper covers, or fifty cents in cloth.

BOOKS ORDERED.—Friends who have ordered and not received books will please write again. Some of these orders have been mislaid, overlooked or neglected because of absence and press of other work. Some have not been filled because the supply of certain books was temporarily exhausted. Now the prospect is that orders for books and pamphlets will be more promptly attended to in future, whether the editor and publisher goes to prison or not.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. R. Price, M. D., Chicago, Ill.—Have missed a few numbers of LUCIFER, and as I have copies bound to permanently keep in library I deem it robbery of property belonging to me; and what hurts me most is to be a party to the robbing; that is, I considered myself a part of the government, which seems to be a mistake. Thousands, yea, millions of us, thought we were IT, but it has "n" before it. I am, and have been, for many years, interested in the social purity movement; have lectured to boys and girls, men and women, and am fully convinced that ignorance is not innocence, that license is not liberty. The purest boys and girls, the most virtuous men and women, are those who have absolute freedom. The free boy, the unbridled girl, the unrestricted man and the liberated woman, are to be trusted anywhere, while the slave is ever watching for an opportunity to escape. I am proud to know such a man as Moses Harman, and to aid in circulating such a paper as LUCIFER. I may not coincide with all the portrayals in the various issues, because I am free to think, and I so teach boys and girls to prove all things and hold fast that which is true. I am aware, however, that you have the Truth along the line of Freedom of Motherhood, and every physician in the land who does any thinking at all along the creative line must see the great necessity of educational effort.

There must be soldiers to fight the battles. Some one has said that governments should compel all the old men, women and cripples to go to war to defend the flag, so that the loss to the country should not be so great, leaving the healthy young men and women home to bear more soldiers. The heads of governments have misunderstood this, and now undertake to imprison or destroy the old men and women who are striving to educate the people so that soldiers would be unnecessary. Thank the brave teachers along the sex line for the few thousand women who are now intellectually and socially free. I inclose $2 for subscription.

Eugene V. Debs, Terre Haute, Ind.—Mr. Moses Harman, My Dear Old Comrade: Having just returned from the West, I find your note awaiting me, the contents of which I have read with mingled regret and indignation. The outrages upon you never cease. The heartless hypocrisy that connects your persecution with public morals is disgusting beyond expression. It does you little good to say, as thousands do, that they are with you, and yet it is surely some solace to you to realize that the heart of the humane and intelligent community is with you, and that the sacrifices you are called on to make are not in vain, but are certain to bear the best of fruit for generations to come. The only obloquy that attaches to your sentence is that which makes infamous the court that sentenced you. I would gladly, were it possible, share the prison cell with you, or relieve you of half the term of your sentence.

The double number you refer to never came. I am sorry to have missed you in Chicago.

I need not try to sustain you. All I can say is, that you have had additional honors come to you, and your whole life bears testimony that you are marked for the special favors of the fates, and nothing is more certain than that you will be lovingly remembered after the last of your persecutors rots in a forgotten grave.

Moses Hull, Whitewater, Wis.—Dear Brother Moses Harman: I do not know when I was more surprised, than when I read, in the Chicago American, night before last, that Moses Harman had been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. What in the world have you been doing to bring upon yourself the indignation of the self-righteous. You are old enough to know better. Well, the fact is some of us know Moses Harman to be a truly honest and conscientious man; we would trust you with our wives, daughters, money; yes, with our own lives. The treatment you have received at the hands of this government makes me feel to use the spirit of Wendell Phillips when he said, "God damn the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." Of course, I know nothing as to the crime of which you are accused, but knowing you, and knowing the persecutions you have suffered at the hands of what should have been your country, you have my sympathy. Yes, I may say you have my congratulations. For it is our laws and our courts, and not Moses Harman, that are being tried.

W. P. Metcalf, Albuquerque, N. M.—I inclose $2 to help in defending the right of free speech and a free press. The proceedings of the postoffice authorities would shame the Russians. But the capacities of the bureaucratic heads of government departments have been evident ever since Harlan discharged Walt Whitman for printing "Leaves of Grass." Speed the day when the great people will have spirit enough to resent such perversions of authority and administer their affairs in the interests of the whole. My best wishes for your speedy relief from this incubus.

Thaddeus B. Wakeman, "Toussaint," North Nianus, P. O. Cocob, Conn.—By a letter I am informed of your conviction and of the state of your case with the postal authorities. My answer to it is the inclosed $1 to cover my subscription to LUCIFER, and I hope that there are many thousands of liberty-loving people in favor of free discussion, and consequently of free speech and a free press, who will give the same answer. For it is as clear as the sun in the sky that the purpose of the prosecution upon those articles is the destruction of your paper. The equal rights and freedom of all are involved when such pretexts are used against any paper, and the most effective remedy is to make such a paper better, and, above all, invincible, by increasing its subscriptions. Thus the living Truth Seeker became, and still remains, the best answer to the attempts to destroy it by pretext—prosecutions against D. M. Bennett, its founder. The taking of this course does not commit anyone to anything but the right of free discussion, as above stated. It does not imply an approval of your paper, nor of its main purposes, and much less of the articles in question. It simply means that equal rights and full, free and fair discussion must be sustained, and that this can only be done by maintaining the common right, and, therefore, your right, to differ from the rest of your fellow-citizens upon every subject important enough to be discussed at all.

In this matter you now represent a right necessary to the liberty and welfare of all—the essential condition of the progress of all—and far beyond any individual or individual interests.

Alice Archer Little, Massachusetts—LUCIFER No. 1042 did not reach me. I wish to receive it to preserve in file. I inclose $2 for subscription and defense fund. I do not want you to suffer imprisonment again. Already the record "cries to heaven." In this thought I find some comfort: If one (myself) stands on the outskirts, watching, waiting, heart whole for a radical change of marriage laws, deeply believing the questions voiced by LUCIFER fundamental, and that the seed-sowing can come none too soon, nor be too broadcast, if one, is it not probable a vast number stand also, a half-step behind, perhaps, but who at some hour will speak? I suppose we may not be conscious of the change when it comes, but to those who shall look back to this time it will all be clear. And may they clearly recognize the saviors of the race of man, and never fail to glorify their names!

Elizabeth Breese, Talent, Oregon—I do hope you will not go to prison again. I inclose $5 to help keep you outside prison walls.

W. S. Hammaker, Pratt, W. Va.—You may continue sending the stalwart LUCIFER to me. I inclose payment for arrearage and renewal. You have the good will and more of many friends; but that is not much in time of war; especially in fighting the Puritan influence in the state.

Ella Kautz, Pennsylvania—My blood is fairly boiling with indignation at the late outrages committed upon you. May you have the strength (I know you have the courage) to meet it all! I feel as if it would be officious to make suggestions regarding the future of LUCIFER. You have suffered so much that it seems cruel to have you continue teaching sexology, but LUCIFER would scarcely seem to be LUCIFER without the discussion of that question. I send Dr. Foote $2 for defense fund, but if you have a new trial you will need more. Use $2 of the inclosed for that purpose, and apply the other dollar on my subscription. Hoping that you will get a new trial and win it, I remain yours sincerely.

Annie E. Cummings, California—I am so indignant over your prosecution. I hope that you will not go to prison, and hope the time will soon come when the power of the suppressors of honest thought will be at an end. I send you a little help by way of a friend, and hope to be able to do more. Will inclose $1.25 on subscription and defense. I hope to take LUCIFER as long as I live.

Dora Forster, Oakland, Cal.—We attend the Freethought meeting in San Francisco every Sunday, and have learned with interest lately that it was founded by you. Debate last Sunday was on, "Is Our Present Marriage System a Success?" Subject to be repeated next time; a very good debate; and "The Scientific Breeding of the Human Race" is to follow. R. B. Kerr is to open that discussion; I opened that of last Sunday.

Ed. W. Chamberlain, New York—Somebody ought to contradict the newspaper statement that you have served three terms in prison. The fact is that you have never served out any of the sentences imposed upon you. To that extent at least you can deride the courts. More power to you.

F. E. Lothringer, Rock Island, Ill.—The only people who realize the slavery of marriage are the married, and for them it is too late, and they dare not say anything. Inclosed is $5 to help the cause along. Things have not been coming my way financially lately, but I don't believe in expressing sympathy without showing it. I talk LUCIFER when I get the right people to listen.

Juliet H. Severance, M. D., Chicago, Ill.—I understand your case is to be carried up. Hope it is. You are brave, and the last paper shows wonderful strength and character. I congratulate you on your moral nerve. Your trial was the most of a farce I ever witnessed in a so-called court of justice. And you were not even allowed a chance to tell "why sentence should not be passed." Even the Anarchists were allowed that by their judicial murderer.

H. N. Fowler, Philadelphia, Pa.—Inclosed find $10 to help fight the battle for the freedom of the press and the advancement of purity and a free motherhood through social and industrial freedom. I have always deemed criminal assault within marriage as great a crime as criminal assault outside marriage.

[The phrase "criminal assault" in the foregoing is substituted for a word in the dictionary which is defined as a certain relation with a woman "without her consent;" this substitution being made through deference to the feelings of the man appointed by the Washington postal authorities to act as censor of LUCIFER. This gentleman having had some years of training in newspaper work as reporter on Chicago dailies, which dailies notoriously strain at the gnat of a few good English words and swallow the entire camel of innuendo and suggestion, will, we trust, allow LUCIFER the privileges enjoyed by said dailies.—L. H.]

The editor of a prominent Spiritualist Journal writes: "I deeply sympathize with you in the unfortunate condition of affairs that have surrounded you. But there is one thing I never could understand, and that is why you should kick so strenuously against a law (violating it), which, enforced, would send you to prison. I can not harmonize wisdom with your course. It may be dullness on my part, for which no doubt you will extend your sympathy. I have always been taught that one must steer his canoe so he can avoid rocks and shoals, and at the same time use influence to remove the obstructions in the way."

[If the laws against the dissemination of obscene literature were as clear in definition of the offense as those against murder, theft, arson, etc., it might be possible to steer clear of the "rocks and shoals" of such laws. Certainly the editor of LUCIFER could find no pleasure in printing matter "offensive to chastity or modesty, foul, filthy, disgusting," etc. I have been very well acquainted with him for more than a quarter of a century, and have yet to hear him tell the first vulgar story, make the first light or disrespectful allusion to anything connected with the power of generation. Such matters are of the most serious moment to him, involving, as he believes them to do, the mental, moral and physical welfare of all who now or ever will live. I am inclined to think that if some such indefinite law were passed for the purpose of preventing the dissemination of literature in advocacy of Spiritualism our friend the Spiritualist editor would scarcely give up such advocacy through his paper without a struggle. And if LUCIFER can be suppressed because of its advocacy of unpopular ideals it is only a short step to the suppression of Spiritualistic papers on some other pretext, for the dissemination of such literature is believed, by some people, to be as offensive and dangerous as is that contained in LUCIFER by other people. Where the liberty of expression of one is denied, the liberty of none is assured. —L. H.]

Tom Swinburne, Charleston, W. Va.—I inclose $2 to use for any purpose for which it is needed. I can not find language to express my indignation at the outrageous treatment meted out to you. The inquisitors of the Middle Ages were doubtless as sincere in believing they served God when torturing heretics as these men are, and they had as good cause.

J. W. G., St. Paul, Minn.—Please send me twenty-five or thirty copies of LUCIFER. I wish to mail them with a letter like the inclosed to some friends. I trust the Dr. Stockham case will be appealed, and most earnestly hope that you will be able to raise funds to carry up your case.

[Here follows copy of letter to which reference is made. LUCIFER's editor is very grateful to our friend for the efforts in his behalf. It would seem to be an excellent method to increase the interest and extend the circulation of LUCIFER:]

"My Friend: The inclosed paper treats of a matter that I believe should interest every thinking person, and trust may appeal to you. I have taken it for a long time and have sent money for the defense of its editor. I trust you may become a subscriber, and also wish to help in defending a man who fearlessly stands in the place of every one who believes in personal liberty, the freedom of the press and that knowledge, not ignorance, of sex matters will make for the good of the present and future generations.

"Don't fail to read this copy of LUCIFER all through. It is possible you may find, from time to time, in this paper some things that may "shock" you, but remember it is an "open forum" for the discussion of sex matters. I have never yet seen anything written editorially by Mr. Harman that has not made me wish to some time meet him personally, and I believe him a sincere, good man.

"Let me also suggest that you obtain some extra copies of this issue and send to those you know would help such a cause if they knew the need that now exists. Do it now!"

My life is not an apology, but a life. It is for itself and not for a spectacle. I much prefer that it should be of a lower strain, so it be genuine and equal, than that it should be glittering and unsteady. I wish it to be sound and sweet, and not to need diet and bleeding.—Emerson.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE RACE.

It fell to me to open a debate recently, at a meeting of intelligent people. Whether they gathered anything from my words, I do not know; but I certainly brought away one lesson from their speeches and from their silences. I learned that our social system, which keeps us all enslaved, making our brains, muscles and emotions subservient to it, also contrives that the pretense of education which it gives to children, while it contains so much by-gone theology and useless superstition, shows nothing, even in outline, or the principles given to the world by modern thinkers. The principles worked out by Charles Darwin in biology are more important than any ever before enunciated, bearing as they do on every department of the science of human life. Yet there is scarcely a hint given by our still priest-ridden educationists of Darwin's work done half a century ago.

Thus when I, with somewhat Quixotic zeal, tried to set forth, in a ten-minute speech, the importance of human heredity, and its connection with social developments, it was clear I had quite miscalculated the "previous knowledge" (as trained teachers call it) of my hearers. In fact, I was trying not only to show forth the great lesson of the twentieth century, viz.: woman's freedom, already partially claimed in the readjustment of the marriage system insisted on by "the new woman," but I had also to suggest the lesson of the nineteenth century, viz.: what human evolution and its method implies.

Nothing would do for the audience but to return to the old battle-ground of socialism and individualism—a result which I could not wholly regret, for I am a socialist with all the warmth of my heart and all the coolness of my intellect; and it was very clear on which side were the young blood and the young brains.

But why do not the individualists see that while socialism must inevitably come this century to give us a reasonably good environment, the exponents of individualism should, above all things, occupy themselves with the subject of improved heredity, the necessary supplement to the improved environment aimed at by socialism?

The following was the little lecture I gave:

The question, "By what method can the human race be improved?" assumes three things: (1) That there is room for improvement, that we are not as healthy, as beautiful, as intelligent, and as wise as we would like to be, and as we should like our descendants to be; (2) that man can, by conscious effort, improve the race of man; and (3) that the race will not become extinct before there is time to improve it.

I think all intelligent and kindly people agree that improvement is wanted; and we shall not say with Dr. Boyle Roche that we do not see why we should do anything for posterity, since posterity has not done anything for us. And all are hopeful, with the exception, perhaps, of Mr. Benjamin Kidd, that the improvement can be effected by deliberate, conscious effort. At the danger of extinction, Malthusians may smile; yet it is certain that many of the best human strains do die out, and that the pure Anglo-Saxon breed in America is not now multiplying, and I think it is clear that a definite and recognized aspiration in a race to improve must include an aspiration to keep up its numbers to the full, if not to increase them.

Now to examine methods. A good proverb says: "He who will know what will be must consider what hath been"; and though the history of the past will not show us all the history of the future, it always throws much light upon it.

There is no doubt that man has improved in faculties, in brain power and in adaptability, though he has not on the average reached such a good moral standard as that of most other animals, in social sympathy or chivalry toward his mate.

The doctrine of evolution shows us man's path of progress. Darwin taught us what nature's method was in this path of progress. The quick-witted and the deft were allowed to flourish and produce offspring; the stupid and the clumsy died early and left no offspring or few. Every individual was, so to speak, tested this way. This was nature's individualistic method of improving the race. I use the word philosophically; even the most socialistic of us must admit that this method, carried on for long ages, succeeded well. Darwin called this method "natural selection" and its result "the survival of the fittest."

But nature had also another method which now came in well. Something was lost when the individualistic method was supplemented by another, but much more was gained. Man became a highly socialized animal, and by his social faculties the power of his hands and brain were enormously multiplied as a collective animal. And now he learned how to exchange ideas by means of that miracle, human language. When language began, man first, so to speak, went to school. And he learned both good and bad. Among the bad things he learned were how to go to war, how to enslave his fellow-creatures, and how to enslave his mate. Among the good things were poetry, music and the visual arts, as well as all the early crafts.

There is a verse from a doggerel poem of the last century, which was intended in mockery of the first evolutionists; but it expresses the facts as well as they can be briefly put, so I quote it. It says of our apelike ancestors:

> "An ape with opposable thumb and big brain,
> When the gift of the gab he had managed to gain,
> As the lord of creation established his reign,
> Which nobody can deny."

So here we have the two methods—the method of selected heredity, of rejection of unfit individuals; and the method of collectivism or education of the race.

Now, to cut a long story short, both these methods must go on. The method of selected heredity must go on at all costs; that is why the individualists say: "Let as many children be born as possible, and let the weakest go to the wall." A few humane philosophers oppose this, and say that we can substitute artificial selection for natural selection, and thus the best parents be selected for the race; but they do not explain how to carry this out.

These individualists and these humanists might have gone on disputing for ages to come, but they are interrupted by some remarkable disturbances and changes in the very facts they are discussing, and these facts we are all compelled to notice at the beginning of this twentieth century.

The disturbance has come from an unexpected quarter; it has come from man's enslaved mate.

Woman has declared herself in a very remarkable way. She has insisted on having some choice of her mate; that is, if he proves bad, she divorces him. And just as she refuses to be a slave mate, so she refuses to be a slave mother. She is refusing to bear more than one or two children. These facts are most noticeable among women of Anglo-Saxon race in America; but these are the best women, and they are going to lead the rest of the world.

The paragraph originally occupying this space was held to be unmailable by the local censor at Chicago. In consequence this issue of Lucifer has been delayed eight days, awaiting decision at Washington, D. C., and still no decision received at this office.

This is the rational form of selection that will be substituted for natural selection. And it will bring about a greater revolution in human worth and power than the world has yet seen.

DORA FORSTER.

FROM BONNIE SCOTLAND.

"The Scottish Health Reformer and Advocate of Rational Living," Paisley, Scotland, for July, contains besides several very good articles on the "food" question, a contribution by Lady Florence Dixie that we should be glad to reproduce entire did our limited space permit. It is entitled "Health and Sex." A few paragraphs will show the animus of the article:

"What I wish to point out is this:—"

"Sex is Nature, and cannot, therefore, be evil.

"To treat it as such is malignant.

"Morality founded on falsehood must be evil.

"Let us, therefore, set up Truth for our God and our Guide.

"Truth needs no hiding. Whatever is true must be right and good.

"Let the truth be told, then, of the tragedy wrought in countless lives by the enforcement of the lie in morals.

"The first thing to do is to abolish the 'conspiracy of silence.' Its effects are cruel and torture both sexes, but infinitely more so the woman than the man. Ignorance of sexual matters in the former is a grave crime. The ignorance of 'virtue' is the most unhappy condition to which a girl can be reduced, for it means her life-long enslavement and the sorrow of many as a consequence.

"Hitherto, two factors have made the amative and the reproductive functions inseparable. These factors have been, first, Ignorance; and second, Dogmatic religious tyranny, founded on the first-named, plus Selfishness. Moral Law has enforced same, and its recognition has been the martyrdom of man.

"Now, I maintain that truly civilized and enlightened human beings must rise above the brute. The passion of a great love is enthusiasm, and not a desire for reams of children. Can a man really love a woman who would condemn her to a constant state of child-bearing? Is it possible for a woman to breed such children, as I would see bred, who allows a man to treat her in such fashion? Those who cry 'Aye' have not soared above the brute. To them woman is the rib of Hebraic falsehood, the article fabricated for man. She is not his equal, his companion, his lover, his friend. She is his servant, his drudge, his slave.

"Two lovers meet. Must these never come together because their means do not enable them to rear 'a family'? Must they ever remain apart because Marriage enjoins reproduction? Must a woman always marry 'for means,' and give in exchange her 'freedom'? Is union of the sexes to continue a 'barter and sale' transaction without an end? Fervently I say it, God Forbid!

The closing paragraph is in these words:

The paragraph originally occupying this space was held to be unmailable by the local censor at Chicago. In consequence this issue of Lucifer has been delayed eight days, awaiting decision at Washington, D. C., and still no decision received at this office.

LUCIFER'S editor sincerely thanks Lady Florence Dixie for writing, and the publisher of "The Scottish Health Reformer" for printing these references to LUCIFER and its work. M. H.

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

J. Henniker Heaton, a member of the British Parliament, has the first place in the Arena for August. His subject is the "European Parcels Post." Near the outset of his article Mr. Heaton says:

"The reason why the progressive republic is so far behind Europe in this respect was made clear to me in a conversation with my friend the Hon. John Wanamaker, for some years Postmaster General of the United States. After hearing me dilate on the incalculable convenience and stimulus to trade of a parcels-post and the unrivalled excellence of the organization available, ramifying into every village, he spoke to this effect:

"All this is true, but there are four insuperable obstacles to the establishment of the parcels post in our country. The first is the ——Express Company; the second is the —— Express Company; the third is the —— Express Company; the fourth is the —— Express Company."

Mr. Heaton explained that he does not give the names of the four express companies mentioned by Mr. Wanamaker, "first, because it might be resented, and second, because I forget them."

The second article in the Arena for this month is entitled the "Economic Struggle in Colorado," and is written by Hon. J. Warner Mills, of Denver. This is the second paper of the series, the first appeared in the July No., and is to be followed by others from the same writer. No one, perhaps, is better equipped for the work of telling the American public the almost incredible story of what has transpired in the central mountain state of the Federal Union within the past quarter of a century than is the writer of this series of papers. That people calling themselves civilized and in time of peace could commit the atrocities related by Mr. Mills, and that the officials charged with the duty of arresting and bringing to justice the perpetrators of outrages against the persons and property of unoffending citizens, could be so deaf to the appeals of the victims of these outrages would scarce be believed if it did not come from sources entirely above suspicion.

Among the articles of special interest to Lucifer readers is one on the "Divorce Question" by Ernest Dale Owen, a well known Chicago lawyer, "a son of Robert Dale Owen, the eminent philosopher, and grandson of Robert Owen the great cooperator and social reformer," to quote the words of the editor.

To show how nearly in line with LUCIFER'S leading contributors is this Chicago lawyer of the honored name, Owen, we herewith insert a characteristic paragraph or two:

"In most of the states of the Union the law is based on sociological expediency rather than on ecclesiastical considerations. The general elevation and welfare of humanity, untrammelled by any authoritative text, is the usual basis of legislation. The one consideration, however, to which it would seem every other should yield the supreme place—the conditions under which the race should be procreated—seems to be the remotest to enter into the current contemplation of the subject. The results on children already born receive measurable attention. But that problem of infinite importance—under what conditions shall the race be born—seems little, if at all, to enter into ecclesiastical or legislative determination.

"Yet it needs only to be stated that men and women reflect effectively upon their offspring their own harmonious or inharmonious reciprocities. A child whose prenatal development is couched in harmonious influences must be born better than the one whose formative period is spent in a bed of burrs. It does not require argument to establish that the reciprocal influences of a husband and wife must of necessity dominate and give direction to such development.

"This consideration, then, should obviously be given the very first place in the problem of binding men and women together, or of separating them, by authority of law—there is none more important for the welfare and elevation of humanity. This consideration, too, can not be limited to the coarser and more truculent cases of marital wrongs, but must be extended to those subtler and more intricate animosities that daily pour gall into the soul by drops."

Italics are ours. Thus it is seen that Mr. Owen agrees most emphatically with Lucifer's central contention, namely, that the effect of marriage and divorce laws upon the unborn is of greater moment, incomparably of greater importance, than is their effect upon the parents themselves.

The August Arena is a mine of wealth to every independent thinker, as is almost every other number of the magazine founded and now again edited by B. O. Flower, one of the most eminent of present day journalists. So sure are we that Lucifer's readers will be pleased and benefited by becoming regular readers of the Arena that we hereby venture to offer the following clubbing rate, though no arrangement has been made of late years with the publisher of the Arena:

Lucifer, fortnightly, one year, to old or new subscribers, $1.00.
Arena, monthly, one year, regular price, $2.50.
Both to one address one year, $2.75.
This offer holds good for one month only, unless renewed.

"The Truth Seeker," Bradford, England, J. W. Gott, editor, is now issued quarterly, instead of monthly, as formerly. The July, August and September number has many features of interest. Among these is the program of the "International Freethought Congress," to be held in Paris Sept. 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th, 1905. The General Secretary's office of the Congress is 63 Rue Claude-Bernard, Paris.

There is also some account of the "British Secular League" and an interesting letter on "Out-Door Apostles" by its aged president, George Jacob Holyoke.

Among selections we thankfully note a report of trial of M. Harman in the Federal Court, Chicago, in June last, with picture of the defendant in the case; also Dora Forster's "Improvement of the Race," with advertisement of her booklet, "Sex Radicalism," which booklet is offered to the British public, together with a three months' trial subscription to Lucifer, for two shillings, six pence.

The "Truth Seeker" is now in its eleventh year of publication. In answer to an inquiry the editor says: "In spite of all boycotting on the part of the largest wholesale news-agents, we have forced the circulation per issue to nearly 9,000 copies. It now more than pays expenses. Our 'Sustentation Fund' is closed, and we are wearing a very broad smile." May your success continue to increase, Brother Gott!

Lucifer and the Bradford Truth Seeker are now offered one year for one dollar and ten cents, to all new subscribers to Lucifer and to prompt renewals. This offer to last for three months only, unless renewed.

If any subscribers to the English Truth Seeker through our office have failed to receive their papers they should notify us at once. Sample copies of the Truth Seeker, 5 cts. each.

WHAT SOME OF OUR BRITISH COUSINS THINK OF US.

"The Freethinker," London, England, G. W. Foote editor, while defending Robert G. Ingersoll and Thomas Paine against their English critics, in his issue of July 2 has this to say in reference to our "obscenity" laws:

"Nothing could be meaner, nothing could be more contemptible, than prosecuting the publishers of unpopular opinions for obscenity. It is a cowardly appeal to popular prejudice and passion. A book is only obscene when its object is to excite lust; and such things are always as dear as they are worthless. A book which discusses marriage, or sexual problems, or the population question, is not obscene; and getting twelve ill-educated, thoughtless men in a jury-box to say that it is does not make it so. There cannot be an obscene opinion. The very idea is absurd. The obscenity must be in the language or the treatment. And this leads us back to our original definition. A writer is only obscene when his object is obviously to excite lust and promote depravity. But here again, the words lust and depravity must be understood in their common signification. Words must not be turned and twisted by the hand of malice, under the eyes of bigotry, so as to manufacture what is called constructive crime. This is persecution masquerading as justice, and is one of the vilest crimes to which a court of law can lend its sanction."

Continuing the same subject in the issue of July 16, Mr. Foote quotes from the "Review of Reviews," London, a strongly worded paragraph in which the editor, W. T. Stead, gives his opinion of the American Postal Censorship laws:

"The American law authorizing a postoffice official to decide what is and what is not obscene literature places an arbitrary authority in the hand of an unknown censor which would not be tolerated for a moment in Great Britain. The Comstock law, as it is called, is so obviously capable of abuse that from time to time men who hold the faith which Milton held in the liberty of the press have protested against such absolute power being lodged in the hands of any official. If, at this moment, this unknown bureaucrat were to decide that the Song of Solomon and Shakespeare's poems were obscene, anyone who sent a copy of the Bible or Shakespeare through the post would be liable to be sent to gaol on the charge of using the mails for circulating obscene literature. In a recent case which led to the tragic death of a friend of my own the judge expressly refused to listen to any evidence as to the morality of the book in question. When the postoffice, he ruled, had decided that any publication was obscene, the function of the Court was limited to ascertaining whether or not an attempt had been made to send that book through the mails. This law arms a postoffice official with absolute power to place whatever publication he pleases on a far more terrible Index Expurgatorius than that of Rome. Its existence in a free country is a temporary anomaly and an intolerable anachronism."

The "friend of my own," referred to by Mr. Stead was, without doubt none other than Ida C. Craddock, who had worked for some time in the office of the "Review of Reviews," and who afterward was prosecuted and literally "hounded" to death by the man who enjoys the distinction of giving form and name to the American Postal Inquisition.

Referring to Mr. Stead's utterance, Mr. Foote says, "The Comstock laws and their operation illustrate what Whitman called the endless audacity of elected persons. He might have said appointed persons, too. The moment you give a man power over his fellows he proceeds, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, to exercise it illegitimately."

Much more to the same effect, did space permit, could be quoted to show what intelligent Englishmen think of our postal censorship.

ON "THOUGHTS OF A FOOL."

"The fool thinketh himself to be wise, but the wise man knoweth himself to be a fool." A good exemplification of this proverb is "Thoughts of a Fool," by "Evelyn Gladys" (E. P. Rosenthal & Co., Chicago and London), the fact of the knowing being the determining factor in this case. The author is an iconoclast, but as to economic evils there are evidence here and there of a dim perception of a remedy. But it is dim, as might be expected of an author who indiscriminately couples the names of Henry George and John Alexander Dowie, thus: "There be socialists, anarchists, disciples of Henry George, of John Alexander Dowie, and of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who have prescriptions warranted to transplant one from Rag Alley to the desirable side of Easy Street." Against this loose statement, however, we have in another chapter the following: "There is not a land title in all this world that is free from taint of force and fraud. For no one can claim title from the Maker, and there is no other valid title to ownership, and they who defend land titles are accessory to fraud." This is a stern indictment, though writ by a fool.

The author is no admirer of electmosenary institutions of any kind. Under existing monopolistic conditions they only serve in their ultimate effect to draw the economic lines tighter. And capital punishment is justly condemned on the ground that killing by legal process is more reprehensible than in anger, because deliberate. Satire, irony and humor abound throughout, and aside from antagonism to conventionalities, such, for example, as those declaratory of marriage, which, even if warranted would seem trivial in comparison with real evils, the book cannot fail to furnish entertainment.—Josiah Edson, in The Public (Chicago).

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

Bas relief medallions of the bust of Moses Harman, size 9 by 14 inches (oval), the work of La Verne F. Wheeler, a well-known Chicago artist, can be had at the following prices: Plain white, $1; old ivory, $1.50; plain bronze, $2; Etruscan bronze, $2.50. Thirty-five cents additional for boxing and shipping. The proceeds of sales, after deducting bare cost, are to be devoted to the defense of LUCIFER'S editor. Send orders to La Verne F. Wheeler, 3323 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

WATCH-DOGS AND THEIR MASTERS.

A well known banker in Kansas, now deceased, said in an essay read before a "Bankers' Association" that the banker's first and chief duty is that of a watch-dog—to guard the money of depositors.

What, then, let us ask, is money, that its care should place a man on a level with a quadruped beast?

Answer: Money is the representative of property.

And what is "property."

Hard to define; but an idea of its importance may be gained by reference to what was said of it by the founders of the American government.

"Property," said Rutledge, a member of the "constitutional convention of 1787—, "property is the principal object of society." This statement he repeated more than once during the debate as to whether any legislative body was needed other than the "house of representatives"—"house of deputies," as it is called in France. It was feared by Rutledge and many others that a body of men elected directly by the people, representing the great mass of the people, the "common herd," would not be sufficiently careful of the interests of the rich—the owners of land, of slaves and other chattels.

Another member of the same convention named King, said, "Property is the primary object of society, and in fixing a ratio, ought not to be excluded from the estimate."

Another member, named Butler, is on record as saying:

"Property is the only just measure of representation." That is to say, manhood rights, human rights count for nothing in the balance against property.

The historian Bancroft, in describing the discussion over the division of powers of the general government, says—page 258:

"Madison revived his suggestion of a representation of free inhabitants in the popular branch; of the whole number, including slaves, in the senate; which as the special guardian of property, would rightly be the protector of property in slaves."

This same Madison, the successor of Thomas Jefferson in the presidential chair, was and is commonly called the "father of the Constitution of the United States." George Washington, commonly called the "father of his country," was another very influential member of the convention of 1787, and was considered the richest man in America at that time—his wealth consisting mainly of land and slaves.

Such being the influences predominant in the convention that framed the constitution of the United States, is there anything strange to be seen in the fact that the chief characteristic of the "Upper House" of Congress to-day should be that it is composed of millionaire bankers and of those for whom these bankers stand as "watch dogs"?

The Senate, being the "special guardian of property"—in the opinion of James Madison, it is but natural that those who own or control much property should argue that the best and safest men to elect as members of that body will be those who have large property interests of their own.

Moreover, do we not discover just here—in the fact that the founders of our government considered "property the chief object of society," do we not find here the explanation of that other notorious fact that a rich man, and especially a rich officeholder, can scarcely ever be punished for crime!

Is not the fact that material wealth—of which "the dollar" is the personification—is the thing held most sacred by Americans, sufficient explanation why Theodore Roosevelt so promptly whitewashed Paul Morton when the evidence—as brought out by Messrs. Harmon and Judson—was overwhelmingly patent that Morton had used his power as traffic manager of the Santa Fe company to swindle the patrons of that road out of hundreds of thousands of dollars? Roosevelt and Moody were willing that "proceedings should be brought against the corporation," but would not allow Morton to be brought to trial to answer charges that if proved in court might send him to the penitentiary.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." "Actions speak louder than words."

Like the banker, President Roosevelt is supposed to be a "watch-dog." He was elected to guard the interests of the people, the voters, who elected him. Ever since his election and before, he has made large professions of fidelity to the trust reposed in him by the people. How have those professions, those promises been fulfilled?

And is not this fact, the fact that property is the chief concern of society, sufficient reason why the newspapers and the general public treat so tenderly, so leniently the gigantic robberies of the policy-holders in the Equitable Insurance company by the managers? one of whom is a millionaire Senator of the United States?

M. HARMAN.

GOING BACKWARD.

Free Speech and Free Press are equivalent propositions. They are Siamese twins and cannot be separated. The denial of one is the denial of the other. Nearly one hundred years ago Frances Wright began reform agitation by speaking and printing, and for many years lectured throughout this country in advocacy of precisely the same principles of human liberty for which LUCIFER is now contending.

She met with malignant opposition, of course, and was called an infidel, a freelover, and "an enemy to the sacred institution of marriage," but as the church had not then assumed control of the government, she was not sent to prison or even fined or prosecuted in the courts for the expression of her opinions.

In "The Truth Seeker" of July 29 someone gives a sketch of her life from which we copy the following editorial that appeared in "The Democratic Gazette," of York, Pa., on August 13, 1836. The narrow minded and over-zealous officials who go far beyond the letter and purpose of the law in "malicious prosecution" and persecution of LUCIFER, are advised to read these broad-minded utterances of long ago:

"FRANCES WRIGHT.

"This lady delivered a lecture in the court house on Saturday evening, the first of a series, which gave general satisfaction to a large audience. But an attempt was made, in the name of morality and religion by some who neither care for one or practice the other, to disgrace our borough by getting up a mob. We are proud to say, however, that the attempt was abortive.

"Our citizens hold too highly the right of freedom of speech enjoyed by every American to aid in destroying that valuable franchise. They remembered also that while the speaker had the right to freely express her sentiments, they were not compelled to hear her. If they did not approve these sentiments they had a right, as unquestionable as hers, to discountenance her doctrines by staying away from the place appointed for the lecture.

"We are not sufficiently acquainted with the moral sentiments and principles of Mrs. Wright to advocate or condemn them, but we are sufficiently acquainted with the privileges and the rights guaranteed by our Constitution to every human being who can say, "I am an American citizen," to know that none can forcibly prevent her from advocating her principles—whatever be their nature or tendency—without violating a right for which, as much as for any other, our fathers shed their blood in the struggle which led to the birth of our Republic."

If the editor of the "Democratic Gazette" were to return to mortal life to-day, he would doubtless be much pained to note that the rights and privileges guaranteed by the American constitution have been nullified by acts of Congress known as the Comstock postal laws.

THE CENSORS WILL "GIT" HIM "EF HE DON'T WATCH OUT."

Under the caption "Would Rear Children as Plants, Gaining Perfection—California Scientist Advances Theory That What is Possible With Weeds Can Be Done With Human Beings,' the dailies of the 31st ult. published the following dispatch from Los Angeles, Cal.:

"Luther Burbank, the famous California horticulturist, declares that the great object of his life is to apply to the training of children those scientific ideas which he has so successfully employed in working transformations in plant life. Mr. Burbank maintains that plants, weeds, and trees are responsive to a few influences in their environment, but that children are infinitely more responsive and the failure to realize the spiritual elements in the environing conditions of children has been the fatal mistake in dealing with them. 'Barnado in London has demonstrated that infinitely more can be done with children than with weeds and plants,' said Professor Burbank today. 'When this is realized and scientific principles are applied to the training of children, then humanity will enter upon a new stage of existence.'"

Now, as it is manifestly more nearly impossible to ignore sex in the production of children than in the production of plants without seeds—for the latter can be done, while so far it has not been demonstrated that an amputated human arm or leg, properly planted, will grow into a child—Mr. Burbank has entered on dangerous ground, and should be given a friendly warning. The newspapers have given wide publicity to his discoveries in relation to plant life; but should he make equally important investigations, experiments and discoveries in the realm of human life and its reproduction, it would be necessary for him to keep the results of such investigations and discoveries to himself, else he would risk confiscation and destruction of publications describing them.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Ernest Winne, N. Y.—Enclosed please find $1, subscription to LUCIFER. I can't afford it now, but from the reports I hear the cause of Truth and Love and Liberty needs it even more than I do.

Maggie Dimmick, Kansas—I expect to take LUCIFER as long as I can "dig up" the cash, no matter how much the price is. Enclosed find a few names and $2 to pay for sample copies to each.

Mrs. Nettie Pitcher, South Dakota—My sympathy will always be with LUCIFER and all who are suffering so much for this grand cause. Enclosed is $1 to credit on my subscription. With hopes for a brighter future, I am your friend.

Leonard D. Abbott, New York—I have read LUCIFER for years, and think it a thousand times worth while. I have not always agreed with its articles, but I have always been interested in them. The recent action of the postoffice officials is outrageous. I send a year's subscription at this critical time.

J. C. Barnes, Indianapolis, Ind.—I hereby enclose $1 for subscription to LUCIFER, and am sorry that poverty prevents me from doing more for you. Your arrest was the most diabolical outrage on rights I ever heard of. Long may you live to carry on your good work, for the grandest cause of the ages, and of which you are the ablest exponent.

W. C. James, Los Angeles, Cal.—I enclose $10 toward defraying expenses in your defense of right to print and distribute through the United States mails your thought. I believe every man should have that right, if any one man has that right; hence I send the ten dollars. With best wishes for yourself and family I remain fraternally yours.

C. S. H., Roanoke, Ind.—Am sorry to see you having so much trouble with the postal authorities. My heart and soul are in sympathy with you, for I sincerely believe in the ideas taught by yourself in LUCIFER, and though I am poor and can hardly do so will to-day send you another dollar to be used where and for what it may be most needed. With best wishes, as ever your friend.

A. E. C., Chicago—I want to thank you for your attention to my unknown friend's order to send your very interesting LUCIFER to me. I shall be delighted to receive it each week, so please continue to send it. I have been very interested in the few issues I have seen, and, Mr. Harman, in yourself as well. Next time I see you will want to shake hands with you and wish you success through your present difficulty.

Lizzie M. Holmes, La Veta, Colo.—I am more sorry than I can express for your trouble. But I know if it must come you will bear it, and be happier than those who put you there. You have hosts of friends on the outside, and the consciousness of their respect and esteem will give you strength. I wish I was able to send you lots of money; but I will send this little now and send more as I can. Yours with affection and sympathy.

Amy L. Heuple, Glades R. D., Hot Springs, Ark.—Our consciences have been troubling us since we last wrote that we might have sent a little more to help you, so I enclose this $5 to set us more at our ease. Please credit to Otto C. and Amy L. Heuple. We both send with it all the sympathy you deserve, if that were possible, and the contribution should be larger if we felt we could anyway spare it. All we want is one of your photographs, so we may have something as a constant reminder. LUCIFER No. 1043 received—that is, the later issue. As "Tokology" was my constant guide with my first baby, and I believe a very real help, I can't imagine what can possess the authorities to object to any portion of it, but, of course, there is no accounting for their actions.

except that they are fighting the cause you advocate. That stands out so clearly now that everyone must see it. I hope the appeal may be successful, but at present the only hope I see is in the fact that you must be believed to be a power or they would not persecute you. More power to you, and may the prosecution bring the cause before more and more powerful people.

Annie E. K. Parkhurst, Brooklyn, N. Y.—I have just wrapped, ready for sending to you, fifteen copies of "Diana." They are our contribution to you and LUCIFER. It's no use to try to express what I feel about this last outrage. Words will not do it. To think of you in prison again is too much. Know that we are with you in sentiment and sympathy as of yore, though circumstances (ill health, etc.) compel silence when we would prefer to speak.

Dr. M. A. Cohn, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Please find enclosed $5 towards your trial fund. My heart goes out in sympathy with you in your present hour of distress. Let the tyrants of this "free" country go ahead with their bloody persecutions. Their time is fast coming; the people are awaking to their rights and liberties. You are fighting a glorious battle. Persevere, and your name will live in history when the name of those who are hunting you down will be dead and forgotten.

Ernest Howard Crosby, Rhinebeck, N. Y.—The reason that I have never shown any enthusiasm for your cause is that, while I know your sincerity and admire your spirit of self-sacrifice, I am not attracted by the discussion of sex questions. I am, however, altogether opposed to the exercise of censorship of any kind by the postoffice. I do not think that the express companies have any such powers, and I see no reason for conferring them upon the postal authorities. I enclose $5 as a modest contribution to this fight, which you may apply to subscriptions or in any other way.

Sarah Stone Rockhill, Ohio—Great was my surprise to find my article had gotten LUCIFER into more trouble. I see now in what a dangerous position you are placed, to even express an honest thought on the subject of sex reform. Yes, it seems they, the postal censors, are bound to destroy LUCIFER, and what can I do to prevent it? I fear, very little. When your letter and paper came I was too ill to even read, and now I write from a sick-bed, but I hope to get better. I will inclose my subscription. I shall want to see the paper while it lives, or I live. My whole being thrills with the enormity of the indignity to which you were and are compelled to submit. Wish I could have both of the suppressed papers.

T. J. Bowles, M. D., Muncie, Ind.—Your persecution and prosecution for the high crime of trying to enlighten your fellowmen on the most important of all subjects is infamous beyond all expression, but this outrage against you, and this assault against all the friends of freedom, gives assurance, a pledge and a promise that a better future is in sight, because all history proves that the adoption of desperate measures to fetter freedom is always a forerunner of emancipation. To undo the wrongs and injustices that have been fastened upon mankind by centuries of time and crime is a herculean undertaking, but we can all rejoice in the certain knowledge that reason and justice will finally overthrow ignorance and superstition. Hoping the higher court will reverse the findings of the lower, I am yours always.

F. W. Frankland, New Zealand—Dear Mrs. Harman: I have just received a type-written circular from the Free Speech League, in which I am informed that your dear and honored father has had proceedings taken against him (contrary, in my opinion, to the Constitution of the United States) for his action in a propaganda which all people of broad philosophic culture know to be of supreme importance to the public welfare. My wife and I, as citizens of the United States, feel so strongly on what we regard as a violation of the liberty guaranteed under the American flag, that we have sent to Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., of 120 Lexington avenue, New York City, a check for $20 for the Defense Fund which we understand from his circular he is collecting on behalf of the Free Speech League. Had we not recently sustained very heavy financial losses, we should have sent much more. To say nothing of our personal admiration for your heroic father, it makes our blood boil that the liberty of citizenship should be capable of being infringed for the philosophical expression of opinion. Let your father's opponents bring arguments against his theories. If the latter are as erroneous as his opponents assert, it must be very easy to controvert them by logic and reasoning; but that the expression of philosophical opinion should entail legal proceedings is a situation more savoring of Russia than of the republic founded by Washington and Jefferson. Yours for the Freedom won by the Fathers.

Theodore Debs, Terre Haute, Ind.—Inclosed please find $2 for your defense fund, or as you may prefer to apply it. The lovers of freedom throughout the country should rally to your support, and if you are to serve another sentence for having the mental integrity and moral courage to tell the truth, then the highest court which can be reached should be compelled to go on record in pronouncing it. In this system of graft and corruption the chief concern of the powers that be is to silence honest men, but in putting the gag upon you they are opening the eyes of many, so that, while you personally suffer, you have the satisfaction of knowing that you are the instrument through which the light reaches the people. I need not say that Brother Eugene and I are with you in heart and soul. Stand your ground. You are making history.

Thos. J. Griffiths, Secretary-Treasurer Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, Montreal—I certainly think the action of the postal authorities is futile to check progress of thought along sex lines, or any other line of thought, for that matter. At the same time I feel deeply pained that you should be made to suffer at your time of life. Put me down for a year's subscription, to which I enclose payment.

It is idle to attempt to ignore the great influence of sex relations upon the individual and society, and no barrier should be allowed to interfere with openly expressed thought on this phase of social relation, the discussion of which is of as great importance as that of bread or social equality. I trust you will be relieved of the pain of enclosure in their prison walls. I greet you with tender thought and all good wishes.

T. M. Watson, Whitewater, Wis.—Yours, notifying me that a good friend had paid my subscription to LUCIFER, is before me, and now as I think how that good friend of yours as well as of myself has from time to time handed me a copy of LUCIFER which is always full of good thought-arousing ideas, a keen sense of self-reproval comes over me for having neglected to subscribe for it. But now, Brother Harman, I will be another good friend of yours by becoming a permanent subscriber, and also occasionally, as I can afford it, and I can, contribute a little of the "sinews of war" to help you keep your strong grip as you wield your cudgel of truth to demolish error. Yes, brother, count me as a permanent subscriber, also please remember that every month during the next four I will do just what I wish every subscriber would do. That is, send you a 25 cent piece which, I believe, would in a way help you to endure all the more hopefully, the cruel persecution that is being perpetrated upon you. The power of truth ever surging in the human breast will peralstently demand expression until it effectually vanquishes error.

Emanuel Quivers, Stockton, Cal.—In your troubles, in our troubles, you have my sincerest sympathy. The United States government has unconstitutionally arrogated to itself the monopoly of carrying the mails, and to fulfil its mission as carrier the right exists in the citizen to demand it carry all mail matter. The matter of the destruction of mail matter or diverting it from its plainly addressed destination is clearly arbitrary, and is a proceeding which, if persisted in, will destroy that monopoly. No man on earth, civilized or uncivilized, has any right to tell me what I shall or shall not read. According to the Declaration of Independence all men have the right to decide, each for himself what is for his pursuit of happiness. The childish pretext of the bad effect upon me of copies of Lucifer—paid for in advance to be delivered by the postoffice department—cannot be acquiesced in. If the argument were good, then the mind of the censor is already corrupted in going over the papers to see if they contain corrupting ideas. This is vicarious atonement, an idea extremely repulsive to me, and against the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States (the establishment of religion). This matter is unquestionably the most important ever before the people in the United States. Is is vastly more important than the question decided by the civil war. It behooves every citizen of the United States to register his earnest protest against this procedure. If a man has a right to decide what I shall read, he has the same right to decide what I shall eat, drink or wear. He has a right to dictate to me what I shall think. He practically does this when he abridges my education by eliminating my mail matter. Oh, what a farce it all is.

The people of the United States did not prosecute you, or give their consent for you to be prosecuted. Did the people of the United States but know of the details of this matter, a howl of protest would go up as strong as that now going up in Russia. The only trouble with us is to get the ear of the people of the United States.

Frank D. Blue, Kokomo, Ind.—It seems the limit to hold up LUCIFER for printing extracts from "Tokology." If "Tokology" is condemned as indecent, it is hard to say where they intend to try to put us back to—I presume the sixteenth century is about their style, and we may soon expect a revival of the burning of witches. In the end we shall win, of course, but I fear the suffering of the victims must be great. I shall print an account of the matter in Vaccination and do what little I can to assist in the preservation of the right to tell the truth, in print, even of so unpopular a thing as the human race. I really cannot find language strong enough to condemn the actions of our officials, but I am now as always strictly opposed to anyone acting as censor upon my acts or my desires in the way of information. I am as capable of judging as they possibly can be, and as moral as they dare be any time, and I need no one to stand guard over my reading matter. I trust you may yet find some way to escape the extreme measure of their hostility, as I fear the result upon your health, even upon your life itself. Wishing you to be of good cheer, for time makes all things equal, I beg to remain, yours faithfully.

Lucinda B. Chandler, Boston, Mass.—This morning's mail brought me a copy of No. 1043 of LUCIFER, with letter from Sister Juliet Severance. After reading these I took myself to the refrigerator for a drink of cold water, hoping to prevent a segregation of the atoms of my physical form as result of the tumultuous agitation of my inmost being. To realize the monstrous injustice of the administration of laws and courts, the so-called bulwark of freedom and protectors of the people, is too great a strain on my sympathies and mastery of emotion. And the humiliation of it! The claim and boast of freedom, and the flagrant suppression of it! Oh that I had the material means, I would devote it to the agitation in legislature and Congress, on platform and in print, for free press and free speech on the supreme question of a free motherhood. Yes, it would overturn the social (dis-) order of our time. I have faith that some time before a century hence, the foundation for a more perfect humanity will be laid in an intelligent and free motherhood, demonstrating the power of mind and freedom over the product of a real sex union in love and harmony.

Regretting I cannot make it $100, I send $1. Yours in sympathy and esteem.

Voltairine de Cleyre, Philadelphia, Pa.—I have read with indignation of these incessant persecutions of you, and I wished I had my voice and strength at least to speak against it, but I can talk very little, even in private conversation. All I can do is to admire you more even than in the old Kansas days, and tell you how sorry I am that poor half-corpse as I am, I can't help.

[We are frequently called on for information in regard to the condition of Miss de Cleyre; and feel sure that her few words, though not written for publication, will be read with interest by many friends. She has never recovered her health since she was shot more than two years ago. (It will be recalled that she refused to be a complaining witness against her half-crazed assassin.) I trust she will not be offended by my adding her account of her physical condition, for she has many warm friends among the readers of LUCIFER: "Since a year ago last January I have been on a see-saw between life and death, and without a cent save for my friends since last August. The disease is a horrible thing I never even heard of before I got it; it is called 'tinnitus aurium,' and comes from catarrh. It is the incessant pumping of an engine in my head; in reality the sound of the carotid artery. I have been in hospital after hospital, and to specialists and professors, but so far there is no cure and I think it is incurable. I wish I could die, for I cannot move about except like a snail. I cannot work or think. I have tried the regulars and the irregulars; fresh air and sunshine, eggs and milk, and yet it's all no good. So much for me." If any of Miss de Cleyre's friends, desiring to write to her, will address their letters in care of this office, the letters will be forwarded to her.—L. H.]

Henry Bool, Ithaca, N. Y.—I have been waiting to hear something drop before doing or saying anything in your case. You know, in a general way, my heartfelt sympathy is yours, and to affirm this fact too often would eventually make it appear like a vain repetition. When the fact became known to me of LUCIFER being again held up and for so flimsy and futile a reason, I felt and feel if I could damn those responsible for this despicable action to all eternity, I should be more than justified in doing so. Words to me are inadequate to prove my disgust and detestation of these Bourbons of officialdom. If I could only feel like Christ when he said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," it would be different, but, on the contrary, I feel and know in my innermost thinkery that the officials are after such as you for the set purpose of stifling inquiry and education all along the line of the most needed enlightenment of all.

I admire you more than ever and will take off my hat to you now and to your memory should my days be longer in the land than yours. The only thing I can do I have done—that is, I have sent $50 to Dr. Foote, of the Free Speech League; and I trust every man Jack of a liberal or woman may do all possible to help you in this hour of need. In helping you in this hour the cause of progress is doubly helped.

W. W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I am very glad to be able to send you one subscription, and very sorry that I am not able to send you a hundred. I will inclose in this a letter which I have written to a friend, one of six that I have taken time to write to that number of friends, hoping to secure a few subscriptions thereby and to arouse sympathy and interest and possibly to help to set some action in operation against the postal inquisition. I am waiting now for the six copies of No. 1044 for which I wrote you a few days ago. I consider No. 1044 a particularly good number to send out to persons who are strangers to the paper, to call their attention to it, and to awaken their thought as to what is being done by the postal censors in the way of suppressing free thought and free speech.

"I enclose herewith a copy of a paper and entreat that you read it and give it careful consideration. It seems to me that if you take the slightest notice of the paper your curiosity (not to say interest) will be so aroused that you will wish to give it a more earnest perusal. I believe the objects and principles of the publication will appeal to you, as it must and should to every sensible, thoughtful, freedom-loving individual; but lest its objects might be misconstrued by a hasty, thoughtless inspection, I beg to offer a few words of introduction and explanation: The publication is nearing its quarter-century of life and usefulness (much needed usefulness), but notwithstanding this fact it experiences a most severe struggle for existence—owing to the bigotry, hypocrisy, ignorance, intolerance, superstition and stupidity of the human race—and it needs men of thought, of sense, of judgment, of education, of influence, of power, to sustain and defend it. For this reason I am appealing to this class of men among my acquaintances and friends, and this is my apology (if apology be needed) for sending you this letter, accompanied by the paper. I have been a subscriber to the paper for nearly twenty years, and can conscientiously and earnestly recommend it as being highly moral, honorable, upright, just, fair and square, and withal a fearless publication; and this last has been the cause of all its trouble. I can truthfully assert that my character has been improved by following its teachings. Furthermore I have a personal acquaintance with its editor, having visited at his home in Chicago several times, and have always been treated with the utmost cordiality, respect and consideration. The editor is most gentlemanly in his personal conduct and deportment and private life, and I never heard him utter an indecent word, either in joke, innuendo, story, conversation, or in any other manner, notwithstanding the ridiculously untrue accusation of the postal authorities concerning the obscenity of the publication. Now, I most respectfully request you to read carefully the sample I send you, and if in accord with your principles and ideas, and if you desire in your heart to retain to the American people the constitutional right of free speech and free press, I hope you will assist the cause to the extent of giving your subscription to the paper, either directly or through me, as you prefer. If the principle does not accord with your opinion, of course neither the editor nor I would wish to force upon your time and attention anything that might be objectionable. If I hear nothing from you I shall take it for granted you do not enthuse in the matter sufficiently to induce you to wish to assist. Hoping you will pardon me this intrusion, whether my suggestion prove agreeable or not, I beg leave to sign myself most respectfully and cordially your friend.

Margaret McL., Brooklyn, N. Y.—So once more the enemies of Freedom have made up their minds to try to crush you and your efforts, but no matter how it turns out their efforts will be futile. If it were not for the suffering and inconvenience caused you I would say it were well to have them thus stir up things once in a while and so bring our cause before some who otherwise might never hear of it. My heart's best wishes are with you in this fight. We may differ as to methods, but in the battle for what is or ought to be our unquestionable right we must stand or fall together.

For the past two years my life has been an awful struggle. Many times even dry bread was a luxury. But this has been the experience of many of us—It is an old, old story and why repeat it? I have just secured a position which promises to be permanent as long as I can stand it. The work is very hard and heavy, and the hours very long (7:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., one-half hour for lunch), and the pay correspondingly short—$7 a week. Short pay seems to be the concomitant of long hours and hard work. I can now as never before realize and understand the position taken by so many who at heart sympathize with our fight for Freedom, but on account of their job will not dare come out openly. It is damnable, but it is so; the pity of it! Now, dear friend, it is little I can do, but that little I will do from now till I can do better or you need it no more. I will send you 50 cents weekly.

I would suggest that in asking for new subscribers you make it plainly understood that a subscriber sending a new name must be sure that such person wishes to have the paper. I claim the right, and take it, to read what I please (if I can get it, which I did not in the case of LUCIFER No. 1042), but I and others must not forget that this includes the other fellow's right to not read what does not please him.

Now, dear friend, this letter is already too long, but there is one thing more I wish to say. It is to me not a bit strange that you and others in your line of thought are being persecuted; the wonder would be were it the other way. You see, in teaching the right relation of the sexes you are striking at one of the greatest property rights of men (not mankind), and they naturally are not going to sit idly by and do nothing to protect this great prize. Sexology is truly the basic ology for only through understanding and obeying its natural laws can we produce the right kind of human beings; we may and do have many different opinions on these subjects, but only by a frank and free discussion of them can we arrive at what is right and best; so, long life to free discussion. I enclose $1.00 for a subscription renewal for myself and will hereafter send you the 50 cents a week.

[While we appreciate the interest in LUCIFER and in its work which prompts the generous offer of our friend, we do not feel it would be right to accept such sacrifice. But so long as LUCIFER merits such enthusiastic devotion it will live, despite all the attempts on its life by the would-be suppressors.—L. H.]

Some good people in Sweden desired to have his (Linnaeus) system of botany suppressed, because it was based upon the discovery of the sexes of the plants, and was therefore calculated to inflame the minds of youth.—Lecky's "Rationalism in Europe," Ch. IV. (foot-note).

IMPROVEMENT OF THE RACE.

It fell to me to open a debate recently, at a meeting of intelligent people. Whether they gathered anything from my words, I do not know; but I certainly brought away one lesson from their speeches and from their silences. I learned that our social system, which keeps us all enslaved, making our brains, muscles and emotions subservient to it, also contrives that the pretense of education which it gives to children, while it contains so much by-gone theology and useless superstition, shows nothing, even in outline, of the principles given to the world by modern thinkers. The principles worked out by Charles Darwin in biology are more important than any ever before enunciated, bearing as they do on every department of the science of human life. Yet there is scarcely a hint given by our still priest-ridden educationists of Darwin's work done half a century ago.

Thus when I, with somewhat Quixotic zeal, tried to set forth, in a ten-minute speech, the importance of human heredity, and its connection with social developments, it was clear I had quite miscalculated the "previous knowledge" (as trained teachers call it) of my hearers. In fact, I was trying not only to show forth the great lesson of the twentieth century, viz.: woman's freedom, already partially claimed in the readjustment of the marriage system insisted on by "the new woman," but I had also to suggest the lesson of the nineteenth century, viz.: what human evolution and its method implies.

Nothing would do for the audience but to return to the old battle-ground of socialism and individualism—a result which I could not wholly regret, for I am a socialist with all the warmth of my heart and all the coolness of my intellect; and it was very clear on which side were the young blood and the young brains.

But why do not the individualists see that while socialism must inevitably come this century to give us a reasonably good environment, the exponents of individualism should, above all things, occupy themselves with the subject of improved heredity, the necessary supplement to the improved environment aimed at by socialism?

The following was the little lecture I gave:

The question, "By what method can the human race be improved?" assumes three things: (1) That there is room for improvement, that we are not as healthy, as beautiful, as intelligent, and as wise as we would like to be, and as we should like our descendants to be; (2) that man can, by conscious effort, improve the race of man; and (3) that the race will not become extinct before there is time to improve it.

I think all intelligent and kindly people agree that improvement is wanted; and we shall not say with Dr. Boyle Roche that we do not see why we should do anything for posterity, since posterity has not done anything for us. And all are hopeful, with the exception, perhaps, of Mr. Benjamin Kidd, that the improvement can be effected by deliberate, conscious effort. At the danger of extinction, Malthusians may smile; yet it is certain that many of the best human strains do die out, and that the pure Anglo-Saxon breed in America is not now multiplying, and I think it is clear that a definite and recognized aspiration in a race to improve must include an aspiration to keep up its numbers to the full, if not to increase them.

Now to examine methods. A good proverb says: "He who will know what will be must consider what hath been"; and though the history of the past will not show us all the history of the future, it always throws much light upon it.

There is no doubt that man has improved in faculties, in brain power and in adaptability, though he has not on the average reached such a good moral standard as that of most other animals, in social sympathy or chivalry toward his mate.

The decirne of evolution shows us man's path of progress. Darwin taught us what nature's method was in this path of progress. The quick-witted and the deft were allowed to flourish and produce offspring; the stupid and the clumsy died early and left no offspring or few. Every individual was, so to speak, tested this way. This was nature's individualistic method of improving the race. I use the word philosophically; even the most socialistic of us must admit that this method, carried on for long ages, succeeded well. Darwin called this method "natural selection" and its result "the survival of the fittest."

But nature had also another method which now came in well. Something was lost when the individualistic method was supplemented by another, but much more was gained. Man became a highly socialized animal, and by his social faculties the power of his hands and brain were enormously multiplied as a collective animal. And now he learned how to exchange ideas by means of that miracle, human language. When language began, man first, so to speak, went to school. And he learned both good and bad. Among the bad things he learned were how to go to war, how to enslave his fellow-creatures, and how to enslave his mate. Among the good things were poetry, music and the visual arts, as well as all the early crafts.

There is a verse from a doggerel poem of the last century, which was intended in mockery of the first evolutionists; but it expresses the facts as well as they can be briefly put, so I quote it. It says of our apelike ancestors:

"An ape with opposable thumb and big brain,
When the gift of the gab he had managed to gain,
As the lord of creation established his reign,
Which nobody can deny."

So here we have the two methods—the method of selected heredity, of rejection of unfit individuals; and the method of collectivism or education of the race.

Now, to cut a long story short, both these methods must go on. The method of selected heredity must go on at all costs; that is why the individualists say: "Let as many children be born as possible, and let the weakest go to the wall." A few humane philosophers oppose this, and say that we can substitute artificial selection for natural selection, and thus the best parents be selected for the race; but they do not explain how to carry this out.

These individualists and these humanists might have gone on disputing for ages to come, but they are interrupted by some remarkable disturbances and changes in the very facts they are discussing, and these facts we are all compelled to notice at the beginning of this twentieth century.

The disturbance has come from an unexpected quarter; it has come from man's enslaved mate.

Woman has declared herself in a very remarkable way. She has insisted on having some choice of her mate; that is, if he proves bad, she divorces him. And just as she refuses to be a slave mate, so she refuses to be a slave mother. She is refusing to bear more than one or two children. These facts are most noticeable among women of Anglo-Saxon race in America; but these are the best women, and they are going to lead the rest of the world.

Woman is going to insist on being free; and the use she will make of her freedom is that she will select the father of her children. She will not be tied up to any and every miserable specimen of mediocrity or to any drunken or diseased wretch. If she is refused freedom, she will refuse to bear children at all; and thus it is no longer merely "the woman question"—it is "the nation question." The mothers of the race must choose the fathers of the race.

This is the rational form of selection that will be substituted for natural selection. And it will bring about a greater revolution in human worth and power than the world has yet seen.

DORA FORSTER.

FROM BONNIE SCOTLAND.

"The Scottish Health Reformer and Advocate of Rational Living," Paisley, Scotland, for July, contains besides several very good articles on the "food" question, a contribution by Lady Florence Dixie that we should be glad to reproduce entire did our limited space permit. It is entitled "Health and Sex." A few paragraphs will show the animus of the article:

"What I wish to point out is this:—"

"Sex is Nature, and cannot, therefore, be evil.

"To treat it as such is malignant.

"Morality founded on falsehood must be evil.

"Let us, therefore, set up Truth for our God and our Guide.

"Truth needs no hiding. Whatever is true must be right and good.

"Let the truth be told, then, of the tragedy wrought in countless lives by the enforcement of the lie in morals.

"The first thing to do is to abolish the 'conspiracy of silence.' Its effects are cruel and torture both sexes, but infinitely more so the woman than the man. Ignorance of sexual matters in the former is a grave crime. The ignorance of 'virtue' is the most unhappy condition to which a girl can be reduced, for it means her life-long enslavement and the sorrow of many as a consequence.

"Hitherto, two factors have made the amative and the reproductive functions inseparable. These factors have been, first, Ignorance; and second, Dogmatic religious tyranny, founded on the first-named, plus Selfishness. Moral Law has enforced same, and its recognition has been the martyrdom of man.

"Now, I maintain that truly civilized and enlightened human beings must rise above the brute. The passion of a great love is enthusiasm, and not a desire for reams of children. Can a man really force a woman who would condemn her to a constant state of child-bearing? Is it possible for a woman to breed such children, as I would see bred, who allows a man to treat her in such fashion? Those who cry 'Aye' have not soared above the brute. To them woman is the rib of Hebraic falsehood, the article fabricated for man. She is not his equal, his companion, his lover, his friend. She is his servant, his drudge, his slave.

"Two lovers meet. Must these never come together because their means do not enable them to rear 'a family'? Must they ever remain apart because Marriage enjoins reproduction? Must a woman always marry 'for means,' and give in exchange her 'freedom'? Is union of the sexes to continue a 'barter and sale' transaction without an end? Fervently I say it, God Forbid!

The closing paragraph is in these words:

"Perfect health can never be attained until we face the two great burning questions of sex and food, but the purest food will not make us healthy if the problem of sex is not worked out rightly and followed. In the name of Health I beseech of men and women to ponder this great question and unite in bringing it forward at every opportunity. In America, a British woman, Dora Forster, has written a very striking pamphlet called 'Sex Radicalism.' It is published at 590 Fulton Street, Chicago, U. S. A., by Mr. M. Harman, the able editor of Lucifer, the Light-Bearer, who is threatened by the American Government for issuing said pamphlet. Its cost is one shilling by post. I advise all who can to read it. It shows what the advance guard in America are thinking and saying on the sex question—the question of all others most important to health, strength and happiness, and, therefore, to regeneration, and although I do not agree with all its contents I am at one with the authoress in many of her contentions and desires."

LUCIFER'S editor sincerely thanks Lady Florence Dixie for writing, and the publisher of "The Scottish Health Reformer" for printing these references to LUCIFER and its work. M. H.

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

J. Henniker Heaton, a member of the British Parliament, has the first place in the Arena for August. His subject is the "European Parcels Post." Near the outset of his article Mr. Heaton says:

"The reason why the progressive republic is so far behind Europe in this respect was made clear to me in a conversation with my friend the Hon. John Wanamaker, for some years Postmaster General of the United States. After hearing me dilate on the incalculable convenience and stimulus to trade of a parcels-post and the unrivalled excellence of the organization available, ramifying into every village, he spoke to this effect:

"All this is true, but there are four insuperable obstacles to the establishment of the parcels post in our country. The first is the ——Express Company; the second is the —— Express Company; the third is the —— Express Company; the fourth is the —— Express Company."

Mr. Heaton explained that he does not give the names of the four express companies mentioned by Mr. Wanamaker, "first, because it might be resented, and second, because I forget them."

The second article in the Arena for this month is entitled the "Economic Struggle in Colorado," and is written by Hon. J. Warner Mills, of Denver. This is the second paper of the series, the first appeared in the July No., and is to be followed by others from the same writer. No one, perhaps, is better equipped for the work of telling the American public the almost incredible story of what has transpired in the central mountain state of the Federal Union within the past quarter of a century than is the writer of this series of papers. That people calling themselves civilized and in time of peace could commit the atrocities related by Mr. Mills, and that the officials charged with the duty of arresting and bringing to justice the perpetrators of outrages against the persons and property of unoffending citizens, could be so deaf to the appeals of the victims of these outrages would scarce be believed if it did not come from sources entirely above suspicion.

Among the articles of special interest to Lucifer readers is one on the "Divorce Question" by Ernest Dale Owen, a well known Chicago lawyer, "a son of Robert Dale Owen, the eminent philosopher, and grandson of Robert Owen the great cooperator and social reformer," to quote the words of the editor.

To show how nearly in line with LUCIFER'S leading contributors is this Chicago lawyer of the honored name, Owen, we herewith insert a characteristic paragraph or two:

"In most of the states of the Union the law is based on sociological expediency rather than on ecclesiastical considerations. The general elevation and welfare of humanity, untrammelled by any authoritative text, is the usual basis of legislation. The one consideration, however, to which it would seem every other should yield the supreme place—the conditions under which the race should be procreated—seems to be the remotest to enter into the current contemplation of the subject. The results on children already born receive measurable attention. But that problem of infinite importance—under what conditions shall the race be born—seems little, if at all, to enter into ecclesiastical or legislative determination.

"Yet it needs only to be stated that men and women reflect effectively upon their offspring their own harmonious or inharmonious reciprocities. A child whose prenatal development is couched in harmonious influences must be born better than the one whose formative period is spent in a bed of burrs. It does not require argument to establish that the reciprocal influences of a husband and wife must of necessity dominate and give direction to such development.

"This consideration, then, should obviously be given the very first place in the problem of binding men and women together, or of separating them, by authority of law—there is none more important for the welfare and elevation of humanity. This consideration, too, can not be limited to the coarser and more truculent cases of marital wrongs, but must be extended to those subtler and more intricate animosities that daily pour gall into the soul by drops."

Italics are ours. Thus it is seen that Mr. Owen agrees most emphatically with Lucifer's central contention, namely, that the effect of marriage and divorce laws upon the unborn is of greater moment, incomparably of greater importance, than is their effect upon the parents themselves.

The August Arena is a mine of wealth to every independent thinker, as is almost every other number of the magazine founded and now again edited by B. O. Flower, one of the most eminent of present day journalists. So sure are we that Lucifer's readers will be pleased and benefited by becoming regular readers of the Arena that we hereby venture to offer the following clubbing rate, though no arrangement has been made of late years with the publisher of the Arena:

Lucifer, fortnightly, one year, to old or new subscribers, $1.00.
Arena, monthly, one year, regular price, $2.50.
Both to one address one year, $2.75.
This offer holds good for one month only, unless renewed.

"The Truth Seeker," Bradford, England, J. W. Gott, editor, is now issued quarterly, instead of monthly, as formerly. The July, August and September number has many features of interest. Among these is the program of the "International Freethought Congress," to be held in Paris Sept. 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th, 1905. The General Secretary's office of the Congress is 63 Rue Claude-Bernard, Paris.

There is also some account of the "British Secular League" and an interesting letter on "Out-Door Apostles" by its aged president, George Jacob Holyoke.

Among selections we thankfully note a report of trial of M. Harman in the Federal Court, Chicago, in June last, with picture of the defendant in the case; also Dora Forster's "Improvement of the Race," with advertisement of her booklet, "Sex Radicalism," which booklet is offered to the British public, together with a three months' trial subscription to Lucifer, for two shillings, six pence.

The "Truth Seeker" is now in its eleventh year of publication. In answer to an inquiry the editor says: "In spite of all boycotting on the part of the largest wholesale news-agents, we have forced the circulation per issue to nearly 9,000 copies. It now more than pays expenses. Our 'Sustentation Fund' is closed, and we are wearing a very broad smile." May your success continue to increase, Brother Gott!

Lucifer and the Bradford Truth Seeker are now offered one year for one dollar and ten cents, to all new subscribers to Lucifer and to prompt renewals. This offer to last for three months only, unless renewed.

If any subscribers to the English Truth Seeker through our office have failed to receive their papers they should notify us at once. Sample copies of the Truth Seeker, 5 cts. each.

WHAT SOME OF OUR BRITISH COUSINS THINK OF US.

"The Freethinker," London, England, G. W. Foote editor, while defending Robert G. Ingersoll and Thomas Paine against their English critics, in his issue of July 2 has this to say in reference to our "obscenity" laws:

"Nothing could be meaner, nothing could be more contemptible, than prosecuting the publishers of unpopular opinions for obscenity. It is a cowardly appeal to popular prejudice and passion. A book is only obscene when its object is to excite lust; and such things are always as dear as they are worthless. A book which discusses marriage, or sexual problems, or the population question, is not obscene; and getting twelve ill-educated, thoughtless men in a jury-box to say that it is does not make it so. There cannot be an obscene opinion. The very idea is absurd. The obscenity must be in the language or the treatment. And this leads us back to our original definition. A writer is only obscene when his object is obviously to excite lust and promote depravity. But here again, the words lust and depravity must be understood in their common signification. Words must not be turned and twisted by the hand of malice, under the eyes of bigotry, so as to manufacture what is called constructive crime. This is persecution masquerading as justice, and is one of the vilest crimes to which a court of law can lend its sanction."

Continuing the same subject in the issue of July 16, Mr. Foote quotes from the "Review of Reviews," London, a strongly worded paragraph in which the editor, W. T. Stead, gives his opinion of the American Postal Censorship laws:

"The American law authorizing a postoffice official to decide what is and what is not obscene literature places an arbitrary authority in the hand of an unknown censor which would not be tolerated for a moment in Great Britain. The Comstock law, as it is called, is so obviously capable of abuse that from time to time men who hold the faith which Milton held in the liberty of the press have protested against such absolute power being lodged in the hands of any official. If, at this moment, this unknown bureaucrat were to decide that the Song of Solomon and Shakespeare's poems were obscene, anyone who sent a copy of the Bible or Shakespeare through the post would be liable to be sent to gaol on the charge of using the mails for circulating obscene literature. In a recent case which led to the tragic death of a friend of my own the judge expressly refused to listen to any evidence as to the morality of the book in question. When the postoffice, he ruled, had decided that any publication was obscene, the function of the Court was limited to ascertaining whether or not an attempt had been made to send that book through the mails. This law arms a postoffice official with absolute power to place whatever publication he pleases on a far more terrible Index Expurgatorius than that of Rome. Its existence in a free country is a temporary anomaly and an intolerable anachronism."

The "friend of my own," referred to by Mr. Stead was, without doubt none other than Ida C. Craddock, who had worked for some time in the office of the "Review of Reviews," and who afterward was prosecuted and literally "hounded" to death by the man who enjoys the distinction of giving form and name to the American Postal Inquisition.

Referring to Mr. Stead's utterance, Mr. Foote says, "The Comstock laws and their operation illustrate what Whitman called the endless audacity of elected persons. He might have said appointed persons, too. The moment you give a man power over his fellows he proceeds, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, to exercise it illegitimately."

Much more to the same effect, did space permit, could be quoted to show what intelligent Englishmen think of our postal censorship. M. H.

ON "THOUGHTS OF A FOOL."

"The fool thinketh himself to be wise, but the wise man knoweth himself to be a fool." A good exemplification of this proverb is "Thoughts of a Fool," by "Evelyn Gladys" (E. P. Rosenthal & Co., Chicago and London), the fact of the knowing being the determining factor in this case. The author is an iconoclast, but as to economic evils there are evidences here and there of a dim perception of a remedy. But it is dim, as might be expected of an author who indiscriminately couples the names of Henry George and John Alexander Dowie, thus: "There be socialists, anarchists, disciples of Henry George, of John Alexander Dowie, and of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who have prescriptions warranted to transplant one from Rag Alley to the desirable side of Easy Street." Against this loose statement, however, we have in another chapter the following: "There is not a land title in all this world that is free from taint of force and fraud. For no one can claim title from the Maker, and there is no other valid title to ownership, and they who defend land titles are accessory to fraud." This is a stern indictment, though writ by a fool.

The author is no admirer of eleemosenary institutions of any kind. Under existing monopolistic conditions they only serve in their ultimate effect to draw the economic lines tighter. And capital punishment is justly condemned on the ground that killing by legal process is more reprehensible than in anger, because deliberate. Satire, irony and humor abound throughout, and aside from antagonism to conventionalities, such, for example, as those declaratory of marriage, which, even if warranted would seem trivial in comparison with real evils, the book cannot fail to furnish entertainment.—Josiah Edson, in The Public (Chicago).

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

Bas relief medallions of the bust of Moses Harman, size 9 by 14 inches (oval), the work of La Verne F. Wheeler, a well-known Chicago artist, can be had at the following prices: Plain white, $1; old ivory, $1.50; plain bronze, $2; Etruscan bronze, $2.50. Thirty-five cents additional for boxing and shipping. The proceeds of sales, after deducting bare cost, are to be devoted to the defense of LUCIFER'S editor. Send orders to La Verne F. Wheeler, 3223 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

WATCH-DOGS AND THEIR MASTERS.

A well known banker in Kansas, now deceased, said in an essay read before a "Bankers' Association" that the banker's first and chief duty is that of a watch-dog—to guard the money of depositors.

What, then, let us ask, is money, that its care should place a man on a level with a quadruped beast?

Answer: Money is the representative of property.

And what is "property."

Hard to define; but an idea of its importance may be gained by reference to what was said of it by the founders of the American government.

"Property," said Rutledge, a member of the "constitutional convention of 1787—, "property is the principal object of society." This statement he repeated more than once during the debate as to whether any legislative body was needed other than the "house of representatives"—"house of deputies," as it is called in France. It was feared by Rutledge and many others that a body of men elected directly by the people, representing the great mass of the people, the "common herd," would not be sufficiently careful of the interests of the rich—the owners of land, of slaves and other chattels.

Another member of the same convention named King, said, "Property is the primary object of society, and in fixing a ratio, ought not to be excluded from the estimate."

Another member, named Butler, is on record as saying: "Property is the only just measure of representation." That is to say, manhood rights, human rights count for nothing in the balance against property.

The historian Bancroft, in describing the discussion over the division of powers of the general government, says—page 258:

"Madison revived his suggestion of a representation of free inhabitants in the popular branch; of the whole number, including slaves, in the senate; which as the special guardian of property, would rightly be the protector of property in slaves."

This same Madison, the successor of Thomas Jefferson in the presidential chair, was and is commonly called the "father of the Constitution of the United States." George Washington, commonly called the "father of his country," was another very influential member of the convention of 1787, and was considered the richest man in America at that time—his wealth consisting mainly of land and slaves.

Such being the influences predominant in the convention that framed the constitution of the United States, is there anything strange to be seen in the fact that the chief characteristic of the "Upper House" of Congress to-day should be that it is composed of millionaire bankers and of those for whom these bankers stand as "watch dogs"?

The Senate, being the "special guardian of property"—in the opinion of James Madison, it is but natural that those who own or control much property should argue that the best and safest men to elect as members of that body will be those who have large property interests of their own.

Moreover, do we not discover just here—in the fact that the founders of our government considered "property the chief object of society," do we not find here the explanation of that other notorious fact that a rich man, and especially a rich officeholder, can scarcely ever be punished for crime?

Is not the fact that material wealth—of which "the dollar" is the personification—is the thing held most sacred by Americans, sufficient explanation why Theodore Roosevelt so promptly whitewashed Paul Morton when the evidence—as brought out by Messrs. Harmon and Judson—was overwhelmingly patent that Morton had used his power as traffic manager of the Santa Fe company to swindle the patrons of that road out of hundreds of thousands of dollars? Roosevelt and Moody were willing that "proceedings should be brought against the corporation," but would not allow Morton to be brought to trial to answer charges that if proved in court might send him to the penitentiary.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." "Actions speak louder than words."

Like the banker, President Roosevelt is supposed to be a "watch-dog." He was elected to guard the interests of the people, the voters, who elected him. Ever since his election and before, he has made large professions of fidelity to the trust reposed in him by the people. How have those professions, those promises been fulfilled?

And is not this fact, the fact that property is the chief concern of society, sufficient reason why the newspapers and the general public treat so tenderly, so leniently the gigantic robberies of the policy-holders in the Equitable Insurance company by the managers? one of whom is a millionaire Senator of the United States?

M. HARMAN.

GOING BACKWARD.

Free Speech and Free Press are equivalent propositions. They are Siamese twins and cannot be separated. The denial of one is the denial of the other. Nearly one hundred years ago Frances Wright began reform agitation by speaking and printing, and for many years lectured throughout this country in advocacy of precisely the same principles of human liberty for which LUCIFER is now contending.

She met with malignant opposition, of course, and was called an infidel, a freelover, and "an enemy to the sacred institution of marriage," but as the church had not then assumed control of the government, she was not sent to prison or even fined or prosecuted in the courts for the expression of her opinions.

In "The Truth Seeker" of July 29 someone gives a sketch of her life from which we copy the following editorial that appeared in "The Democratic Gazette," of York, Pa., on August 13, 1836. The narrow minded and over-zealous officials who go far beyond the letter and purpose of the law in "malicious prosecution" and persecution of LUCIFER, are advised to read these broad-minded utterances of long ago:

"FRANCES WRIGHT.

"This lady delivered a lecture in the court house on Saturday evening, the first of a series, which gave general satisfaction to a large audience. But an attempt was made, in the name of morality and religion by some who neither care for one or practice the other, to disgrace our borough by getting up a mob. We are proud to say, however, that the attempt was abortive.

"Our citizens hold too highly the right of freedom of speech enjoyed by every American to aid in destroying that valuable franchise. They remembered also that while the speaker had the right to freely express her sentiments, they were not compelled to hear her. If they did not approve these sentiments they had a right, as unquestionable as hers, to discountenance her doctrines by staying away from the place appointed for the lecture.

"We are not sufficiently acquainted with the moral sentiments and principles of Mrs. Wright to advocate or condemn them, but we are sufficiently acquainted with the privileges and the rights guaranteed by our Constitution to every human being who can say, 'I am an American citizen,' to know that none can forcibly prevent her from advocating her principles—whatever be their nature or tendency—without violating a right for which, as much as for any other, our fathers shed their blood in the struggle which led to the birth of our Republic."

If the editor of the "Democratic Gazette" were to return to mortal life to-day, he would doubtless be much pained to note that the rights and privileges guaranteed by the American constitution have been nullified by acts of Congress known as the Comstock postal laws.

THE CENSORS WILL "GIT" HIM "EF HE DON'T WATCH OUT."

Under the caption "Would Rear Children as Plants, Gaining Perfection—California Scientist Advances Theory That What is Possible With Weeds Can Be Done With Human Beings,' the dailies of the 31st ult. published the following dispatch from Los Angeles, Cal.:

"Luther Burbank, the famous California horticulturist, declares that the great object of his life is to apply to the training of children those scientific ideas which he has so successfully employed in working transformations in plant life. Mr. Burbank maintains that plants, weeds, and trees are responsive to a few influences in their environment, but that children are infinitely more responsive and the failure to realize the spiritual elements in the environing conditions of children has been the fatal mistake in dealing with them. 'Barnado in London has demonstrated that infinitely more can be done with children than with weeds and plants,' said Professor Burbank today. 'When this is realized and scientific principles are applied to the training of children, then humanity will enter upon a new stage of existence.'"

Now, as it is manifestly more nearly impossible to ignore sex in the production of children than in the production of plants without seeds—for the latter can be done, while so far it has not been demonstrated that an amputated human arm or leg, properly planted, will grow into a child—Mr. Burbank has entered on dangerous ground, and should be given a friendly warning. The newspapers have given wide publicity to his discoveries in relation to plant life; but should he make equally important investigations, experiments and discoveries in the realm of human life and its reproduction, it would be necessary for him to keep the results of such investigations and discoveries to himself, else he would risk confiscation and destruction of publications describing them.

VARIOUS VOICES.

"Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Ernest Winne, N. Y.—Enclosed please find $1, subscription to LUCIFER. I can't afford it now, but from the reports I hear the cause of Truth and Love and Liberty needs it even more than I do.

Maggie Dimmick, Kansas—I expect to take LUCIFER as long as I can "dig up" the cash, no matter how much the price is. Enclosed find a few names and $2 to pay for sample copies to each.

Mrs. Nettie Pitcher, South Dakota—My sympathy will always be with LUCIFER and all who are suffering so much for this grand cause. Enclosed is $1 to credit on my subscription. With hopes for a brighter future, I am your friend.

Leonard D. Abbott, New York—I have read LUCIFER for years, and think it a thousand times worth while. I have not always agreed with its articles, but I have always been interested in them. The recent action of the postoffice officials is outrageous. I send a year's subscription at this critical time.

J. C. Barnes, Indianapolis, Ind.—I hereby enclose $1 for subscription to LUCIFER, and am sorry that poverty prevents me from doing more for you. Your arrest was the most diabolical outrage on rights I ever heard of. Long may you live to carry on your good work, for the grandest cause of the ages, and of which you are the ablest exponent.

W. C. James, Los Angeles, Cal.—I enclose $10 toward defraying expenses in your defense of right to print and distribute through the United States mails your thought. I believe every man should have that right, if any one man has that right; hence I send the ten dollars. With best wishes for yourself and family I remain fraternally yours.

C. S. H., Roanoke, Ind.—Am sorry to see you having so much trouble with the postal authorities. My heart and soul are in sympathy with you, for I sincerely believe in the ideas taught by yourself in LUCIFER, and though I am poor and can hardly do so will to-day send you another dollar to be used where and for what it may be most needed. With best wishes, as ever your friend.

A. E. C., Chicago—I want to thank you for your attention to my unknown friend's order to send your very interesting LUCIFER to me. I shall be delighted to receive it each week, so please continue to send it. I have been very interested in the few issues I have seen, and, Mr. Harman, in yourself as well. Next time I see you will want to shake hands with you and wish you success through your present difficulty.

Lizzie M. Holmes, La Veta, Colo.—I am more sorry than I can express for your trouble. But I know if it must come you will bear it, and be happier than those who put you there. You have hosts of friends on the outside, and the consciousness of their respect and esteem will give you strength. I wish I was able to send you lots of money; but I will send this little now and send more as I can. Yours with affection and sympathy.

Amy L. Heuple, Glades R. D., Hot Springs, Ark.—Our consciences have been troubling us since we last wrote that we might have sent a little more to help you, so I enclose this $5 to set us more at our ease. Please credit to Otto C. and Amy L. Heuple. We both send with it all the sympathy you deserve, if that were possible, and the contribution should be larger if we felt we could anyway spare it. All we want is one of your photographs, so we may have something as a constant reminder. LUCIFER No. 1043 received—that is, the later issue. As "Tokology" was my constant guide with my first baby, and I believe a very real help, I can't imagine what can possess the authorities to object to any portion of it, but, of course, there is no accounting for their actions.

except that they are fighting the cause you advocate. That stands out so clearly now that everyone must see it. I hope the appeal may be successful, but at present the only hope I see is in the fact that you must be believed to be a power or they would not persecute you. More power to you, and may the prosecution bring the cause before more and more powerful people.

Annie E. K. Parkhurst, Brooklyn, N. Y.—I have just wrapped, ready for sending to you, fifteen copies of "Diana." They are our contribution to you and LUCIFER. It's no use to try to express what I feel about this last outrage. Words will not do it. To think of you in prison again is too much. Know that we are with you in sentiment and sympathy as of yore, though circumstances (ill health, etc.) compel silence when we would prefer to speak.

Dr. M. A. Cohn, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Please find enclosed $5 towards your trial fund. My heart goes out in sympathy with you in your present hour of distress. Let the tyrants of this "free" country go ahead with their bloody persecutions. Their time is fast coming; the people are awaking to their rights and liberties. You are fighting a glorious battle. Persevere, and your name will live in history when the name of those who are hunting you down will be dead and forgotten.

Ernest Howard Crosby, Rhinebeck, N. Y.—The reason that I have never shown any enthusiasm for your cause is that, while I know your sincerity and admire your spirit of self-sacrifice, I am not attracted by the discussion of sex questions. I am, however, altogether opposed to the exercise of censorship of any kind by the postoffice. I do not think that the express companies have any such powers, and I see no reason for conferring them upon the postal authorities. I enclose $5 as a modest contribution to this fight, which you may apply to subscriptions or in any other way.

Sarah Stone Rockhill, Ohio—Great was my surprise to find my article had gotten LUCIFER into more trouble. I see now in what a dangerous position you are placed, to even express an honest thought on the subject of sex reform. Yes, it seems they, the postal censors, are bound to destroy LUCIFER, and what can I do to prevent it? I fear, very little. When your letter and paper came I was too ill to even read, and now I write from a sick-bed, but I hope to get better. I will inclose my subscription. I shall want to see the paper while it lives, or I live. My whole being thrills with the enormity of the indignity to which you were and are compelled to submit. Wish I could have both of the suppressed papers.

T. J. Bowles, M. D., Muncie, Ind.—Your persecution and prosecution for the high crime of trying to enlighten your fellowmen on the most important of all subjects is infamous beyond all expression, but this outrage against you, and this assault against all the friends of freedom, gives assurance, a pledge and a promise that a better future is in sight, because all history proves that the adoption of desperate measures to fetter freedom is always a forerunner of emancipation. To undo the wrongs and injustices that have been fastened upon mankind by centuries of time and crime is a herculean undertaking, but we can all rejoice in the certain knowledge that reason and justice will finally overthrow ignorance and superstition. Hoping the higher court will reverse the findings of the lower, I am yours always.

F. W. Frankland, New Zealand—Dear Mrs. Harman: I have just received a type-written circular from the Free Speech League, in which I am informed that your dear and honored father has had proceedings taken against him (contrary, in my opinion, to the Constitution of the United States) for his action in a propaganda which all people of broad philosophic culture know to be of supreme importance to the public welfare. My wife and I, as citizens of the United States, feel so strongly on what we regard as a violation of the liberty guaranteed under the American flag, that we have sent to Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., of 120 Lexington avenue, New York City, a check for $20 for the Defense Fund which we understand from his circular he is collecting on behalf of the Free Speech League. Had we not recently sustained very heavy financial losses, we should have sent much more. To say nothing of our personal admiration for your heroic father, it makes our blood boil that the liberty of citizenship should be capable of being infringed for the philosophical expression of opinion. Let your father's opponents bring arguments against his theories. If the latter are as erroneous as his opponents assert, it must be very easy to controvert them by logic and reasoning; but that the expression of philosophical opinion should entail legal proceedings is a situation more savoring of Russia than of the republic founded by Washington and Jefferson. Yours for the Freedom won by the Fathers.

Theodore Debs, Terre Haute, Ind.—Inclosed please find $2 for your defense fund, or as you may prefer to apply it. The lovers of freedom throughout the country should rally to your support, and if you are to serve another sentence for having the mental integrity and moral courage to tell the truth, then the highest court which can be reached should be compelled to go on record in pronouncing it. In this system of graft and corruption the chief concern of the powers that be is to silence honest men, but in putting the gag upon you they are opening the eyes of many, so that, while you personally suffer, you have the satisfaction of knowing that you are the instrument through which the light reaches the people. I need not say that Brother Eugene and I are with you in heart and soul. Stand your ground. You are making history.

Thos. J. Griffiths, Secretary-Treasurer Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, Montreal—I certainly think the action of the postal authorities is futile to check progress of thought along sex lines, or any other line of thought, for that matter. At the same time I feel deeply pained that you should be made to suffer at your time of life. Put me down for a year's subscription, to which I enclose payment.

It is idle to attempt to ignore the great influence of sex relations upon the individual and society, and no barrier should be allowed to interfere with openly expressed thought on this phase of social relation, the discussion of which is of as great importance as that of bread or social equality. I trust you will be relieved of the pain of enclosure in their prison walls. I greet you with tender thought and all good wishes.

T. M. Watson, Whitewater, Wis.—YOURS, notifying me that a good friend had paid my subscription to LUCIFER, is before me, and now as I think how that good friend of yours as well as of myself has from time to time handed me a copy of LUCIFER which is always full of good thought-arousing ideas, a keen sense of self-reproval comes over me for having neglected to subscribe for it. But now, Brother Harman, I will be another good friend of yours by becoming a permanent subscriber, and also occasionally, as I can afford it, and I can, contribute a little of the "sinews of war" to help you keep your strong grip as you wield your cudgel of truth to demolish error. Yes, brother, count me as a permanent subscriber, also please remember that every month during the next four I will do just what I wish every subscriber would do. That is, send you a 25 cent piece which, I believe, would in a way help you to endure all the more hopefully, the cruel persecution that is being perpetrated upon you. The power of truth ever surging in the human breast will persistently demand expression until it effectually vanquishes error.

Emanuel Quivers, Stockton, Cal.—In your troubles, in our troubles, you have my sincerest sympathy. The United States government has unconstitutionally arrogated to itself the monopoly of carrying the mails, and to fulfil its mission as carrier the right exists in the citizen to demand it carry all mail matter. The matter of the destruction of mail matter or diverting it from its plainly addressed destination is clearly arbitrary, and is a proceeding which, if persisted in, will destroy that monopoly. No man on earth, civilized or uncivilized, has any right to tell me what I shall or shall not read. According to the Declaration of Independence all men have the right to decide, each for himself what is for his pursuit of happiness. The childish pretext of the bad effect upon me of copies of Lucifer—paid for in advance to be delivered by the postoffice department—cannot be acquiesced in. If the argument were good, then the mind of the censor is already corrupted in going over the papers to see if they contain corrupting ideas. This is vicarious atonement, an idea extremely repulsive to me, and against the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States (the establishment of religion). This matter is unquestionably the most important ever before the people in the United States. Is is vastly more important than the question decided by the civil war. It behooves every citizen of the United States to register his earnest protest against this procedure. If a man has a right to decide what I shall read, he has the same right to decide what I shall eat, drink or wear. He has a right to dictate to me what I shall think. He practically does this when he abridges my education by eliminating my mail matter. Oh, what a farce it all is.

The people of the United States did not prosecute you, or give their consent for you to be prosecuted. Did the people of the United States but know of the details of this matter, a howl of protest would go up as strong as that now going up in Russia. The only trouble with us is to get the ear of the people of the United States.

Frank D. Blue, Kokomo, Ind.—It seems the limit to hold up LUCIFER for printing extracts from "Tokology." If "Tokology" is condemned as indecent, it is hard to say where they intend to try to put us back to—I presume the sixteenth century is about their style, and we may soon expect a revival of the burning of witches. In the end we shall win, of course, but I fear the suffering of the victims must be great. I shall print an account of the matter in Vaccination and do what little I can to assist in the preservation of the right to tell the truth, in print, even of so unpopular a thing as the human race. I really cannot find language strong enough to condemn the actions of our officials, but I am now as always strictly opposed to anyone acting as censor upon my acts or my desires in the way of information. I am as capable of judging as they possibly can be, and as moral as they dare be any time, and I need no one to stand guard over my reading matter. I trust you may yet find some way to escape the extreme measure of their hostility, as I fear the result upon your health, even upon your life itself. Wishing you to be of good cheer, for time makes all things equal, I beg to remain, yours faithfully.

Lucinda B. Chandler, Boston, MASS.—This morning's mail brought me a copy of No. 1043 of LUCIFER, with letter from Sister Juliet Severance. After reading these I took myself to the refrigerator for a drink of cold water, hoping to prevent a segregation of the atoms of my physical form as result of the tumultuous agitation of my inmost being. To realize the monstrous injustice of the administration of laws and courts, the so-called bulwark of freedom and protectors of the people, is too great a strain on my sympathies and mastery of emotion. And the humiliation of it! The claim and boast of freedom, and the flagrant suppression of it! Oh that I had the material means, I would devote it to the agitation in legislature and Congress, on platform and in print, for free press and free speech on the supreme question of a free motherhood. Yes, it would overturn the social (dis-) order of our time. I have faith that some time before a century hence, the foundation for a more perfect humanity will be laid in an intelligent and free motherhood, demonstrating the power of mind and freedom over the product of a real sex union in love and harmony.

Regretting I cannot make it $100, I send $1. Yours in sympathy and esteem.

Voltairine de Cleyre, Philadelphia, Pa.—I have read with indignation of these incessant persecutions of you, and I wished I had my voice and strength at least to speak against it, but I can talk very little, even in private conversation. All I can do is to admire you more even than in the old Kansas days, and tell you how sorry I am that poor half-corpse as I am, I can't help.

[We are frequently called on for information in regard to the condition of Miss de Cleyre; and feel sure that her few words, though not written for publication, will be read with interest by many friends. She has never recovered her health since she was shot more than two years ago. (It will be recalled that she refused to be a complaining witness against her half-crazed assassin.) I trust she will not be offended by my adding her account of her physical condition, for she has many warm friends among the readers of LUCIFER: "Since a year ago last January I have been on a see-saw between life and death, and without a cent save for my friends since last August. The disease is a horrible thing I never even heard of before I got it; it is called 'tinnitus aurium,' and comes from catarrh. It is the incessant pumping of an engine in my head; in reality the sound of the carotid artery. I have been in hospital after hospital, and to specialists and professors, but so far there is no cure and I think it is incurable. I wish I could die, for I cannot move about except like a snail. I cannot work or think. I have tried the regulars and the irregulars; fresh air and sunshine, eggs and milk, and yet it's all no good. So much for me." If any of Miss de Cleyre's friends, desiring to write to her, will address their letters in care of this office, the letters will be forwarded to her.—L. H.]

Henry Bool, Ithaca, N. Y.—I have been waiting to hear something drop before doing or saying anything in your case. You know, in a general way, my heartfelt sympathy is yours, and to affirm this fact too often would eventually make it appear like a vain repetition. When the fact became known to me of LUCIFER being again held up and for so flimsy and futile a reason, I felt and feel if I could damn those responsible for this despicable action to all eternity, I should be more than justified in doing so. Words to me are inadequate to prove my disgust and detestation of these Bourbons of officialdom. If I could only feel like Christ when he said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," it would be different, but, on the contrary, I feel and know in my innermost thinkery that the officials are after such as you for the set purpose of stifling inquiry and education all along the line of the most needed enlightenment of all.

I admire you more than ever and will take off my hat to you now and to your memory should my days be longer in the land than yours. The only thing I can do I have done—that is, I have sent $50 to Dr. Foote, of the Free Speech League; and I trust every man Jack of a liberal or woman may do all possible to help you in this hour of need. In helping you in this hour the cause of progress is doubly helped.

W. W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I am very glad to be able to send you one subscription, and very sorry that I am not able to send you a hundred. I will inclose in this a letter which I have written to a friend, one of six that I have taken time to write to that number of friends, hoping to secure a few subscriptions thereby and to arouse sympathy and interest and possibly to help to set some action in operation against the postal inquisition. I am waiting now for the six copies of No. 1044 for which I wrote you a few days ago. I consider No. 1044 a particularly good number to send out to persons who are strangers to the paper, to call their attention to it, and to awaken their thought as to what is being done by the postal censors in the way of suppressing free thought and free speech.

"I enclose herewith a copy of a paper and entreat that you read it and give it careful consideration. It seems to me that if you take the slightest notice of the paper your curiosity (not to say interest) will be so aroused that you will wish to give it a more earnest perusal. I believe the objects and principles of the publication will appeal to you, as it must and should to every sensible, thoughtful, freedom-loving individual; but lest its objects might be misconstrued by a hasty, thoughtless inspection, I beg to offer a few words of introduction and explanation: The publication is nearing its quarter-century of life and usefulness (much needed usefulness), but notwithstanding this fact it experiences a most severe struggle for existence—owing to the bigotry, hypocrisy, ignorance, intolerance, superstition and stupidity of the human race—and it needs men of thought, of sense, of judgment, of education, of influence, of power, to sustain and defend it. For this reason I am appealing to this class of men among my acquaintances and friends, and this is my apology (if apology be needed) for sending you this letter, accompanied by the paper. I have been a subscriber to the paper for nearly twenty years, and can conscientiously and earnestly recommend it as being highly moral, honorable, upright, just, fair and square, and withal a fearless publication; and this last has been the cause of all its trouble. I can truthfully assert that my character has been improved by following its teachings. Furthermore I have a personal acquaintance with its editor, having visited at his home in Chicago several times, and have always been treated with the utmost cordiality, respect and consideration. The editor is most gentlemanly in his personal conduct and deportment and private life, and I never heard him utter an indecent word, either in joke, innuendo, story, conversation, or in any other manner, notwithstanding the ridiculously untrue accusation of the postal authorities concerning the obscenity of the publication. Now, I most respectfully request you to read carefully the sample I send you, and if in accord with your principles and ideas, and if you desire in your heart to retain to the American people the constitutional right of free speech and free press, I hope you will assist the cause to the extent of giving your subscription to the paper, either directly or through me, as you prefer. If the principle does not accord with your opinion, of course neither the editor nor I would wish to force upon your time and attention anything that might be objectionable. If I hear nothing from you I shall take it for granted you do not enthuse in the matter sufficiently to induce you to wish to assist. Hoping you will pardon me this intrusion, whether my suggestion prove agreeable or not, I beg leave to sign myself most respectfully and cordially your friend.

Margaret McL., Brooklyn, N. Y.—So once more the enemies of Freedom have made up their minds to try to crush you and your efforts, but no matter how it turns out their efforts will be futile. If it were not for the suffering and inconvenience caused you I would say it were well to have them thus stir up things once in a while and so bring our cause before some who otherwise might never hear of it. My heart's best wishes are with you in this fight. We may differ as to methods, but in the battle for what is or ought to be our unquestionable right we must stand or fall together.

For the past two years my life has been an awful struggle. Many times even dry bread was a luxury. But this has been the experience of many of us—It is an old, old story and why repeat it? I have just secured a position which promises to be permanent as long as I can stand it. The work is very hard and heavy, and the hours very long (7:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., one-half hour for lunch), and the pay correspondingly short—$7 a week. Short pay seems to be the concomitant of long hours and hard work. I can now as never before realize and understand the position taken by so many who at heart sympathize with our fight for Freedom, but on account of their job will not dare come out openly. It is damnable, but it is so; the pity of it? Now, dear friend, it is little I can do, but that little I will do from now till I can do better or you need it no more. I will send you 50 cents weekly.

I would suggest that in asking for new subscribers you make it plainly understood that a subscriber sending a new name must be sure that such person wishes to have the paper. I claim the right, and take it, to read what I please (if I can get it, which I did not in the case of LUCIFER No. 1042), but I and others must not forget that this includes the other fellow's right to not read what does not please him.

Now, dear friend, this letter is already too long, but there is one thing more I wish to say. It is to me not a bit strange that you and others in your line of thought are being persecuted; the wonder would be were it the other way. You see, in teaching the right relation of the sexes you are striking at one of the greatest property rights of men (not mankind), and they naturally are not going to sit idly by and do nothing to protect this great prize. Sexology is truly the basic ology for only through understanding and obeying its natural laws can we produce the right kind of human beings; we may and do have many different opinions on these subjects, but only by a frank and free discussion of them can we arrive at what is right and best; so, long life to free discussion. I enclose $1.00 for a subscription renewal for myself and will hereafter send you the 50 cents a week.

[While we appreciate the interest in LUCIFER and in its work which prompts the generous offer of our friend, we do not feel it would be right to accept such sacrifice. But so long as LUCIFER merits such enthusiastic devotion it will live, despite all the attempts on its life by the would-be suppressors.—L. H.]

Some good people in Sweden desired to have his (Linnaeus) system of botany suppressed, because it was based upon the discovery of the sexes of the plants, and was therefore calculated to inflame the minds of youth.—Lecky's "Rationalism in Europe," Ch. IV. (foot-note).

SHALL LIBERTY BE MURDERED IN THE LAND?

ANOTHER APPEAL TO THE PRESS AND PEOPLE OF AMERICA — INCREASING USE OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCESS.

In its former Appeal, the Free Speech League said that in Russia at this time the government and people are eating the fruit of the poison-tree of administrative process, a tree planted ages since and sedulously cultivated and fertilized to this hour. We said that a decade or more ago the Postal Censorship planted the seeds of this deadly tree in the soil of the United States, and that it has continued that planting with mad zeal and ever-widening sweep of the sower's arm. Those seeds have germinated; the roots of the noxious growths therefrom have penetrated deeply, have ramified, and have sent up shoots in every part of the Post-Office tillage-ground. Already appointees, legislators, and jurists declare that the vile importation never can be eradicated. Do you believe that? Are you going to let your carelessness, your apathy, your indifference, your timidity, excuse and verify the ominous prophecy?

The League told you that while Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, had been sentenced in a federal court on the outworn and ridiculous charge of "obscenity," at least he had had the form of trial granted by the Constitution to every accused citizen; some respect had been shown to the letter of the fundamental law, even though its spirit had been smothered by the dullness, the prejudice, and the intolerance of the administrators of that charter of rights. The judiciary had not spurned all the outward signs of decency and equity. That remained for the Post-Office Department to do, and it did it with lightness of heart and without shame. It confiscated the property of a publisher without letting him know it had robbed him—that he learned only through the inquiries of his subscribers for their paper. It destroyed this edition of the journal without offering him the most meager opportunity to show why he should not be despoiled. The subscribers, who had paid honest money for honest goods, had no means of knowing why they were denied the enjoyment of their earnings. They, like the publisher, were exploited with no chance for defense and none for redress. They, equally with Mr. Harman, were the helpless victims of the administrative process—a process invented by old-world despots to stifle thought and the latest addition to the armament of new-world tyrants in their blundering war against education.

Since that first appeal was printed, repression has proceeded apace. The Washington authorities in immediate charge have continued to do injustice, while those really responsible are silent—therefore, acquiescent. Assistant Attorney-General R. P. Goodwin, law-officer of the Post-Office Department, who interprets the statutes for his chiefs, said to Dr. Immanuel Pfeiffer, Agent of the League:

"Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene, and so unmailable—the only occasion for any talk of such matters is in the private conversations of physicians with patients."

It was said long ago, that before stupidity even the gods are powerless. To fitly characterize this pronunciamento of Mr. Goodwin's is impossible; it would be beyond the powers of the greatest masters of English speech who have lived and died and are immortal in the world's literature. It defies serious argument; it is too ridiculous to be amenable to ridicule, and it is so small and mean that one must shrink from denouncing it. As well hunt snow birds with modern siege guns. But, unreasonable and absurd and microscopical as is the idea expressed, it is the Law of the Press and Mails. It is the rule of the Postal Department, enforced by administrative process, to the indictments of which Department there has been discovered no effective demurrer, before whose judgment seat there are no jurymen to be challenged, and no witnesses for the defense to be heard, unless those witnesses persist for days, and weeks maybe, and not always then. Here no writ of error is available, no change of venue allowed. Scarcely could we believe that such a rule had been enunciated were not the conditions such as to amply prove its existence, were not our experiences so many and bitter, the outrages under it so frequent and monstrous. Superintendent Hull of the Chicago Post-Office told Mr. Harman that no references to the intimate relations of the sexes would be permitted, and it appears that he was passing down the orders of his Washington superior, Mr. Goodwin.

Now comes the latest wrong—it may not be the latest tomorrow—the holding up of No. 1045 of LUCIFER. The articles in it said to be obscene could be read to that bugaboo of the conventional, the "young person" of either sex, without fear. There is not the faintest stain of impurity on either of them, and pretexts for the persecution of Mr. Harman and the muzzling of the press must be very hard to find when such productions as these are smudged by the Censor.

How long will you permit the study of the primary and fundamental relations of men and women to be under the ban of any authority, legal or extra-legal? How long will you remain and allow your children to remain the victims of ignorance and panic? Think! Without those relations the Censors would not be here, you would not be here, your children would not be here. Will you longer consent that the brand of vileness shall be stamped upon those relations by incompetents and reactionists. Do you admit or claim that the relations which continue the race are so obscene that all discussion of them is out of order, is dangerous, is worthy of fine and imprisonment. If they are so bad as all this, how will you improve them by silence, by concealment, by cursing? Will you better conditions by the persecution of those who are trying to point out the causes of the defects that exist? Do you actually believe that in this domain ignorance is better than knowledge? If you do, why do you not contend that it is better in every other department of our lives? If you think that it is pernicious to make known the conditions and methods of re-creation, why do you not move for the suppression of Government and other publications which deal with the breeding of domesticated animals? Are men and women of less consequence than the quadrupeds and fowls they buy and sell and eat?

Editors of America, especially of the daily press, wake up, straighten up, assert your independence of the little bands of busybodies who for more than thirty years have pursued and defamed and destroyed men and women who were earnestly endeavoring to throw light into the dark places of human society. Are you not yourselves victims of this odious censorship if you fear to protest against injustice, as some of you tell us privately you are? When such conditions obtain, what has become of the boasted "free press?"

To those, whoever they may be, who do not indorse the views of Mr. Harman, and therefore think they are not called upon to defend his rights as a man and a citizen, we commend these trenchant words of Mr. Louis F. Post, editor of the "Public," of Chicago. The excerpt is from a private letter, taken with the consent of the writer and recipient:

"If the object of your movement is to check the postal censorship, then I can see no better way than to try to enlist in the work people who are absolutely and notoriously out of sympathy with Mr. Harman, but who have sense enough to see, and power enough to make the public generally see, the danger there is to freedom of the press in allowing a bureau of the government to create precedents that may be used by bureaucrats against what people regard as legitimate publications, by proceeding in the way the Postal Department is now doing against what public opinion regards as illegitimate. I do not know that I make myself perfectly clear. It is difficult for me to do so, because my mind is so constructed, and I think yours is, as to be entirely indifferent to the kind of opinions, or even the kind of language, that is being arbitrarily suppressed by a censor, if the thing really amounts to a censorship of opinion. My fears of a censorship are more intense than my objection to anything a censor possibly can suppress. But most minds are not constructed in this way, and that is probably the kernel of the danger that threatens us. If we could make every one realize, as Americans once realized, that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty,' our way would be clear. But we are living in an era when nearly everybody seems to think, 'sufficient unto the day is the virtue thereof.'"

The veriest tyrant on earth will stand by those who agree with him; the test of intelligent devotion to liberty is the defense of the freedom of those who differ from us.

Moses Harman has been put to great expense by these repeated prosecutions and confiscations. His trial in court, the loss of edition after edition of LUCIFER, and the printing and circulation of protests, and explanations sent to his subscribers, have called for continuous outlays. He had no reserve fund when the storm broke, and has been able to keep the paper going only by the assistance of the relatively few who realize that his cause is their cause, his defeat their peril, his victory their security. Some have given all they could; some can give more; a vastly larger number who have not given before should give now. Money has a voice that will be heard, because it multiplies the efficiency of all other voices. It carries the word of truth and protest and appeal to hundreds and thousands who otherwise never would hear that word. It pays for typesetting, for printing, for postage, for food and shelter for those who work to make actual the dream of free science, free press, and free mails. If you believe the Censorship is wrong, help to break its power. If you believe Moses Harman should have opportunity to speak his thought, help to sustain LUCIFER. Put your thought, your wish, your protest against the administrative process, into an Express Money Order, a check, or a draft and send immediately to our Treasurer, as below.

Of our contributors once more the request is made that they will kindly bear with us awhile longer. Several very excellent contributed articles are now in type awaiting the light of print, and many more have been accepted and filed for publication. If there be any comfort in the knowledge that the editor's articles share much the same fate, our friends have that kind of consolation. For many weeks he has given way to others, especially—as in the present issue, to reprints of articles from contemporary journals, showing what some of our brother and sister editors think of the postal laws and their administration, in the United States.

HOW THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT CONVICTS ITSELF.

The United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, issues a "Special Report on Diseases of the Horse," prepared under the direction of Dr. D. E. Salmon. It is published, printed and mailed by United States officials, and is a very valuable book of over 500 pages, but no more useful than Dr. Stockham's "Tokology," unless mares are more worthy of good care than mothers, or unless fatherly Uncle Sam is more solicitous for colts than babies. In this government report on page 148 is the sub-title "Hygiene of the Pregnant Mare," and the first sentence reads thus: "The pregnant mare should not be exposed to teasing by a young and ardent stallion." Dr. James Law (the writer of that chapter) is in accord with Dr. Alice B. Stockham, author of "Tokology," and if the latter is non-mailable, the former is also, and this with many other official documents cannot be lawfully delivered by mail or express. We prefer the editorial judgment of Drs. Salmon, Law and Stockham, to the legal discrimination of R. P. Goodwin, and so we say to Uncle Sam—or "the administration"—either remove R. P. Goodwin and put a saner man in the place, or stop mailing "Diseases of the Horse," and many other "non-mailable" public reports. As it is, Uncle Sam is either a fool or a criminal.

CENSORSHIP AND INQUISITION.

If in Austria or Russia the censor objects to any sentence or article, he compels the publisher to take the article out of the form, and our comrades will then print in the space thus left white, "Confiscated"; or, if they feel very patriotic over the incident, they will insert a verse of the national hymn. In Russia they do the same things with domestic papers, while in foreign papers the article is blackened.

The American censor is more impudent. He takes hold of the edition at the postoffice and sends it to the dead-letter office in Washington, D. C. (d. h., Dumhelts-Centrum—center of ignorance), where these papers—still the property, which is otherwise sacred, of the publisher or his subscribers—will be destroyed. To notify the publisher is only considered by the Censor after so many complaints come in that the publisher goes to inquire the fate of his edition. Now one official hides behind another. Each claims to have an office, but no opinion of his own.

So it was with No. 1042 of LUCIFER, which Moses Harman publishes. The mail bags were sent to the Chicago postoffice on June 21, while the publisher was only notified on June 30 that his paper, a costly extra number of sixteen pages, had simply been destroyed at Washington, D. C., because it had contained indecent articles. Two articles written by women are claimed to have caused the arrest. I have read both articles—several times—carefully, and find neither a word nor a sentence in them which could have caused the confiscation. The fact that the first amendment to the Constitution guarantees liberty of press, that every attempt to modify it is a treasonable act, does not concern the Inquisition in the least.

Moses Harman has appealed from the decision of the lower court—a year in the penitentiary at hard labor—he is 74 years old. Judge Landis denied the accused the right to address the jury in his own behalf before they retired to decide whether he was "guilty or not guilty." When the sentence was given, the Judge forgot to put the customary question whether the accused had anything to say in his own behalf (a question which is asked of every criminal), and Moses Harman, who is hard of hearing, was convicted without hearing it, but found it out later on through his friends present.

The labor press of the whole country ought to make the case of Moses Harman an object of discussion and help raise the funds for the appeal. Moses Harman is under $1,500 bail, and at present yet free. Every friend of Liberty should show his sympathy by helping to defray his expenses at court and by subscribing for LUCIFER.—Neues Leben (Chicago).

Speak what you think now, in hard words, and to-morrow speak what to-morrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said to-day. A man should never be ashamed to own he has been wrong, which is but saying that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday.—Emerson.

Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.—John Milton.

THE POSTOFFICE AND FREE SPEECH.

The official who is now at the head of the postal department at Washington is getting an unenviable reputation for perverting the legitimate powers of his office—perverting them sometimes in a manner almost comic.

The government has for some time been trying, very properly, to weed out from among second-class mail matter—i. e. matter entitled to be mailed at the low rate of postage granted to newspapers—such papers as are used primarily to advertise certain goods, and in which the news and other reading matter are put in only to gild the pill. But of late the postal authorities have been straining the law to make it apply to newspapers of whose views they disapprove. Several Socialist papers have been subjected to real persecution. They proved that they were not issued for advertising purposes, in any ordinary sense of the word; but the United States Postoffice thereupon took the ground that they were issued for the purpose of advertising the editor's ideas, and so were not entitled to newspaper rates. Of course, on that principle, the privileges of the mails might be refused to all the religious periodicals, to the temperance papers, to the organs of the political parties, and to every other paper published to advocate an idea.

In the case of one of these socialist periodicals, the postal authorities declared they did not believe it had enough bona-fide subscribers to entitle it to the use of the mails as a newspaper. The editor thereupon asked each of his subscribers to send to Washington a postal card certifying that he had subscribed and paid his own money for the paper; and an avalanche of postal cards was the result. Several of these papers advocating unpopular ideas have established their right to the use of the mails only after a hard struggle; and one Socialist editor had to move his paper to Canada and send it to his subscribers in the United States from over the border. The Canadian government does not like Socialism any better than the American government does, but public opinion there would not stand having the postal laws perverted into an engine of persecution.

Neither would public opinion stand it here, if the facts were known; but the victims have mainly been the exponents of doctrines so unpopular that the general press has not taken up their cause, and the general public has heard nothing about the matter. The latest case of postoffice persecution has especial interest for women. Under the law against circulating indecent literature through the mails, a whole edition of a Chicago paper has been seized and destroyed for publishing extracts from Dr. Alice B. Stockham's "Tokology"! That is, it has been suppressed nominally because it published these extracts, but really because the postal authorities disapprove of the editor's views on the woman question.

"Tokology" is a book aiming to give prospective mothers such advice upon diet and hygience as will lessen the pain of childbirth. It has been sold and circulated through the mails for years, without objection. Many of our readers are familiar with it. There is nothing in it from beginning to end that could properly come under the law against circulating indecent literature. But the paper that published the extracts from it was Moses Harman's LUCIFER, a paper so much disliked by the authorities that they are always glad of a pretext to suppress it; and edited by a man of ideas so unpopular that the general public has looked on with seeming indifference when the law was strained against him.

Mr. Harman's cardinal doctrine is that a woman should always have the control of her own person. He also believes in the abolition of legal marriage. With the first of these ideas we fully agree; with the second we differ in toto. In the columns of LUCIFER, these questions are discussed by correspondents from all points of view, from the most strict to the most lax. The editor has been repeatedly brought before the courts on the charge of sending objectionable literature through the mails, generally because he has allowed some correspondent to use an unwise and offensive latitude of expression. But the intense dislike for Mr. Harman's doctrines has caused him to be subjected to long terms of imprisonment in cases that called for nothing more than a moderate fine at most; and in the present case the attack upon him is persecution and prejudice pure and simple.

The Free Speech League has taken the matter up, and issues an appeal to the press to help ventilate it. The League reprints the paragraphs condemned by the postal authorities, and asks every reader to judge for himself whether they are obscene. Dr. Stockham says: "It is natural and reasonable that the mother should be exempt from the sexual relation during gestation," and she goes on to elaborate and enforce this idea, but without any coarseness of expression. It is hardly possible that any sane jury, whether agreeing or disagreeing with the view expressed, would pronounce her language obscene. But Mr. Harman has had no chance to bring the case before a jury. In referring to previous prosecutions of his paper, the Free Speech League says:

Here follows a long extract from the Appeal circular of the Free Speech League. The article closes in these words:

Any one wishing to send contributions to aid Mr. Harman can communicate with Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., treasurer of the Free Speech League, 120 Lexington Avenue, New York City, who will doubtless be glad also to send further particulars regarding the matter.

No one can disapprove more strongly than we do of many of the doctrines advocated in LUCIFER; but justice is justice, and in this case Mr. Harman has certainly been treated with odious unfairness.

In view of the defeat of the bill asked for by the Massachusetts W. S. A. to forbid the publication of indecent medical advertisements; in view of the free circulation through the mails of yellow journals containing all manner of offensive scandals, decorated with flaring headlines; in view of the great mass of unquestionably corrupt and corrupting material that is sent broadcast without interference, the suppression of the quotations from Dr. Stockham is laughable. Let our government put at the head of the postal department an official who has not only more sense of fairness than the present incumbent, but also some little sense of humor.—Alice Stone Blackwell (editorial), in "Woman's Journal," Boston, August 12, 1905.

AN UNHEARD-OF JUDGMENT.

Moses Harman, the noble old man who for twenty-five years has published LUCIFER, has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. The United States court found some articles published by Harman to be obscene.

Harman himself writes superior English and expresses his thoughts so skillfully that the most fanatic inquisition could not find fault. His assistants, especially some energetic women, are less careful and prudent, and one such article became the pretext for the lawsuit.

Moses Harman defends the right of free motherhood and the right of the unborn child. His teachings ought to make men happier. Whoever knows how much mischief is caused by jealousy and ignorance in matters of sex, will admit that teachers like Moses Harman are necessary; they should be highly honored and rewarded, and not punished.

An appeal will be taken from this terrible judgment, which may turn out to be a death-warrant for the much-tried old man. Such an appeal, though, costs much money. Whoever wants to show his sympathy to Moses Harman ought to read his paper and pay the $1 it costs per year. Write to his daughter, Lillian Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.—Neues Leben (Chicago).

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

Bas relief medallions of the bust of Moses Harman, size 9 by 14 inches (oval), the work of La Verne F. Wheeler, a well-known Chicago artist, can be had at the following prices: Plain white, $1; old ivory, $1.50; plain bronze, $2; Etruscan bronze, $2.50. Thirty-five cents additional for boxing and shipping. The proceeds of sales, after deducting bare cost, are to be devoted to the defense of LUCIFER'S editor. Send orders to La Verne F. Wheeler, 3323 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

THE PEOPLE ARE NOT THE GOVERNMENT.

The ordinary citizen cannot take advantage of the cheaper market because the blessed tariff raises the prices on all such goods when they are brought home. The government, however, does not have to pay duties on its purchases abroad and may buy in the cheapest market. It is the misfortune of the people that, although they make the government, they are not the government, and must pay American taxes on American goods.—Boston Herald.

And just so, also, in the matter of literature, pictures, etc. The people make the government, pay all the government expenses, but they must not write, read nor send through the mails that which they think good for young and old to know. The privilege to do this is reserved for the government officials, and for their favorites—presumably for the class or classes supposed to be able to control the most votes on election day. M. H.

LUCIFER NO. 1045.

Owing to disorganization of work caused by previous "lock-outs" by the Postal authorities, also by the bother of getting to press our booklet, "Right to Be Born Well," we were a week late with No. 1045 of LUCIFER.

This was August tenth. Having compiled, as we very honestly believed, with the admonition in regard to objectionable matter, we presented part of the edition for mailing with no apprehension that we would again be denied our citizen right to equal participation in the benefits of the people's "carrier" system, for which we pay our proportional part.

In this reasonable expectation we were once more doomed to disappointment. After reading a copy of the issue, the superintendent of second class mail matter at Chicago informed us that in his opinion the two first articles came under the inhibition of the postal regulations in regard to "obscene" literature, and that he would be obliged to refer the matter to the Postmaster-General's office at Washington, D. C.

After waiting eight days and getting no answer from headquarters of the carrier system aforesaid—which system now assumes the functions of a judiciary department of government as well as executive, we removed the paragraphs to which Mr. Hull objected, and in their stead inserted a brief explanation of the enforced delay; then, after one more day of fruitless waiting to hear from the Postmaster-General's staff we were allowed to send the expurgated edition to LUCIFER'S readers.

This third hold-up, or lock-out, within two months last past, will make us again tardy in getting to press with next issue. However, if not again denied our equal right to the common mail, LUCIFER No. 1046 will be sent out from the Chicago postoffice on Wednesday, Aug. 23, or one week behind time, as per regular order of fortnightly appearance.

OUR ADVANCING POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

Since long before the foundation of the Federal government, American public sentiment has cherished freedom of the press above every other condition of popular liberty except trial by jury. With the press untrammelled our fathers believed that no menace to liberty could really gain a foothold, if an innovation, or long endure, if already established; whereas, if the press were subject to censorship, they felt that autocracy would flourish as in their day it did throughout Europe and as in ours it still does in Russia.

They did not mean that the press should have license to attack personal reputations or offend public morals with impunity. They conceded that publishers should be held to account for libelous and indecent publications. But they insisted that guilt should be determined by juries, after the act, and upon a full hearing of both sides; and not by bureau officials in advance of the act and ex parte.

Much has been said against this view on the ground that it would permit the accomplishment of wrongs which once done cannot be undone; and it must be confessed that the objection is not without plausibility when particular grievances are considered irrespective of general effects. But our fathers realized that the greater danger lies in empowering officials to impose upon publishers a decree of silence. A person outraged by libel would be vindicated by the verdict that condemned his libeler; common standards of public morals would be strengthened by the verdict of juries if the standards were true, and weakened by assault only in case they were false. But under a censorship, private outrages upon public rights might go unrevealed and unscathed; true standards of public morals might be perverted and false ones perpetuated; and with a pretence of protecting personal reputation and public morals, bureaucrats might insidiously undermine popular liberty.

Our fathers therefore made it a part of their political religion that every one should be free to print and publish whatever he would, subject to being held accountable therefor by a jury of his fellow citizens. So wedded were they to this theory of a free press accountable only to a jury of the people, that the result of a lawsuit in the old Colony of New York was acclaimed throughout the Colonies and helped kindle the fires of the Revolution, because the jury had found that an alleged libel against the Colonial authorities was justified and the publisher not guilty, notwithstanding that the Colonial judge before whom the case was tried had ordered the jury to convict.

So vital did this sentiment remain after the Revolution, that the Federal party went down in political wreck and ruin because it became responsible for the "sedition act," which evaded the principle of a free but accountable press by making libels against the President and other Federal officials triable before judges of the President's own appointment and juries selected by his own appointees.

So vital did that sentiment continue down the troublous century just ended, that even in the heat of the anti-slavery agitation a pro-slavery Senate revolted at a suggestion that anti-slavery newspapers be made unmailable.

We believe that this wholesome sentiment of liberty survives in the American mind. Though a great influx of foreigners in recent years—foreigners seeking not greater liberty as in earlier times, but only better wages—may have had the effect of making American landmarks of liberty fade in the public opinion of to-day, yet the autocratic conditions of which we get reports from Russia are abhorrent enough to stir even the dullest mind to some sense of the dangers which go with a bureaucratic censorship of the press. It is an innovation which we believe American public opinion would not consciously tolerate. Were any direct attempt made to subject to the control of a government bureau the right to print and publish freely, subject only to accountability to juries, it would surely overwhelm the political party responsible for it, as the Federal party of a hundred years ago was overwhelmed, with the condemnation of an indignant people.

But what could not be done directly because the people would resent it, might be done indirectly and surreptitiously because the people would not realize that it was being done.

And it is a fact, that by indirect and surreptitious methods a censorship is gradually being established over printing and publishing in the United States. It has advanced so far that a Federal bureau at Washington already possesses power of press censorship sufficient to enable it to suppress any periodical whatever, in the discretion of the officials who control the bureau.

We do not intend to say that every possible attempt at such suppression would succeed. What we do intend to say is that the censorial power which already exists in this Federal bureau is unlimited in its possibilities and threatening in its character. To a consideration of this fact we beg most earnestly to call serious public attention.

Let us consider first how a situation so serious might come about.

If an autocratic coterie, acute, skillful and patient, were deliberately set upon the purpose of creating a press censorship like that of Russia, in a republic like ours, where the traditions and the laws guaranteed freedom of the press subject to accountability only to juries, and where public opinion clung tenaciously to the spirit of those traditions, how would that coterie begin?

Not by trying to repeal the laws nor by violently overriding them. Either would be a hopeless undertaking in those circumstances. Such a coterie would begin by trying to invest with censorial power that bureau of the government, if there were such a bureau, which managed the distribution among the people of written and printed matter.

In doing this the coterie would at first carefully limit the censorship to such written and printed matter as was most intensely offensive to public morals; for that would be along the line of least resistance. A vast majority of the people, their thought centered upon offenses against morality and drawn away from offenses against liberty, would cordially approve the innovation.

Later a similar censorship would be extended by this coterie of liberty destroyers, to written and printed matter somewhat less offensive to public morals; and thus on and on by easy stages to such as was less and less offensive.

And the same acute discretion would be observed in the execution of these powers of censorship. The bureau so invested with censorial authority would at first execute its powers only against violators of the most sacred tenets of public morality. As its censorial powers were thereby commended to public approval, they would be applied to less repulsive offenders or those who occupied debatable ground, some of whom might bring the subject into the courts.

But the courts, keen to see that a decision in favor of minor or dubious offenders would make a precedent favorable to the repulsive class, would prefer making a precedent against liberty to making one against public morals. A few such precedents against liberty, in the guise of precedents for morality, and the hardest work of the censor-seeking coterie would be nearly done.

The bureau could then begin, on pretense of suppressing immorality, to discriminate against the publication of legitimate opinions. Over this there would be a struggle in the courts. But when the courts had decided that the bureau was engaged in executive work, and that its interference therein with private rights, even to the extent of seizing and confiscating private property upon evidence satisfactory to the bureaucrat, must not be prevented, the censor-seeking work of the coterie would be complete.

After that, there would be nothing to limit the scope of the censorship.

An object of sufficient importance to the coterie, and a confederate of sufficient nerve at the head of the bureau, would make a censorship which the crude censors of Russia might envy.

By deciding as to any periodical whatever, and however falsely, upon evidence satisfactory to himself, that its contents were offensive to public morals, the head of this bureau could effectually suppress that publication. And the mere fact that he could do this, would have a powerful effect in influencing all periodicals to support or oppose public policies as the persons or parties controlling the censorizing bureau might direct.

It is by insidious steps, such as are here suggested as possible, that the public opinion of free people has always been suppressed, and that their other liberties have been wrested from them in the consequent silence.

Now, in this country there is just such a bureau as we have imagined above. It is known as the Post Office Department. That department controls the delivery and receipt of almost all the written and printed matter of the country. Nearly all private correspondence, nearly all books, nearly all periodicals, are circulated by its machinery. It has gone so extensively into the business of distributing letters and periodicals for the people that all business is dependent upon it, and any periodical against which it might discriminate could not long continue publication.

To invest this department with power to grant or refuse its distributing service to periodicals, with reference to its own judgment of the legitimacy of their printed contents, would be to place at its mercy every periodical which the department might wish to destroy.

But not only have we such a bureau in this country, in the Post Office Department, but that department has been gradually invested, in very much the manner indicated above, with the censorial powers outlined above as possible. And it has exercised those powers with similarly aggressive discretion. We do not mean that there has been a conscious and definite purpose of creating a dangerous censorship, as in the imagined case; but that there has been similar progress in a direction in which similar results are the inevitable ultimate.

The investiture of the Post Office Department with arbitrary censorship over the press, began (as we have indicated in our suppositions that such a censorship probably would begin), with legislation against such postal matter as was most intensely offensive to public morals. Obscene letters and papers were declared to be unmailable and the act of mailing them a crime. To this innovation objection was difficult. No appeal to the principle of freedom of the press could be made which would not seem like an attempt at shielding vile offenses, with appeals to political traditions and abstractions—like opposing "mere generalizations" or theories of government to actual immoralities. Under cover of the silence which decency thus imposed, the postal censorship thus gained a foothold.

Then further steps were taken. The ban of unmailability was extended to mail matter in furtherance of frauds. Decency did not impose silence here, but what could be said against laws for the suppression of fraud? Nothing that would not make the objector seem to be an apologist for actual crime on pretense of devotion to a mere "theory of liberty."

Nor was much difficulty encountered in extending the postal censorship against obscene and fraudulent mail matter to mail matter in connection with lotteries. Public opinion had become ripe for excluding that business from its old place in the category of the legitimate, and objections to this extension of the censorship were rebuked as sympathetic with lotteries, instead of being accorded a fair hearing in the interest of freedom of the press.

While censorial statutes were accumulating, criminal prosecution which never got before the highest court were building up a mass of precedents, and rules and rulings of the Postal Department were establishing censorial lines of administrative procedure which have crystallized with time. And so it has come about that the postal department has acquired and is actually exercising the ominous censorial power to which we invite attention.

Upon decrees sent out from a bureau at Washington, all their correspondence is withheld from individuals, on the charge, established before no judicial tribunal, that at some time in the past they have solicited correspondence through the mails for purposes of fraud; and legitimate periodicals are suppressed, on pretense that they contain obscene language or sentiments. In none of these cases is the alleged offender given a jury trial, in none does his case come before a judicial tribunal, in all his nearest approach to a trial is before attaches of the censoring bureau which makes the charge, and in some the specific accusations are withheld from him.

With the details of one of these cases of newspaper suppression we have been at the pains to make ourselves acquainted. It is the case of LUCIFER (p. 242), a Chicago publication, issues of which have but recently been suppressed by the postal department. Our information relates to a previous suppression for the same alleged cause, and not to a recent one. Whether the latter would prove to be similar to the former we do not know, nor do we regard it as important to the point under consideration, which is not the propriety or impropriety of suppression in a particular case, but the danger of suppression in this manner in any case. As the instance to which our information relates illustrates the tendency toward a censorship of the press, it is sufficient for the purpose in hand.

Our inquiry into the matter began with the following letter of January 27, 1904, to the postmaster at Chicago:

"I am informed that the Chicago office stopped the transportation as second-class matter of a Chicago weekly called LUCIFER, the issue of December 17; that the reason given was violation of section 497 of Postal Laws and Regulations; that nothing in apparent violation of that section appeared in the issue in question; and that your office refuses definite information. Will you kindly inform me, for public use, what the specific offense of the issue in question was?"

In his reply of January 29, the Chicago postmaster courteously stated that the Chicago office had not originated the act of suppression, but had merely obeyed orders from Washington. He wrote:

"The issue of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER dated Dec. 17, '03, was refused admittance to the mails by direction of the Department at Washington, which ruled that matter in that edition was in violation of section 497 of the post office laws and regulations. Under date of Dec. 19, '03, the publisher was advised to this effect."

It will be observed that the Chicago postmaster did not deny that specific information of his offense had been withheld from the accused publisher, and that he did not give the information asked for in the letter to which his was in reply, namely—the specific offense. In this reticence he was doubtless, as events subsequently indicated, obeying orders from Washington. It was also to be observed that the publisher was not notified of the suppression until two days after his date of publication.

Having learned from the Chicago postmaster that he had acted under orders from Washington, and been tactfully though courteously refused information as to the specific offense of LUCIFER, we extended our inquiry to the Postmaster General in a letter of February 13, 1904. In replying by letter of March 2, 1904, the First Assistant Postmaster General wrote:

"I have received your letter of February 13, addressed to the Postmaster General, in reference to the exclusion from the mails of a publication entitled LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. The issue of December 19 contained matter which is unmailable under section 497, Postal Laws and Regulations, and therefore the Postmaster at Chicago was instructed to treat copies of that issue in his office in the same manner as other unmailable matter is treated."

Still we had failed to get information of the specific charge against LUCIFER, sufficient to enable us by examining the paper to form a judgment as to the official good faith of its suppression; and from an examination of the whole paper we had been unable to discover anything apparently justifying the charge of violating the postal section referred to. Accordingly we asked of the Postmaster General, by letter of March 14, 1904, that he do us the favor of indicating—

"the particular article or articles, by their titles or otherwise, which are regarded by the Department as unmailable under section 497? If you could indicate the particular paragraphs of the articles that are regarded as unmailable I should be obliged?"

In answer to that inquiry the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General, in a letter of March 29 wrote:

"You ask that the particular article to which exception was taken by the Post Office Department be pointed out to you. If you will kindly call upon our Inspector in charge at Chicago, who has the copy of the paper to which you refer, that officer will be able to comply with your request."

An effort to act upon this suggestion, and the result, are described in a letter of June 13, 1904, to the Postmaster General, in which, after a recital of previous correspondence, we wrote:

"There seems to be some misunderstanding, possibly on my own part, though I do not see how I am at fault. In reference to your Acting First Assistant's letter, I have called on the inspector in charge at Chicago and shown him your Acting First Assistant's letter. After reading it he told me that he could not supply me with the information because his assistant, Mr. McAfee, in whose charge the matter had been, was then out of the city, but that upon the return of Mr. McAfee he, the Chief Inspector, would notify me and supply me with the information. Accordingly a few days later a messenger called at my office, and, I being out, left word for me to call up Mr. McAfee by telephone. When I did so, Mr. McAfee was out of his office. When I did so again, the next day, he had gone out of the city. But on the latter occasion the chief clerk in the Inspector's office, learning my identity and knowing my object, informed me that the Chicago office cannot furnish me with the requested information. He explained that the suppression of LUCIFER under section 497 had not taken place under the initiative of the Chicago office, but had been ordered by the First Assistant Postmaster General, and that the Chicago office does not know what the objectionable matter was. In answer to my further inquiry he assured me, but with entire courtesy, that I might regard this reply as official and treat it accordingly. I am therefore under the necessity of again troubling your office in this matter. Will you kindly arrange in some proper and convenient way to supply me, for legitimate newspaper use, with the information I am seeking, namely, what are the particular articles, designating them if possible by their titles, on account of which the Post Office Department suppressed the issue of December 17, 1903, of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, of Chicago, as unmailable under section 497 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, and what are the particular paragraphs of such articles in which the objectionable matter is to be found."

No attention having been paid to this inquiry, after the lapse of more than a month, we addressed the Postmaster General, by letter of July 22, 1904, offering to forward a copy of our letter of the 13th of June if the original had failed to reach the Department. Still without reply, on the 19th of August, 1904, we wrote again to the Postmaster General, referring to our two previous letters and asking:

"Will you kindly give me the information requested in those letters, or advise me of the time when you can probably do so, if delay is necessary."

This request brought a reply from the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General, dated August 25, 1904, as follows:

"I have received your letter of the 19th instant calling attention to the fact that yours of June 13 had not been answered. Replying specifically to your inquiry, I have to state that the article on page* . . . and the article on page* . . . are, in the opinion of this Department, offensive under the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1888."

The reply gives no indication of the paragraph or paragraphs of the articles mentioned as containing the matter which in the opinion of the postal censor is unmailable, although this information was distinctly requested. We are obliged, therefore, if we would examine into the good faith of the censor, to consider the articles as a whole, word by word, thought by thought, from first word to last. This necessity is in itself significant of the arbitrary and secretive methods of the Department in passing upon questions involving freedom of publication.

Upon examination of the articles we failed to find anything, either in the thought alone or the phrase alone, which could be condemned by the ordinary standards of decency. While it is true that the colloquial phrasing is so ill-adapted to the sociological subject discussed as to offend good taste, taste is not yet subject to postal censorship. And while neither the subject nor the phrasing would be appropriate at a young people's party, this is no test of postal propriety.

The subject matter, considered by itself, is a legitimate one

*We omit the page numbers and the titles of the two articles which the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General gave in his letter. Our reason for the omission is that such a publication here might subject this issue of The Public to suppression by order of the postal censor bureau. The same Act of Congress by authority of which LUCIFER was censored for publishing those articles, provides also that "notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom or by what means an "obscene . . . publication of an indecent character" "may be obtained," is itself "non-mailable matter." Since the censors have already decided that the articles in question are obscene and indecent, they might decide that the naming of them by title and page in connection with the name of the publication in which they appeared, is a notice making the paper publishing it also guilty under the statute and therefore subject to suppression. Were they to so decide, they could suppress this issue of The Public, and we should be without protection or redress or any power to get a judicial trial. Inasmuch, therefore, as that part of the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General's letter which we have excised in quoting it above, is not absolutely necessary for the information of our readers, we prefer to avoid an unnecessary risk of censorship, by omitting it.

for public discussion among adults; and, expressed in philosophical phrasing, it could not possibly be objected to as salacious.

The phrasing, considered by itself, is not out of the common in the current literature of fiction. If any well-known novelist had put these two articles, thought by thought and word by word, into the mouths of characters in a problem novel, it is almost inconceivable that any publishing house, other than the American Tract Society, would have suppressed them; and if the postal censors had condemned them as obscene by excluding the novels from the mails, a cry of derision would have echoed from one end of the country to the other.

The inference seems to us unavoidable, that the issue of LUCIFER of December 17, 1903, was excluded from the mails, not because of any violation of the postal statute, but because it advocated doctrines of social life at variance with those to which the postal censors are professedly devoted. In other words, it was suppressed, not for decency's sake, but for opinion's sake.

With the opinions intended to be censored by the suppression of LUCIFER, we are entirely out of sympathy. Were they up for discussion under circumstances demanding our participation, we should emphatically condemn them—not because they are unconventional, but because we believe them to be unsound. But the question here is not whether they are unsound. It is whether their discussion shall be forbidden.

On that issue we yield to no one in demanding the fullest freedom of discussion for every debatable question. Nothing but error can suffer from honest debate. And while we recognize the propriety as to taste, and the decency as to morals, of limiting discussions of some subjects, not only conventionally, but by law if necessary, to appropriate occasions, we do not regard the use of the mails for the distribution of any discussion whatever, for adult readers, and in good faith, as a violation of the proprieties of discussion. We do regard the denial of their use for such purposes as a menace to one of the most important safeguards of liberty, and an obstruction to the most important promoter of progress.

Yet we hesitate to denounce the postal censor for suppressing a paper for its opinions. To denounce him for that might be quite unjust. He only suppressed disagreeable opinions, and that is what most men would do who have the power. It is what the censors of the Czar do, when they forbid publication of the proceedings of a national congress. It is what our own censors in the Philippines did, when they forbade the publication of the Declaration of Independence. It is what we ourselves might be tempted to do if we were at the head of the postal censor bureau—since the opinions as to marriage which LUCIFER advocates are repugnant to our views. If we had the power as censor to read "offensive to the statute" into LUCIFER'S opinions, or into those of any other periodical whose opinions on social philosophy, religion or politics we reject, we might give way to the temptation to which the postal censor appears to have succumbed in LUCIFER'S case.

But all this is one of the very reasons why powers of censorship, even for the best of purposes, and though reposed in persons of liberal disposition, are dangerous powers.

Power fattens upon what it feeds on. Little by little, from suppressing evil reading to suppressing that which is doubtful, it advances to the suppression of unpopular opinions, and then to those that are popular; and it makes its advances so insidiously that all freedom of opinion is throttled by censors before the people realize it has been assailed.

That the point of suppressing unpopular opinions in one branch of social philosophy has already been reached, is evident from the circumstances of the LUCIFER case which we describe above.

Here is a publication depending for existence, as all others do, upon regularity of mail circulation. Without notice, accusation, specification, trial or hearing of any sort, a regular issue, the full edition, is confiscated by a local postmaster upon orders from the censor at Washington. After this suppression, the publisher is notified of it, but information as to the specific fact upon which the arbitrary action was based is withheld. He is told he has violated a particular postal law, but he is not told how he has done it. Nor does he get a hearing even on the vague general charge of which he is advised. The action is as arbitrary as such actions are in Russia. In Russia, indeed, the censor is more considerate. He lamp-blacks objectionable articles and circulates the rest of the paper, but our censor suppresses the whole edition, the "good" along with the "bad." And after the edition has been suppressed, another paper, interested in sounding an alarm if freedom of the press has been bureaucratically assailed, is trifled with by the censors for months, in its efforts to discover the specific offense for which the suppressed paper was suppressed, only to learn finally that it was for publishing two articles, only the titles of which are given, and in which, however offensive they may be to good taste, even a prude could hardly find material for specifications on a charge of immorality.

A censorship which can maintain this attitude toward freedom of the press respecting one subject of discussion, will have little difficulty in speedily advancing its meddlesome jurisdiction to other subjects.

The real issue here, let us repeat—and it will bear repetition again and again—is not the legal offensiveness of the particular articles noted above. That issue is important only for its bearing upon the point of the good faith of the censor. The real issue is the wisdom of allowing any official to deny mailing facilities to anything whatever which is otherwise mailable, merely upon his own judgment, as a censor, of the morality of the intelligence it conveys or the opinions it expresses.

Granted that some publications ought to be excluded, the power of discrimination cannot safely be entrusted to an administrative official. A bureau of administration with authority to exclude matter from the mails with reference to the intelligence or the opinions it conveys, will inevitably grow into a bureau of dangerous censorship.

For offenses against the purity of the mails the only safe remedy is the one that is applied to purity in every other connection—to the legitimate method which has been sanctioned and approved by long usage in English-speaking countries; and this is to punish offenders after they, having had an opportunity to be heard upon specific charges, have been convicted by a jury of their fellow citizens.

If opinions in this country are to stand or fall upon reason and free discussion, the present postal censorship must be abolished. So long as publication through the mails can be denied arbitrarily by an administrative bureau of the government, the discussion of conflicting opinions is hampered.

Even the sentiment of fair play, entirely apart from all considerations of a free press, demands the abolition of this censorship. So long as an administrative officer can withdraw mailing rights from a publication for any offense whatever, without an opportunity for the publisher to be heard in his own defense before an impartial tribunal, fair play is impossible. Though we deny mailing rights to indecent publications, fair play demands that the person accused of the offense, and whose personal and property rights are involved in the accusation, shall have the opportunity he is guaranteed in all other cases to convince his fellow citizens that his publication is not indecent. It is his right to be judicially heard in his own defense.

Instances like that of the suppression of LUCIFER by postal censorship point so directly and unmistakably to great injustice and public danger that any fair-minded man may see it and every patriotic man ought to resent it. No matter what one's opinion of any paper and its teachings may be, there should be but one opinion of a postal organization which permits in any case what was done in that case, and this should be an opinion of unqualified condemnation.

The confiscation by postal clerks, of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censor, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country. Any law that authorizes it should be swept from the statute books.

The only difference between such a power and that of Russian censorship is a difference neither in kind nor degree. It is

Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

T. M. Watson, Whitewater, Wis.—I enclose my second 25-cent piece, as promised, to help sustain you in your tribulations. I most sincerely hope all your subscribers and friends will remember to make little remittances from time to time, to encourage you in your struggles.

Gertie Vose, Home, via Lakebay, Wash.—Your latest trouble is certainly provoking much thought and heated discussions, which I believe will end in good work. Last Sunday, at our park meeting, Lois Waisbrooker read a prose-poem of her own composition, entitled "Freedom's Martyrs," which went through the audience like a thunderbolt. Tears streamed from many eyes, applause nearly shook the ground, and the deepest emotions were stirred in every breast. In such times one seems almost incapable of expressing one's indignation at the powers that ride rough-shod over the really pure and innocent ones, allowing the widest scope to degenerates—those with arrested mentalities. Wish you could spend a year at Home. We certainly have a good thing here—no angels or heaven, but just good warm comrades. Inclosed is $1 for subscription to LUCIFER.

F. A. M. Cook, M. D., Elm Place, R. R. 3, Columbus, Kan.—I am going to christen my new mail box by renewing my subscription to LUCIFER. It is surprising to me that men and women who claim to be intelligent do not think the human race need to be instructed in the science most essential to life. Stock and plants and fruit are improved; books, essays, and lectures are the proper thing on that subject; but boys and girls are not considered worthy of any improvement. They must not be taught that they have in their make-up organs which make them grand and noble by a proper use, or destroy them physically and mentally by abuse of the same. Inclosed find $1.50; the dollar for LUCIFER and the 50 cents for you, with the wish it was so many dollars.

Arthur Wastall, 3 Amalinda Road, East London, Cape Colony.—I thank you for letting me know what is happening. I received last week the Free Speech League's circular apprising me that trial would take place 1st June. I mailed them 30 shillings last week on behalf of two friends and myself. The one is a Frenchman here in East London, and the other an Australian lady. Both know you through me and admire your pluck and outspokenness. Lady Florence Dixie has always been a true friend of progress. She is well known in England to dietetic and anti-vivisection reformers, and used to help the Natural Food propaganda when I was conducting it. Such broad-mindedness is refreshing wherever found, but especially in aristocratic circles, where one scarcely looks for it.

J. W. Gott, Bradford, England—Your trial took place under a judge and jury who have done you a great injustice, which I hope will be righted in the higher court. I am glad to see you bear it with dignity and with the scorn such treatment deserves.

J. Allen Evans, Box 923, Cripple Creek, Colo.—I herewith enclose $1 to pay for "Thoughts of a Fool," already received and read. I've read many books on the sex question, but never read anything equal to "Thoughts of a Fool." The author is only a fool in the eyes of a time-serving, conventional society. She is not only a brilliant, but a fine, good woman; any radical sending for her book who does not say that it is worth its weight in gold can enclose the book to me and I'll send them the dollar for it. Don't fail to read the "Thoughts of a Fool"—it's the treat of a lifetime. It would be a grand old world to live in if all women were like the authoress.

The Anthony Comstock legislation, as interpreted by the courts and the postal department, is entitled to no more respect than the acts of Parliament which our Revolutionary forefathers defied, or the pro-slavery statutes and decisions which the friends of liberty violated and apropos of which Wendell Phillips declared, "The chief use of good laws is to teach men to trample bad laws under their feet." We are as bound to break bad laws as we are to keep good laws. Whenever human law and divine law become irreconcilable, the human law, not the divine law, should be violated. "We ought to obey God rather than men." The leaders and saviors of men have often been law-breakers. Moses, Daniel, Peter, Huss, Luther, Tell, Kossuth, Bozzaris, George Washington and John Brown were law-breakers. Thank God for the brave men and women who break bad laws for conscience sake!—Doctor Jeremiah Justice, Mount Sterling, Illinois.

George Brown, Philadelphia, Pa.—I cannot begin to tell you how entirely satisfied I am with you and what you do. The simplicity and dignity with which you meet and pass through such trying ordeals charms me out of myself. You at least have no "murdered ideals" to mourn over. You are, I think, the only man who has impressed me as being in yourself greater than the ideals for which we both stand. I do hope there will be some way of keeping you out of prison, for you are an old man and the physical strain might be too much for you; otherwise I should not so much fear, for I know that you will bear it to the confusion of your enemies. Do you know, I envy you the many honors that are being heaped upon you by those who seek to perpetuate ancient and hoary injustices? But I freely add mine to the many good wishes and kind thoughts that will go with you into the prison cell, should you have to go. You have the certainty that that cell should be the brightest and cheerlest place on earth could we but make it so. I send you a dollar on subscripton, and will send more soon. Of course I want you to send LUCIFER, even though I am a little slow in remitting; I will pay some time.

Philip G. Peabody, 15 Court Square, Boston, Mass.—Like other lovers of justice, I honor you, and despise the politicians who are so insolently interfering with your and my rights, more than I can say. This outrage on you has done more to destroy my patriotism than anything that ever came into my life. I regret that I have ceased to be a good and loyal United States citizen. N. B.—The use of the word "American," to indicate a citizen of our country, is a sample of the arrogant impudence of the group of politicians at present "running" the country.—It gave me much pleasure to send to Dr. Foote, Jr., $25 for your defense. Not seeing it credited in "Lucifer's Helpers," on page 346, I write, as requested.—You have now, as always, my best wishes. To say that you are as far above those who are persecuting you, as Jesus Christ was above the men who crucified him, would be to pay you a very small and imperfect compliment.

WHAT WE LIVE FOR.

What live we for but this?
Into the soul to breathe the soul of sweetness;
The stunted growth to rear to fair completeness;
Drown sneers with smiles, kill hatred with a kiss;
And to the sandy soil bequeath the fame
That flowers bloomed behind us whence we came."
—John Stuart Blackie.

And why not, too, before us as we rove,
Planting the rosebush or the nutty grove;
To feed the hungry and affection clothe
With beauty's swaying lines?
Yes ever onward, loving as we go—
One hand to those above us, one to those below;
Learning the good and teaching, thus we grow. A. L. W.

In LUCIFER No. 1041, under the head, "Preliminary Skirmishing," was given some account of a recent interview between the federal district attorney, the postal inspector, R. M. McAfee, and the editor of LUCIFER, in which interview reference was made to the closing scene in the trial of this same editor in the Federal Court, Topeka, Kansas, fifteen years ago, charged with sending "obscene literature" through the United States mails. As this same editor is again a prisoner, under bonds, accused of a like offense against the federal statutes, here in Chicago, and soon to be put on trial once more, it is thought fitting and proper to reproduce in this week's LUCIFER a statement of that closing scene, and to make it the introduction to a brief history of the federal statutes under which the present and the previous prosecutions against LUCIFER and its editor have been instituted.

THE PRISONER AND THE JUDGE: A REMINISCENCE.

Under date of May 1, 1890, fifteen years ago, and a little more, the Topeka, Kan., "Daily Journal" contained the following item of news:

"Judge Foster late yesterday afternoon passed sentence upon Moses Harman for publishing in his paper, LUCIFER, at Valley Falls, and causing to be circulated in the mails obscene and indecent matter. Hon. David Overmyer attempted to secure a new trial for the defendant, but the court overruled the motion. Harman refused to stand up when ordered by the court to do so, but his attorney lost no time in getting him upon his feet. When asked whether he had anything to say before sentence was passed upon him, he said he had, and asked how much time the court would give him. Judge Foster allowed him ten minutes, which he consumed in endeavoring to show the court that he was a martyr to opinion's sake and the cause of emancipating mankind, especially women, from certain social evils. At the conclusion of his talk, Judge Foster told the prisoner that he had a few things to say. The first was that the prisoner could not plead martyrship to decency for indecency. He said the effect of the teachings of Harman was bad, whether he intended them to be good or bad, and that if intention to commit crime alone should be deemed crime, there would be little need of courts. He said that the course of the prisoner throughout the trial had been rebellious and defiant, and that it had not appealed to the leniency or mercy of the court. He had seen circus performers stick their heads into lions' mouths, but he had never seen them have the temerity to twist the beasts' tails or kick them in the ribs while performing the risky act. [Laughter.] He then sentenced Harman to serve five years in the Kansas penitentiary and to pay a fine of $300."

Explanatory of this news item, the following paragraphs, copied from LUCIFER of May 16, same year, will perhaps be not without interest those who know, or who do not know, that the same individual is again a federal prisoner, expecting soon to be tried before a similar court on a very similar charge:

"THE PRISONER'S TALK TO THE COURT."

"Judge Foster and Gentlemen."

FOSTER: "You will address the court alone."

"Well, then, I will address the court alone. I wish to say, to begin with, that I cherish no ill will, no vengeful feelings, toward this court, nor against the prosecution, not even against the district attorney, Mr. Ady, nor Mr. McAfee, the postal inspector. I recognize that all men, the court and prosecution included, are the creatures, the victims of heredity and environment. We all move along the lines of the least resistance, and when it comes to the last analysis of actions, I simply recognize that we all do what we do and as we do simply because we must. Therefore, I see no rational ground for entertaining feelings of revenge or hate toward this court or toward the prosecutors. Under like circumstances and with like heredity I would have done just as they have done.

"But while cherishing no vengeful feelings toward anyone in this matter, I wish now and here to enter my earnest and solemn protest against being reckoned a criminal and against being punished as a criminal. I protest because the essential elements of crime are lacking in my case. The first and chief element of crime in any case is the intention—the design or desire to do an injury to some one. I testified on the witness stand that I had no such intention when publishing the indicted articles, but on the contrary my intention was a good and benevolent one. I had heard the agonized cries of my sisters—my sisters by the ties of our common humanity—saying, 'Speak for us. Make known the wrongs, the outrages, of which we are the helpless victims. In the name of and for the sake of the most sacred rights, interests and hopes of the human race, present and future, speak out! and speak in words so plain that all can understand.' In person and by letter these appeals have been made to me for many years past and I have simply obeyed the calls. I have protested against these wrongs, these outrages upon women, in the marital or conjugal relation, and have allowed others to do the same, through the columns of my paper, and have allowed them to say their say in their own way. If this is a crime, then I confess myself a criminal. But, as before said, the main element of crime is lacking in my case. My motive, my intention, was to benefit my fellow-beings, not to injure them. In the absence of overwhelming proof to the contrary, I maintain that my own solemn affirmation should be accepted as sufficient proof of the rectitude of my motives. The prosecution have brought no proof to show that my motives were bad. The witnesses for the prosecution itself have testified to my general good character, to my honesty, my industry and purity of life.

"Not only is the first and chief element necessary to the conviction of crime lacking, but the second, also, viz.: the finding of some one who has been injured by any act of mine. No poro fhas been adduced that any man, woman or child has been hurt by any act of mine. No effort has been made to produce such evidence. For these two reasons, if for no other, I maintain that the prosecution have utterly failed to make out a case against me, and in the absence of real grounds of prosecution the case becomes simply one of persecution for opinion's sake. The so-called crime of 'obscenity' is not a crime per se, not a crime in the nature of things. It is a law-made or constructive crime, like blasphemy, heresy or witchcraft. It is a matter of opinion solely. Obscenity has no existence except in the mind that perceives it as such. To my mind the Markland and Whitehead letters are not obscene, and there are hundreds if not thousands of good women and men who agree with me in this opinion. Among these is Lucinda B. Chandler of Chicago, who for many years has been president of the Moral Education Society, with headquarters at that city. A 'Remonstrance and Petition' setting forth the opinion that the effect of the publication of these indicted letters is 'good and only good,' was drawn up and signed by eleven well-known lady writers and lecturers upon reform subjects, and copies of this remonstrance and petition were signed by many hundreds of women all over the land, some of which petitions I now hold in my hand and many more have been forwarded to this court. I have also received for publications some dozens of 'open letters' to the court protesting against this prosecution, and asking that it be dismissed and the defendants allowed to go free. Some of these letters I have forwarded to the court, some have been published, and many have been neither published nor forwarded.

"Besides these letters to the court I have received scores if not hundreds of letters from women—wives and mothers—saying that in their opinion the indicted articles were not obscene; some of these mothers saying that their daughters should have the benefit of reading the indicted articles, including the lately indicted O'Neill letter, so that being forewarned against such horrible abuses of sex, they may the better avoid and defend themselves against such abuses and against such human monsters as are therein described. I protest against the law under which these prosecutions have been brought against me. I protest against it because of its unconstitutionality, and because of its liability to be used for purposes of oppression and invasion of personal right. While I do not think that the indicted articles come within the purview of this law as it now stands, I look upon it as a survival or revival of the barbarous laws of the middle or dark ages. The founders of this government intended it to be a government for the protection of personal and citizen rights only. It was not designed to be a paternal government, not designed to regulate the religion or the morals of the citizens. You, Judge Foster, doubtless remember the efforts that were made, thirty or forty years ago, to induce congress to pass laws excluding 'incendiary literature' from the United States mails. It was urged, and with much plausibility, too, that such laws were necessary to the protection of the lives and property of people living in the slaveholding states. But congress very properly refused to listen to these requests and petitions. They knew that the effect of such a law would be an abridgment of the liberty of speech and of press, which abridgment is clearly forbidden by the constitution of the United States, and they knew, too, that it was impossible to so define and limit such a law that it would not be stretched to cover a multitude of abuses and discriminations. The same arguments hold against the so-called Comstock postal law. While the aim of congress in its enactment may have been a good and benevolent one, it was impossible to so define and guard against abuse that it would not be used to deprive the citizen of his constitutional and natural rights. In fine, I protest against the laws under which I have been prosecuted because of their un-American character, and because of their inherent despotism. We, as a nation, are rapidly drifting toward Russianism in our governmental methods. In fact, Russian censorship of press and mails is better in some respects than American censorship. In Russia no newspaper, or other publication, is admitted to the mails until it has been passed upon by the public censor, so that the publisher of any edition of any paper, book or pamphlet, knows, or may know, beforehand, exactly what to expect; whereas, here, in free (?) America, it is simply impossible to know beforehand what to expect. Here, the censor gets in his work after the mailing, not before, and it then depends wholly upon what may be in the mind—the opinion—of the court before whom the case may be brought, as to whether any publication is within the meaning of the law or not, and if the court rules adversely there is no escape from punishment.

"The time—ten minutes—is about up. I close by repeating my protest against being reckoned a criminal. I have tried to live an honest life—have tried to do all the good I can in the world and as little harm as possible. The sun of my life—my active life—may now be setting. So let it be. I submit."

As addenda to this report of the prisoner's talk to the court, these paragraphs follow:

"While I do not say that the above is an exact report of the ten-minute talk to the judge, when asked by him if I had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon me, yet it is very nearly correct in all important particulars. I had prepared something different in many particulars, expecting to be allowed twenty or thirty minutes' time, and when ruled to ten minutes, I made no use of my prepared notes, but went at it in a random, off-hand manner.

"My meaning, of course, in the last words to the judge, was that I submit to overpowering force, just as I would submit to an absolute monarch, like the czar of Russia, with a million of soldiers at his back. I submit because there is no alternative, not because I recant anything, not because I repent anything, not be cause I am willing to make any concessions or promises as to my future conduct.

"The management of the defense was mainly a failure, but I hope not entirely so. Hoping that all will yet be well, I bid the readers of LUCIFER an affectionate good-bye until I get a chance to write again. M. HARMAN.

"[This is written on the point of starting to the Lansing penitentiary.—M. H.]"

Some of LUCIFER's readers of this present date, fifteen years later, may perhaps be curious to know whether I paid the three hundred dollar fine and whether I served out the five years in the Kansas penitentiary. If so, I answer, No—I did not pay the fine, nor did my friends pay the sum demanded of me by the court as pay for the blessed privilege of being harassed for three years preceding the trial, by the government officials, and for the great privilege of going to prison for five years—to save the honor and purity of the United States mail service. But while the technical fine of three hundred dollars was not paid, the costs of defense, to myself and friends, during those three years and more, culminating with the trial and sentence, were far in excess of the sum named as fine; to say nothing of loss of time in court attendance at distant cities, and not to mention mental worry and neglect of business.

Nor did I serve out the five years' sentence in the "pen." The storm of indignation that swept over the entire country, extending also to foreign lands, wherever the facts became known, against a sentence wholly unprecedented in severity in modern times for a similar alleged offense, resulted in my release, on technical grounds, after confinement of four months, Judge Caldwell of the Federal Circuit court, on motion of Hon. David Overmyer of the Topeka bar, overruled the decision of Judge Foster and sent the case back to the District court "to be dealt with according to law"—sent it back, not because of severity of sentence, not because of grave errors in the trial (of which there were many), but because of a technicality that seems laughable in its triviality and simply amazing to those who do not know that the administration of "law" in this country is mainly a matter of antiquated forms and customs, trivial, if not senseless, in their nature, in which wilderness of forms and customs, precedents and usages, such little matters as justice, truth and human rights are lost sight of, overlooked, ignored;—I repeat, to those who do not know what the administration of "law" really is it would seem simply amazing that a learned and dignified judge of the United States Circuit court could find no better reason for my release than that Judge Foster had neglected the three short words, "at hard labor," when imposing upon me his prison sentence of five years. M. HARMAN.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

SOCIAL DESPOTISM OR SOCIAL DEMOCRACY?

It is of frequent occurrence that Socialists point out the postal system of the United States as an example of the application of their theory. This great national institution has a great deal more despotism and imperialism in its make up than a Social Democracy can have. Above everything else, Socialism stands for a tolerant as well as a democratic administration of the means of production and distribution. It is impossible, also, for a single industry to be operated in any sense on socialistic lines, surrounded by and constantly bombarded by capitalist institutions and business methods.

For the past few years there has been a studied and persistent attempt to bring even public ownership into disfavor. The express companies and other capitalist interests are doing all they can to destroy the effectiveness of the postal system and to make it unpopular with the masses. Recently the employes in the postal system attempted to relieve themselves from the low $600 a year salaries and to increase their pay through legislative enactment. They appealed, as we presumed every American citizen had a right to do, to the law-making body of the United States, to-wit, Congress. They organized for the purpose of acting as a unit. For this seeming offense the leaders of this organization lost their positions in the postal service and were given to understand by His Imperial Majesty, Theodore I., that when they wished any provisions made for their benefit, they would go to their master, the Postmaster General, and should not presume to petition the only body in the United States Government which has the right through legislation to increase their pay.

The railroads charge the government for the mail which they carry so much per pound and ton. They do not weigh the mail each day, but, every four years, a month is selected and the mail is weighed during that month, which is considered the average weight for the four years following. During this month which is selected for the weighing of the mails, the mail service is filled with pamphlets, leaflets, books and correspondence, which is run forward and backward from town to town, and this corrupt method of overloading the mails has been recognized by every observer in the country for the last twelve or fifteen years. The railroads rob the postal system right and left and the cheap barnacles and subsidized capitalist officeholders in the postal system either know the facts or are in a mental condition entirely unfit to serve any purpose except, perhaps; as inmates in a dope house, and even there their comatose condition might be disturbed by dreams.

Ordinarily, we would presume it a benefit to the public that any man should have the privilege of subscribing for a trade journal or a Socialist paper, and order it sent to his friends; but no, the lordly bureaucrats of the postal system will not permit it. You, Mr. Reader, have no postal right to subscribe for this paper and have it sent to a friend. Every man must pay for the paper that he receives. When a publisher presents his mailing list to the postal authorities, he must give assurance that every name represents an actual bona fide subscriber; that is, a man who personally has made a payment for the paper. We should think that the greater the amount of business that the postal system could secure, the better off it would be, but in order to assist the express companies and to bring public ownership in disrepute the postal authorities are of the opinion that the less mail they handle, the more the express companies will have, and private trust enterprises will thrive.

Wilshire published a magazine. He happened to have the personal pronoun "I" in certain parts of the magazine and he also had some "ideas," so an ex-railroad man, Mr. Madden, whom the capitalists recognized as a species who would make a good and servile lackey, was placed in the service (Third Assistant Postmaster General); he excluded Wilshire's magazine, which was thereafter published from Canada. The reason given by the postal authorities why they excluded this magazine was because he was exploiting his ideas. A very dangerous compound—"Ideas"—for nothing is more disturbing to a tyrant or an encroaching bureaucrat than "ideas," especially if they amount to anything.

Later on, this autocratic machine announced to several Socialist papers that they must not put in a subscription blank between their pages, and should desist from sending out bundle orders. This is a prescription in self-defense, for Socialism would make the postal system democratic as well as collective, and democracy is the daylight which makes some species creep into their holes.

A beet sugar journal published in Chicago was desirous of issuing a supplement to give data and information to the farmers who were growing beets, by which they could raise larger crops and a better quality of beets. Many engaged in the beet sugar enterprise desired to subscribe to these journals and have them sent to the farmers, but, lo and behold, the Great American Bureaucracy refused to permit the paper to be sent, because the beet sugar farmers themselves did not have sense enough to subscribe for a paper which they had never heard of, and which was adapted to their line of business.

A person with ordinary sense and reason would ask, "If the postal system is paid for sending these papers, why should it care who has subscribed or paid for them?" To understand the reason we will have to grasp the capitalist methods which are exercised to cripple not only the postal system but every other public enterprise, for the capitalist class does not propose to have its great trusts threatened by either a superior talent or better service in public enterprises.

The postal department has excluded LUCIFER from the mails. It is true that some articles in that paper would offend a hyper-orthodox and ossified Presbyterian—in fact, Babel's "Women," Louis H. Morgan's "Ancient Society" and much from Herbert Spencer, Darwin or Westermark would offend the same class of musty-minded people who were offended by LUCIFER. It is not necessary that any one should agree with Harman or his theories or the theories of those who write for his paper. We may differ with him, just as we differ with the Sultan of Turkey, or, if you please, with the ethical standard of the wealthy class of Americans who give a dowry with their daughters to a royal title, or as we differ with the ethics of the postal officers who permit the system to be openly pilfered and robbed by railroads and small grafters, and then stop magazines because they "exploit an idea." The postal system has singled out Harman's paper as the line of least resistance, because a very great number of people oppose Harman's views. The later issues of Harman's paper, which have been stopped from the mail privilege, were stopped purely for the reason that the postal authorities differed from Harman in opinion and not because LUCIFER was either immoral or lascivious. Louis F. Post, in a fifteen-column editorial, which is now published in pamphlet form by the "Public" (offices in the First National Bank Building, Chicago), has shown conclusively to any reasonable mind the extent of the censorship which now prevails in the United States and the great danger with which we are threatened, and the Socialists of this country should recognize this danger to their cause, for when liberty of the mail is denied to them, freedom of speech is to all purposes destroyed. Graft, running from the smallest petty business to the Senate chamber, will use means as immoral and debauching to perpetuate itself as the immorality of conditions which it has produced. It will use the postal system when deemed necessary to throttle all radical and progressive papers, and unless we are equal to the danger, at an early date, we will find born, in recent months, a postal censorship of despotic sizes in addition to government by injunction; imprisonment without trial by jury and without the witnesses being brought face to face with the accused; the use of the militia, the ousting of sheriffs and the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, as in Colorado, or, in other words, a state military despotism. And all this we will have crowned by a postal censorship which will crush free speech and free communication. We are moving to this goal at a most terrific pace. Those who are fighting against the Cæsars in the United States and who are in the Socialist party recognize the danger and the true enemy. They understand that the class which is predominant today controls the situation through private ownership of the means of production, and that this master class will use the corrupt United States Senator and smaller officeholders as lackeys and servants to perpetuate its unholy life.

While we fight for collectivism, let us double the blows for democracy in Socialism.—Seymour Stedman, in the "Chicago Socialist."

Ingersoll did not believe in "expurgated editions." He said: "If I were to edit the great books of the world, I might leave out some lines, and I might leave out the best. I have no right to make of my brain a sieve and say that only that which passes through belongs to the rest of the human race." These lines are appropriately quoted by the London Freethinker in view of the fact that "edited" editions of Ingersoll's lectures are being published in England. The "editors" say they have omitted the first portion of the preface to the Mistakes of Moses. It is in the "first portion" that Ingersoll condemns the unauthorized editions of his lectures that are "grossly and glaringly incorrect."—Truthseeker, (New York.)

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL" was sent to its subscribers several weeks ago—that is, to the greater part of them, but it is quite possible that, harassed as we have been, some names have been overlooked. We shall be very glad to correct all errors as soon as the mistake, or omission, is brought to our notice.

EXPLANATORY.

Again LUCIFER's readers have good reason to wonder why their "Son of the Morning" is so slow in rising. It is the same old story. While attending strictly to our own business, meddling with the affairs of no other person, or persons, we have been again "held up" and deprived of liberty and property without recourse, with no opportunity to defend our right to that which our labor and that of our friends had produced.

Briefly as may be, the history of LUCIFER, whole number 1046, is this:

About August 25 the issue numbered as above and dated Aug. 17, was sent to press, containing among other articles, a second stirring "appeal" from the Free Speech League, entitled, "Shall Liberty Be Murdered in the Land!" Also containing reprint of a long editorial by Louis F. Post, in the "Public," Chicago, entitled "Our Advancing Postal Censorship," in which the whole question is treated in a manner truly masterful; a manner showing thorough research into the origin, history and scope of the postal censorship in the United States—such treatment as has been attempted by no other writer, so far as I know. This article occupies fifteen columns of the weekly "Public," dated August 12, and is now also printed in pamphlet form.

Another leading selection in LUCIFER, No. 1046, is an editorial in the "Woman's Journal," Boston, by the Assistant Editor, Alice Stone Blackwell, entitled "The Post Office and Free Speech," in which the writer criticises in strong, yet temperate, words, the action of the Postoffice Department in denying the right of LUCIFER to mailing privileges.

These are the longest articles in No. 1046. When a deposit of the edition was made in due form at the Chicago postoffice, and the question asked whether it would be admitted to the mail, the reply came with reasonable promptness that it would not be admitted until the Washington office could be heard from; Mr. Hull indicating that, in his opinion, certain paragraphs in the selection from "The Woman's Journal," also an editorial paragraph, entitled "How the United States Government Convicts Itself," were "unmailable."

We waited about ten days and were then officially informed from Washington that the postmaster at Chicago is instructed to deny mailing privileges to LUCIFER, No. 1046. No specific reason for this ruling was vouchsafed to us, and hence we are left to infer that the Washington office concurs in the opinion of Superintendent Hull at Chicago.

This ruling left us the option of sending out LUCIFER, 1046, to its subscribers in a mutilated or expurgated form, else not to send it as a newspaper at all, leaving to the officials—the public servants, here and at Washington—the honor and glory of arbitrarily suppressing and confiscating still another edition of LUCIFER, simply because of a difference of opinion as to the effect of the moral influence or tendency of certain paragraphs upon the minds of the readers.

Just here it would be well, no doubt, that I stop—yielding the floor, or platform, to others, but the temptation to ask a few questions is too strong to be resisted.

Query 1: When, in the history of the world, when has there been an instance in which a people claiming to be self-owning, self-ruling, have delegated to their employes, their public servants, powers so magisterial, so ministerial, so autocratic, so thoroughly despotic, as those now exercised by the public servants in the United States, whose business it is to carry our letters, our papers, our books and pamphlets from place to place, to save us the trouble of carrying them for ourselves?

Two. Would any self-respecting man of business, or business firm, for a single moment consent to retain an employe on his or its payroll who would attempt the exercise of powers such as those now unblushingly claimed and exercised daily by the United States carriers? (The Postmaster General is simply a carrier, unless by perversion of the original intent and purpose of his powers and duties.) Would any self-respecting business man retain in his employ a servant who would claim and exercise powers that he himself—the principal—has no right to exercise or claim?

Does not the exercise of these imperialistic powers by the public servants show, as nothing else could show, that we have here in this country two very distinct classes of citizens, one of which—an employe class—has the right to own and read whatever books and papers it pleases, and a second class, an inferior class—and yet the real employer class—who have no such right? A class whose books and papers can be taken from the owner and destroyed without redress or compensation, whenever the first class, the employe class, decides that it is not good for the health of the said owners to read or own such books or papers?

Have we not in this a fulfillment of the doggerel verse attributed to James Russell Lowell, that runs something like this:

"You see, Biglow, 'tis true, that nat'ral rights hev riz'n, So's what a man now owns is his, but what's another man's ain't his'n!"

That is to say, if you happen to belong to a certain class of public servants you can call your books and papers your own, and do as you please with them, but if you are so unfortunate as to be nothing more than a citizen of the United States your books and papers are liable to be taken from you and destroyed, unless, perhaps, you have money enough, or "influence" enough, to secure the favor of some one elected or appointed to serve as a carrier of mails, or, perhaps, one elected or appointed to help in the administration of a judicial system whose basic principle is supposed to be EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL AND SPECIAL PRIVILEGES FOR NONE.

M. H.

Of our contributors once more the request is made that they will kindly bear with us awhile longer. Several very excellent contributed articles are now in type awaiting the light of print, and many more have been accepted and filed for publication. If there be any comfort in the knowledge that the editor's articles share much the same fate, our friends have that kind of consolation. For many weeks he has given way to others, especially—as in the present issue, to reprints of articles from contemporary journals, showing what some of our brother and sister editors think of the postal laws and their administration, in the United States.

THE LIBERATOR.

A new paper, "mainly devoted to revolutionary propaganda along lines of anarchistic thought," has been launched in Chicago—if the term "launch" is appropriate in this connection. The editor is Mrs. Lucy E. Parsons, whose address is 416 West Van Buren street. It is to be published by "The Liberator Publishing Group." Tobias Kleinman, secretary, 544 W. Twelfth street. Vol. 1, No. 1, is dated Sept. 3, 1905. It is a six-column folio sheet, well printed on good paper, and gives promise, judging from the initial number, that it will be conducted with ability and success—provided, of course, that the patrons thereof are able and willing to raise sufficient funds to defray current expenses.

Speaking for myself alone, knowing Mrs. Parsons personally—almost ever since the judicial murder of her husband, Albert Parsons, I can but wish her success in her new venture; the success that I feel reasonably sure she deserves, or will deserve.

HAIL LIBERATOR! May you be such in reality as well as in name. May you prove a worthy successor to your namesake—the journal for which you doubtless were named—the organ of the old-time abolitionists, whose editor was the immortal William Lloyd Garrison.

A LETTER from Jay Fox, for several years a prominent worker along radical lines in this city, tells us he is going to Home, Washington, to edit the "Demonstrator," which journal is not unknown to the readers of LUCIFER. As explained in the lines printed elsewhere in this issue, Brother Fox expects to make the "Demonstrator" something of a mouthpiece for trades unionism. Believing that however we may differ as to methods of work our ultimate aim is the same, the emancipation of the enslaved of all nations and climes, and of both sexes, I hereby extend to Brother Fox a hearty hand-clasp, and the very best of wishes for his success in the line of work he has chosen, and in his new field of endeavor.

HARMAN VERSUS ——

Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, in Chicago, is having trouble again with the postoffice authorities. He has printed matter to which the department at Washington or its branch in Chicago objects. Certain editions of his paper have been confiscated and destroyed. It does not seem clear just now with whom the demurrer originated. Harman's LUCIFER exists for the discussion of the pro and con of sex. Harman is clean. His work is always clean. It may be awkward. It may disregard the graces. It may go bolt straight when it might have gone around. It may be subject to deduction of both manner and matter. But it is clean. It could not be dirty. Harman does not contain the raw material of dirt. I have read him with attention. I am sure I know his point of view. It seems hard to believe he can be misunderstood. He is a preacher of continence. He is a disciple of restraint. It is easy to learn his a b c. Perhaps his restraint would not restrain. Perhaps Harman does not know anything about the sex question. Perhaps the department does not know anything about the sex question. Perhaps they both know something. Perhaps neither knows all. But the right to speak is prior to every right of right and wrong in thought. So Harman should speak. If his speech is invasive let the courts say so. So far the courts have not said so. Harman has been held up somewhere between his office and the courts. Harman has every right of first access to the courts. If this is not so then the republic is not so. Then the republic has misunderstood itself.

Every word ever spoken by Harman has been a word for temperance. Harman never says a word for the passions. He is always saying words for the soul. Harman knows that we come physically into this world by the gateway of sex. He wants to keep that gateway open and wants to maintain it pure. The question whether you disagree with him is another question. The question whether you like all his literary manners is another question. Harman proposes to make sex responsible as sex never has been responsible before. He has not argued for less law. He wants more law. Natural law. More natural law. Less oppression and more law. Harman does not mean license. His doctrine is very austere. It conserves sex. It does not dissipate sex. You think his philosophy wrong? Well—then you think it wrong. That is your option or mine. It does not matter who is right or who is wrong. It does not hurt even if both are wrong. The question is: Have we all an equal right to speak? If right alone has the right to speak how can right know it is right? Right is never right until it has answered all comers. Not answered them with soldiers, policemen and legislatures. Answered them with the spirit. Harman does not claim to be allowed to speak because he is right. He claims to be allowed to speak. He claims the first prerogative of citizenship in the republic. The right of speech.—Horace Traubel, in the "Conservator."

POSTAL CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS.

The question of the right of postoffice clerks to refuse to mail newspapers to subscribers because they find printed therein matter of which they and their employers in Washington do not approve, is assuming alarming proportions and has to be sternly met if there remains in the breast of Americans one spark of their boasted love of liberty. Are these mail-bag censors wiser in their generation than all the rest of mankind, that their word shall be law as to the fitness and propriety of subject matter and treatment of every topic under the sun? Is it to be supposed the ten thousand or one thousand subscribers to a news journal are all wrong in their choice of reading matter, and are to be set straight by a small group of men who happen for the time to be appointed to serve the people in the distribution of the mails? Where is the law that our servants are our masters? Let us, the people, set about it and do some "probing" on our own account.

Our "administration process" is an improvement on the kind in force in Russia. In that country the censors—who are not a clerical force appointed for other duties, with this most important matter a prerogative on the side—blacken the objectionable matter and do not assume to refuse the whole paper transmission by mail. In this "free" country, the officers of the post throw out the whole mail of subscribers, with no word of information to any one concerned as to what has been done with it—subscribers, advertisers, editors, readers, contributors, are all refused even this knowledge as to why the wares they have paid for do not arrive at their destination.

The fortnightly paper called LUCIFER, of which Moses Harman is editor, published in Chicago, has been held up for a third time, we believe, in this manner, the latest issue to be thus treated, bearing date August 5, 1905. The verdict of the people as to the charge of "obscenity" cannot be obtained, since to reprint the paragraphs in question would cause those papers to be thrown out of the mails, and few publishers can afford the loss it entails. This postal press-censorship law hedges against every possibility of finding out the facts in any case. It provides that "notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom, or by what means an obscene or other publication of an indecent character" may be obtained, etc., is itself "non-mailable matter." Thus, it is perceived, if "The Star" should ever mention that one paragraph is a quotation from Lady Florence Dixie in the Scottish Health Reformer, which strict and careful Scotland doesn't interfere with, that might be adjudged "obscene" and "Star" subscribers miss their paper.

One wonders when one reads "The Riddle of Heredity," by Rene Bache, in a late issue of the "Saturday Evening Post," that such unfair discrimination should have been made. One dares to tell about that, for it has passed the censors. It is an intimate description of the extensive institute for scientific experiment on Long Island, N. Y., made possible by the benefaction of Mr. Andrew Carnegie. Herein are experiments being made with forms of life from the moth to domestic animals to prove how strong is heredity, how its strength may be overcome or be made useful in the improvement of species. Says Rene Bache:

"Experiments with human beings, for obvious reasons, are difficult, but there are always plenty of guinea pigs, and, so far as matters of this sort go, what is true of a guinea pig, seems true of a boy or girl. This subject is in its infancy. Means may yet be found of influencing the sex in offspring," etc.

For a fact, if we were to be hanged if we did not say truly (being we were a postal clerk), which matter was most "obscene" —that quoted or that which was condemned—the "Saturday Evening Post" of June 17 would have gone into the dump.

But more than the question of "judgment" in such matters—even had we a bench of Solomons to do the censor act—is the question of principle and human rights under moral law, under United States law. Louis F. Post relates at length in the issue of "The Public," August 12th, how he took up the case of the suppression of LUCIFER in January, 1904, for reasons given in the following paragraph:

"The real issue here, let us repeat—and it will bear repetition again and again—is not the legal offensiveness of the particular articles noted above. That issue is important only for its bearing upon the point of the good faith of the censor. The real issue is the wisdom of allowing any official to deny mailing facilities to anything whatever which is otherwise mailable, merely upon his own judgment, as a censor, of the morality of the intelligence it conveys or the opinions it expresses."

The autocratic nature of this censorship is shown clearly and strongly by Mr. Post's experience in following up the previous case. He began his search for knowledge concerning the offense in January, 1904, and kept bombarding the postal authorities with letters, which brought the most evasive replies, in which Washington advised him to go to Chicago officials and Chicago officials sent him back to Washington. After eight months of persistent effort a copy of the offensive document was secured, but with no marked paragraphs, and Post was obliged, himself, to hunt out the "obscenity," and, alas, failed to find it!

Some light is shed upon this particular persecution by the reply of the Superintendent of Mails in Chicago when the editor, Mr. Harman, asked to have cited to him the matter which was declared indecent. The reply was: "Mr. Harman, if your ideas should prevail, society would be in a state of chaos." So it was heresy, a denial of the wisdom of some set ideas that now prevail, and not "obscenity" after all, that caused the authorities to interfere in this outrageous manner with a man's legitimate business. These government mail censors have been worsted once in the courts, and by a woman; now let the saviors of free speech and a free press come to the support of Mr. Harman. We may not—in fact, do not —agree with his ideas, but what of that? He has the God-given right to be heard, and no man nor government should be permitted to deny him that right.—San Francisco Star.

DUMB DOGS.

"We want no cowards in our land,
They will their colors fly."

The following is from the editor of a medical journal, the name of which I will not give, as it is a private letter. The occasion was a call for articles upon another subject in reply to one written by a man who deplored the course of the modern woman and would remand her back to the protection and care of husband and father.

I wrote and received a very complimentary letter in reply, saying that the same would be published, all but the last two paragraphs, which they could not use, as they did not wish to open up the sex question. I responded, claiming that a medical journal was just the place for that question. The following is a copy of their second letter. L. W.

Dear Mrs. Waisbrooker: Your very interesting letter of June 2 at hand.

While we are in accord with all you say concerning this sex question, as stated in a previous letter, we cannot take these matters up in ——. Our magazine is a magazine for the home, and its object to instruct the people in matters pertaining to health and the prevention of disease. We could hardly go into this matter of sex and social reform. We feel quite sure it would be objectionable to our readers. If we were publishing a paper that was devoted to sex reform or emancipation of woman we would be only too glad to make use of much that you write. You write in a very fair and sensible way, and we regret that our magazine is not such that we can make use of your writings. I believe that you have done and are still doing a grand and noble work for woman, and I believe the day will come when what you are advocating will be the condition of society and there will be no bondage either in marriage or out.

With kind regards and best wishes for your success, and regret that we cannot cooperate with you more fully I am sincerely yours.

THE RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL.

At last, after many unforeseen and unexpected delays, the booklet bearing this name has been sent to subscribers and to exchanges. That is to say, the paper-bound edition has been issued, and we are promised, once more, that the cloth-bound edition will be ready before this number of LUCIFER can reach its readers.

The price per single copy, paper bound, is 25 cents, or one dollar for six copies; twelve dollars and fifty cents per hundred. Handsomely bound in superior cloth, 50 cents per copy; $2 for six; $25 per hundred.

Believing the subject treated upon to be the most vitally important of all subjects affecting the happiness and future progress of the human race, we have printed an unusually large edition in the hope that our readers and patrons will order liberally for free distribution among their friends and acquaintances. Several of our friends have already ordered the book in wholesale lots. Shall we hear from others?

The following is the table of contents of "Right to Be Born Well":

Chapter I.—Introductory.
Chapter II.—Prenatal Endowment vs. Postnatal Training.
Chapter III.—What Woman Should Demand.
Chapter IV.—Power of Suggestion.
Chapter V.—Passion a Needed Factor.
Chapter VI—The Doctrine of Auras.
Chapter VII.—Superstitious Views of Virtue.
Chapter VIII.—Hypocrisy, Deception, Intrigue.
Chapter IX.—Importance of Free and Responsible Motherhood.
Chapter X.—Consequences of Too Close Living Together.
Chapter XI.—Prenatal Impression—Some Instances.
Chapter XII.—Legitimacy and Illegitimacy.
Chapter XIII—Painless Childbirth.
Conclusion—To Mothers.
Appendix.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

The ordinary man expects to obtain by marriage:
A toy.
A wife.
A submissive companion.
A useful ally.
A housekeeper.
A nurse.
A devoted mother for his children.
An angel in alpaca.

The last material is especially mentioned to show that he expects her to be economical. He wishes woman to have all the virtues, and, for private use, some of the vices.

The ordinary man selects the woman who is to be his wife when his mind is as much confused by the fumes of love as that of a drunken person is by those of wine. When the fumes evaporate, he discovers that his imagination has conferred upon her a hundred and one qualities she does not possess. There is deliberate deceit on one side, and there is self-deception on the other. Would an ordinary contract completed under these conditions be expected by any sane man or woman to be satisfactory?

The ordinary woman is trained to catch a man, not to keep a husband. As a girl she dances much, sings more, dresses simply but attractively, smiles when it is to her interest to do so, and is apparently devoted to home. That conduct implies cheerfulness, economy, and contentment. It is, however, only her ante-nuptial manner. Many a man could describe his experience six months after marriage in these words: "My wife is a parcel of assorted follies and failings, enclosed in a decorative wrapper and labelled 'Mixed Chocolates,' but after marriage I discovered it to be a packet of acid drops." Would an ordinary commercial transaction conducted on those lines be considered honest?—New Era, Cape Town, Africa.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

A. Herman, San Francisco, Cal.—Please accept 50 cents in stamps for such numbers of LUCIFER as our postal inquisitors will allow me to read. Many years ago I left the law-ridden old country in search of more liberty. Have I really found it?

T. V. Powderly, Washington, D. C. (Sept. 7, 1905).—M. Harman, Chicago, Ill.—Dear Sir: With this find my check for $1. Please send me two copies of the "Right to Be Born Well," and put my name on your list of subscribers for LUCIFER for six months.

E. J. M., Duluth, Minn.—Pleased to see so many interested in the contest of free speech and pen. A friend and myself will contribute our share toward such fund in the near future. * * * Hoping you are well and wishing that you may witness ultimate victory over "our masters," yours most sincerely.

Bansi Dhar, Vakil, Outrum Road, Lucknow, India.—To M. Harman, Chicago—Dear Sir: I am sorry to learn from your letter that you are the subject of a postal persecution. I sympathize with you very much in your trouble and hope you will be able to make a successful defense. * * * Yesterday I sent you a money order for five shillings and three pence in payment of three months' trial subscription to LUCIFER and for books

John Membrino, South Weymouth, Mass.—Let us hope that the efforts of all those who love truth and liberty will not be in vain, and that the seeds of good will soon or later bear their blossoms and fruit. Of course, we must no longer think that we are in a "free country." Such belief will bring us painful disillusions. Next week I will send a dollar for my subscription. Hope the day will soon come when all the inquisitions will be past.

Aurin F. Hill, Boston, Mass.—Progress appears among us. It is not necessary for writers to be more vulgar in style and history than I find in Bible history. The mail service ought to be managed as a profitable business, not as a guardian of or standard for moral or social reading. I know no just cause why a man, a public employe, should dictate or select my reading for me. I think his wages per day and per year are too large—it makes an incompetent man imagine that he is of too much importance, and he forgets liberty and justice.

J. B. Phinney, Springfield, Mo.—Send LUCIFER three months to each of the enclosed names. These subscribers pay their own money. Send the following named books to me: "Strike of a Sex," including "Zuyassent's Discovery," 25c; "Woman in Her Relation to Canon Law," 10c; "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," 15c; "Creative Life," 25c; "A Cityless and Countryless World," $1; "Songs of the Unblind Cupid," 30c; "Human Rights," by J. M. Hook (3 copies), 15c; "Religion and Rationalism," 15c. Balance to my account, or Defense Fund; $3 enclosed.

Mr. Louis F. Post, editor of the Chicago "Public," writes in a personal letter: "I was shocked at hearing, yesterday, that LUCIFER has been excluded from the mails for reproducing your excellent article on postal administration. If my information is true, the department's action, this time, at any rate, is outside the pale even of the shadow of an excuse." Mrs. Collins, the editor of "Unity," the editor of the "Public," and the editors of the "Woman's Journal" all believe that many of the doctrines advocated in LUCIFER are erroneous; but they also believe in the constitutional right of American citizens to advocate erroneous doctrines if they choose.—The Woman's Journal (Boston).

Thomas G. Griffiths, Montreal, Canada.—It is the old, old story, dear friend. Those who would go in front to proclaim a new thought or a regenerative principle, must be prepared to receive the anathema, hatred and opposition of all those who do not and will not understand. At the same time, as I said in my first letter, after your years of conflict, when the flesh grows weary, there must come a deep longing to have freedom from the struggle, so that the heart and mind may have closer communion with beast and bird, the trees, the grass, the blue sky, river and rivulet, and all that loves and loves us. * * * I trust the voices of Freedom's friends will be strong enough and loud enough to curb the tyranny of the postal inquisition at this time.

Elizabeth Breese, Talent, Ore.—The booklet, "Right to Be Born Well," received. I read it very carefully and am so well pleased with it that I send a dollar for six copies more. I will give them to people that I think need them, but who won't buy them for themselves. I think the last paragraph on page 63 and the first on page 64 are well worth the dollar. Several years ago I used almost the same words in a talk I gave in a lodge, in answer to the question, "Why is it so nearly impossible to get the wage-slave to see his condition?" Several speakers opposed me, but being a nurse I was well armed with facts. * * * Dear old comrade, I thank you for the noble work you have done and are doing. I never lose an opportunity to talk and to give LUCIFER away to people who need it.

F. L. R., Everett, Wash.—Lillian Harman, Chicago: I have secured two subscribers for you, but I hesitate to send in the money until I hear from you. Are you still publishing LUCIFER? And is it admitted to the mails? If so, I will send in the subscriptions. * * * Where is Mr. Harman passing his time at present? I am unable to learn through LUCIFER whether he was sent to prison or not.

[Moses Harman is not in prison. Though sentenced to serve one year at hard labor in the Illinois penitentiary at Joliet he was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,500, pending his appeal to a higher court. His health is not very good, yet good enough to allow him to work in office most of the time.—L. H.]

Edgar L. Larkin, Lowe Observatory, Sierra Madre Range, Echo Mountain, Calif.—M. Harman, editor LUCIFER, Chicago, Ill.: Enclosed find $1 for subscription to LUCIFER. I do hope that you will be successful in your lawsuit.

[The printed heading to this letter informs us that Edgar L. Larkin is "director" of the "Lowe Observatory, altitude 2,420 feet —16-inch Clark telescope." Thus it would appear that, although his work is mainly with the stars, Prof. Larkin finds time to read LUCIFER and take some interest in its fight for freedom of speech and of press. When at Pasadena a year or two ago I saw the tower of the Lowe Observatory, perched like the nest of an eagle high up against the mountain side, but did not venture to climb the steep ascent, as I had lately done at Mt. Hamilton, to visit Lick Observatory, near San Jose, Calif.—M. H.]

Rev. W. E. Gilroy, B. A., Pastor Broadview Avenue Congregational Church, and Editor Canadian "Congregationalist," Toronto.—I feel condemned for not sooner having answered your circular and note, but multiplicity of duties and ill health have added to a natural procrastination, so that for the past few weeks much has been neglected. I am among the number of your subscribers taken over from "Free Society." Frankly, I do not like LUCIFER as well as I did the defunct Anarchist weekly, but I was satisfied with the arrangement, and understood that it was not necessary to notify you unless to the contrary. I now write, however, to definitely state that LUCIFER is acceptable and also to inclose $1 in renewal of my subscription, which must soon expire. Allow me, at the same time, to express my deep sympathy with you in your struggle with the postal censorship in the United States. I do not always agree with LUCIFER; I am not, in fact, very much interested in discussions of the sex question of the type which it mostly contains; but in the articles for which a whole issue was suppressed I could find nothing in the least offensive. In any case, censorship is an arbitrary and dangerous thing—particularly that sort from which you are suffering, which impresses me as being also tainted with cowardice—that worst of all cowardice, which fears or refuses to look facts fairly in the face. The problem of sexual relationship and its kindred problems are, undoubtedly, at the very basis of life's other problems, and one cannot easily overestimate the deadly results of the rule of taboo, superstition, cowardice and ignorance which still prevails within that sphere. At the same time it seems to me that one must endeavor to understand the origin and nature of these things if one would successfully strive to remove them. I am not seeking to defend, either my own profession or the church, when I say that it is entirely insufficient to attribute these things to priestcraft, religion, etc. The impression would sometimes be given that atheism is the handmaiden of sexual freedom. Suffice it to say that my limited observation has revealed atheistic and irreligious husbands as being quite as tyrannous as the more believing variety. I do not wish to assume the role of an unfriendly critic when I state that, personally, the discussions in LUCIFER seem to me either to partake too little of real scientific character, or too much of vagrant, non-constructive criticism. Apart from the outrageous economic conditions and the false social system, the matter of sexual freedom seems to me to be mainly with the individual, and even in the broader field of social and economic reconstruction "Education toward Freedom" should, it seems to me, be more our motto. Is there not in the conducting of such journals as yours the danger which adheres to those of us who occupy pulpits, viz., of devoting too much energy to the things which will appeal to our hearers and readers, rather than putting things so as to win those who differ from us? Do not think of me, however, because I speak thus frankly, as assuming a merely critical attitude. In the accursed indifference to the affairs of life and the cowardice that reigns, both within and without the church, a sincere man, with the vaguest hint that there are reasonable ideas, other than his own, cannot but take delight in the finding of those who are taking an honest and courageous interest in what they feel to be life's most essential things—no matter how far their standpoints and conceptions may differ from his own. It is this which enables me to have a much closer fellowship with many without the church, and in opposition to it, than I have with many who are within its folds. I trust that you will receive this letter from a Christian minister, in the spirit in which it has been written, and that out of our joys and sorrows, our successes and persecutions, whether we be right or wrong, Right and Truth will prevail.

Jay Fox, Chicago.—I have been writing and lecturing on sociological problems for ten years, or since I was 23 years of age. I have been a trades unionist since I was old enough to be admitted to membership. Have been through many bitter strikes, was labor organizer for years, and am a regular contributer to trade union press. * * * I hope to get the "Demonstrator" to circulate among trade unionists, whom I consider the proper material upon which to work for the liberation of mankind. I do not belittle the sex problem. On the contrary, I regard it of such vital importance that the changing and adjustment of other vital problems will not affect it in the least. Only by much thought and discussion on the question, as a vital issue, can it be rightfully solved. The economic problem touches the stomach of mankind, the political problem its collective liberty, but it is the sex question that reaches down into the heart and soul of the race and of each individual being, and shapes our mental and physical careers before we are born. * * * The powers that be fear more the discussion of that problem than any other, and I heartily concur in your pioneer work in forcing the issue with the ruling class on the question of free speech in regard to sex. If you don't win for yourself, you will win for those who come after. You are the forester cleaning the way.

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

PRESS AND MAIL CENSORSOIP.

Americans heartily condemn Spanish and Russian press censorship, apparently unaware that even in times of peace American mail censorship rivals that of the Czar even in times of war. Indeed, comparatively few people apparently know that last month a bright, intelligent, conscientious, lame and deaf gentleman, aged 74 years, living at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill., was sentenced to one year at hard labor in the penitentiary—not for treason; not for murder, theft, or, indeed, for injury to any man or property:—but simply for depositing for mailing his little paper, which contained two letters by ladies, declared objectionable by the officials only because they conscientiously discussed in perfectly chaste language that greatest of all questions—the rearing of better human offspring, just as we raise better horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, etc., through better conditions of parentage. Hence, many consider Moses Harman, who was thus condemned, a martyr to prudency. Thus, year by year, are the encroachments upon free thought, free speech, free press and free mails narrowing down our liberty, until ere long, all will be enslaved to the politicians. Sincerely yours for investigation, truth and progress.—D. Webster Groh, in Baltimore World.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 14, E. M. 305 [C. E. 1905]. WHOLE NO. 1048

THE AMERICAN POSTAL INQUISITION.

[CONCLUDED FROM NO. 1047.]

The following paragraphs taken from LUCIFER of April 4, E. M. 290—that is, April 4, 1890, of the common calendar—constitute the "roasting" that I am charged with having administered to Judge Foster before the trial culminating in the scene described by the Topeka "Journal" and reproduced at the beginning of this article. The offending article is headed:

"WHO AND WHAT ARE ON TRIAL?"

"In less than two weeks from the date of this issue of LUCIFER an important trial is expected to come off in the United States District Court at Topeka, Kansas. Important, not because of the prominence of the individuals who stand accused of crimes or misdemeanors, but important because of the principles involved in the questions that will then and there come up for investigation and for legal interpretation and decision, and important because of the prominence and number of persons who will really, though not technically or nominally, be put on trial.

"As it is just possible if not probable that the present conductor of this free platform—LUCIFER'S platform—will not much longer be allowed the privilege of saying his say from said platform, he now respectfully asks the careful attention of the reader of these lines to a short statement of what he believes to be the issues to be tried at the approaching term of the United States Court and also, who are the persons that are then and there to be put on trial.

"I. As to principles:

"(1) The principle, the right, the demand, or claim, of and for freedom of speech and of the press, will be put on trial.

"(2) The principle of citizen right to and of civil liberty, including political and religious liberty, will be put on trial; for if speech and press be not free, then it can be easily shown that civil, political and religious liberty are hollow mockeries.

"(3) The constitution and laws of the United States will be put on trial. The constitution and laws are part of the machinery of the artificial thing we call government. Government, human government, is of itself an evil, a very expensive and dangerous evil—dangerous because of the tendency to arrogate to itself powers and functions that do not rightly belong to it. Government—written constitutions and laws—is the creature of man, and therefore inferior to man. In fact, until incarnated in the person of man, or men, as officials or executors, government is only an idea. As a force or power it is less than what we call "the idle wind"! Incarnated in man, or men, this idea becomes useful or hurtful according to its use or abuse. The only use or excuse for the existence of this thing we call government is to help, by co-operative effort, to secure each individual person or citizen in the enjoyment of his or her natural rights. Among the most important of all natural rights is the right to think and the right to express one's thoughts. This latter necessarily implies or includes the right to free speech and free press.

"If the written constitution, as an important part of the artificial arrangement we call the government of the United States, provides for and guarantees absolute freedom of speech and press, then this fact will be fully brought out at the Topeka trial.

"If, on the contrary, there is no such guarantee in the printed document called the constitution of the United States, then this fact also will be fully made manifest, and it will then be in order for the citizens of the country called the United States to begin to inquire whether this document, the venerable document they have been taught to regard as the palladium of their liberties, is really worth the blank paper it is written on.

"As to other laws, as to enactments other than the constitution itself, bearing upon the case or cases under consideration, the same remarks or rules will apply. If these laws support, guarantee and defend the citizen in the enjoyment of his natural rights then they will come out of the ordeal unscathed; but if, on the other hand, it is found that they deny or contravene those natural rights, then the verdict must be pronounced, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting!"

II. As to Persons:

"(1) The judge, Cassius G. Foster, will then and there be on trial. As presiding officer, arbiter or umpire, the responsibilities of the judge are very great. The judicial oath, a copy of which is given a conspicuous place in large type on first page of this issue, outlines, in part, at least, the responsibilities resting upon the presiding officer of the court, but it does not tell the whole story. Cassius G. Foster, for instance, was a man and a citizen before he was a judge of the U. S. District Court. When he became a judge he did not cease to be a man and a citizen. His manhood and citizenship are of much greater importance to him than his judgeship. His duties as a man and a citizen take precedence of his duties as a judge, simply because, as already stated, governments, of which judgeships are a part, are the work of man, or of men, and therefore inferior to the men who make and who can, if they choose, unmake them. As a man it is Cassius G. Foster's duty to do no wrong to any human being. As a citizen of a republic or commonwealth he is the equal of any other citizen, living or dead, consequently he owes allegiance to no other citizen or citizens, for it is absurd to say that an individual citizen owes allegiance, loyalty, to an equal, or to equals. The only allegiance or loyalty that a free and equal citizen can owe, is loyalty to his own manhood, to his highest ideal of Truth, Right and Justice. If the constitution and laws embody and represent C. G. Foster's highest ideal of truth, right and justice, then he owes allegiance to that constitution and those laws, but only because of, and so far as, they embody this highest ideal.

"That is to say, every judge, every magistrate, every presiding officer of a court, from the lowest to the highest, is and by virtue of his citizenship, a judge of the laws, the statutes, the human enactments, that he is called upon to administer—from the constitution of Alexander Hamilton, of Washington and Franklin, down, down, to the postal laws engineered through a degenerate and debauched Congress by Anthony Comstock!

"These are some of the reasons why we say that of all the persons to be put on trial at Topeka, Kansas, at the approaching session of the U. S. District Court, Cassius G. Foster takes, and should of right, take the first and most important place. How he will bear himself under the strain of this trial, is a question in which many thousands of people scattered all over this broad land, now feel a deep interest. Will he come out of it with honor to himself and with credit to the judiciary of which he is a member, or will the ordeal prove to be too great for the man? Will he show himself a jurist whose record will be found worthy to be quoted on the side of liberty and equity in future years, or will he take rank with those jurists who sacrifice principle to expediency or to judicial bias, who bow to 'precedent' instead of to Truth and Justice, and for social or political reasons are ready to sacrifice the innocent to gratify a popular clamor, which clamor has no other cause or foundation than ignorant prejudice?"

The judicial oath referred to herein was kept standing in large letters on first page of LUCIFER for several issues preceding the time of trial, but these quoted paragraphs entitled "Who and What Are on Trial?" constitute the main part of the terrible "roasting" spoken of by R. M. McAfee, as reported in LUCIFER 1041—professedly quoting the words of David Overmyer.

Whether these talks to the judge were wise or unwise I leave others to decide. At the time, and under the circumstances, I considered it the right thing to do, just as at the time and under the circumstances I considered it the right thing to say what I did to Inspector McAfee a few weeks ago in the Federal building in this city.

ORIGIN OF THE CENSORSHIP LAWS.

The following brief statement of the origin of the censorship law is from the pen of a well known lawyer of New York City, who has closely watched the working thereof ever since its first enactment:

"This law was passed March 3, 1873, by trickery and fraud in the confusion and uproar of the closing hours of the most corrupt Congress ever convened in this country. It was passed without debate between one and two o'clock on Sunday morning, March 2, and signed by the President Monday night, with no thought or deliberation on the part of anybody, amid a vast number of bills of all sorts. One of the individuals interested in pushing this vile law through this debauched Congress was Comstock himself, of whom it is not necessary here to say anything. Another was a theological hypocrite who publicly announced that he believed in deceit. Another was a person who violated the law himself and through his money or personal influence managed to escape prosecution and go scot free. And there were others of morals equally eccentric whose trickery aided in the passage of this law.

"It will be well to reprint what some of the leading papers said at that time of the scenes of confusion and debauchery amid which this bill came into existence.

"The Washington correspondent of the New York 'Herald' says in the issue of March 2:

"'The wrangle over the proposed increase of congressional salaries was rather funny to-day in the House, from the manner of the members, they were so anxious for more pay, but they feared to say so, knowing only too well that Congress just now is not so high in the esteem of the people as to be thought worthy of an increase of pay.'

"On the same day the same paper says editorially:

"'The Credit Mobilier Congress was busy up to a late hour this morning preparatory to giving up a life that goes out in the blackness of infamy to-morrow. . . . Senators . . . were occupied in voting on appropriation bills the jobbery and robbery of which cannot be discovered in the hurry of closing hours of legislation and which sometimes remain forever secret from all except the interested parties. In the House of Representatives the bustle and excitement were even greater than in the Senate, and, no doubt, amid the confusion and under the cloak of patriotism and honesty the usual eleventh-hour stealing was accomplished.'

"And again on March 3:

"'What remains of the foul work of this memorable session will probably be finished to-day.'

"On March 4, the 'Herald's' correspondent says:

"'The House was in a noisy, uproarious mood to-day . . . the confusion and uproar were never surpassed.'

"The 'Sun' says editorially March 4:

"'Is there any corruption which Congress will not justify and approve, any infamy which either House will not boldly adopt as its own? And is there any limit to this process of public and official degradation? The indignation of the people alone can afford an adequate solution of this problem.'

"And again on March 5:

"'Within the last one hundred and fifty years there have been more famous legislative bodies than this, but we do not remember one more infamous. There were conscientious gentlemen in the Senate and House, but, prima facie, the case is against the whole of them, and till the close of the present century membership in that Congress will, in the estimation of the general public, throw upon the incumbent the burden of proving that he was not a dishonest man.

"'The entire term of this Congress has been characterized by a series of disreputable transactions which have no parallel in our history. . . . This is the Congress which some Macaulay of the next century will describe as more infamous than that Parliament which originated Law's celebrated Mississippi scheme, and more corrupt than those parliaments which Walpole used to purchase as he bought Merino sheep and Flanders mares to stock his estate in Sussex.'

"The 'Tribune' March 4 in an editorial says:

"'The whole Congress has been characterized by an unprecedented neglect of the public business in the early stages of the session and confusion at the close. . . . The Senate has been obstructive, partisan and unusually corrupt. Considering the relative smallness of its numbers, it has been conspicuously bad in morals.'

"The 'Times' March 3 bears this testimony:

"'No one who reads even the comparatively brief reports of the Associated Press can fail to see the haste and confusion which prevail during the closing hours of Congress. It is idle to deny that this condition of things gives rise to many opportunities for fraud and that some of these opportunities are used is only too probable. But if Congress were composed, in both branches, of perfectly immaculate men it would be impossible to avoid great injury to the public interests under the existing method of doing business. The bills which are crowded at the last are precisely those which it is most desirable should be deliberately considered, and the true scope and effect which it is least possible to penetrate by hurried examination.'

"And again March 5:

"'The Forty-Second Congress which finally adjourned at noon yesterday took part during its term in some of the most important parts of our recent history. Public attention is now fixed on the exciting and painful scenes in the midst of which it closed its career.'

"And so on throughout the whole range of the press all over the country—not the partisan papers alone that were politically opposed to the Republican party then dominant in Congress, but papers of all grades and shades of political opinion.

"The history of those times is too well known to leave a doubt as to the way in which the enactment of the Comstock Law was procured. And having thus gotten their law the filthy gang for whose use it was made violate every principle of honesty and decency and enforce their law to silence arguments which they cannot otherwise answer, to suppress thought, to threaten Science, to pry into the confidences of the mails and to limit liberty."

In my talk with McAfee and the District Attorney a few days ago I mentioned these recorded facts as to the character of the Congress that passed the censorship law, the hasty and ill-considered manner of its passage, mentioned the fact that before the time of the civil war ineffectual efforts had been made to secure federal enactments limiting the freedom of the mails; mentioned that this law was signed, with others, without reading by President Grant, a military man simply. I might have added, and a man not skilled in jurisprudence; a man whose training, if not his nature, predisposed him to arbitrary and despotic measures, etc.

In his reply McAfee said he had it from a person who saw the signing, that President Grant read the act before signing it. [Query: Was this person Anthony Comstock, the agent of the New York Society that was chiefly responsible for the postal legislation?] Adding: "If the censorship law was passed hurriedly and without due consideration, how comes it that this same law has been before several Congresses since for revision, and that instead of repealing it the national legislature has made it stronger at each revision?"

My reply to this was, in substance:

There has never been a general or popular agitation for repeal; it is to the interest of lawyers—who as a class have dominated the national Congress for many years—to have as many laws as possible on the statute book; the more laws, and the more difficult of interpretation those laws, the better for the lawyer class; hence the temptation to magnify their office and make it honorable and profitable was not easily resisted.

I might have added, "The influence of the clerical lobby members of Congress"—the fact that the so-called "Evangelical Alliance" maintains skilled and influential representatives, such as Rev. Wilbur Crafts, at the national capital year after year to see to it that no measures inimical to their interests shall receive serious congressional consideration, and that new laws shall be introduced in the national legislature still more closely cementing the bond of union between church and state; and, of course, it needs no argument to show that this postal censorship law is the legitimate successor of the older laws against blasphemy and heresy.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

(Mrs.) B. M., New York.—Please send "Thoughts of a Fool," and accept balance of check ($5).

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE, Glen Stuart, Scotland.—If LUCIFER cannot go through the mails as a newspaper, will not its subscribers pay for it to come to them as a letter? It is worth it, I am sure. Will you not make the suggestion? Many thanks for the "Right to Be Born Well." I will distribute the copies circumspectly. With sincere good wishes, yours most truly.

HENRY I. GETLER, Newark, N. J.—Only by accident have I got hold of your LUCIFER. Am a Russian and do not understand the meaning of sexology, sex-freedom, etc., and will therefore ask you to send me such books as will instruct me in these matters. Please send me "Thoughts of a Fool," $1; "Hilda's Home," 50c; "Human Rights," 10c; "Hints About the Teachings of Natural History," 10c; "A Free Man's Creed," 25c; "Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood," $1, and LUCIFER one year $1.

LEONEL A. DE VIROT, Douglas, Ariz.—Dear Comrade: I went broke on the Arizona Socialist at Phoenix, and came here to publish an independent paper, the Speaker. Please send LUCIFER in exchange. Kindly inform me if you still publish the books you were publishing three months ago on the sex question. Send book list.

[Yes, we still publish and sell the books advertised and sold by us, as formerly, except a few that are now out of print.]

A. A. COWLES, Garrettsville, O.—As soon as possible I will have a rubber stamp made to stick an advertisement of LUCIFER in prominent places, same as I do for Socialist papers. What do you think of the plan? It is a cheap, light and compact kind of propaganda, for home use or for traveling.

[The idea is certainly an excellent one. If our friends would agree to use rubber stamps in this way, and would subscribe a few cents each to defray the expense of having them made here in Chicago, we will see what can be done in the matter.]

JAMES F. MORTON, JR., in the Demonstrator, Lakebay, Wash.—The abominable villainy of the postoffice despots has again been exemplified in Chicago by the arbitrary confiscation of an entire edition of LUCIFER. That it happened to be an issue specially devoted to exposing the conspiracy against free speech is more than a coincidence. The same was true of the issue formerly stolen by the postoffice authorities. . . . It is scarcely credible that a little band of autocrats should be able to proscribe the reading matter of the American people. A nation with any real instinct for personal liberty would not for an instant tolerate such an atrocious state of affairs. Much deep educational work will be required before a sane civilization will be possible in this land of press censorship. Meanwhile it assuredly behooves all friends of progress to be constantly on the alert for opportunities to uphold freedom of speech.

W. JAGO, Portsmouth, England.—Am waiting news of your appeal. Hardly know what to wish for, for the best. Feel that either way it cannot but result in good, my only regret being that you at your age have to suffer so much anxiety and worry, to say the least. Sorry I can only send you the enclosed stamps. With cordial greetings to yourself and daughter, fraternally yours.

DR. S. A. WEST (editor), in Master Christian, Rock Port, Mo.—Here is a small book, "The Right to Be Born Well." It is by Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, a little journal devoted to a scientific discussion of the sex question. Its one basic claim is that no woman has the right to part with the ownership and control of her own person. Mr. Harman has recently been convicted and sentenced to a year's imprisonment on the ground of sending "obscene" matter through the mails. The case is being appealed, and, as usual in a case of this kind, the people want to see the man's books for themselves. The world has a great liking for anything passed upon as "obscene," and the so-called "good" people are always the first on the ground. But there is nothing obscene or low in any of Mr. Harman's writings; if there were, any sane man knows he would have a hundred thousand subscribers where he now has four or five thousand. The price of the book is 25c, silver or stamps, and I advise you to get it while you can. It is plain, but sound. Every wife and mother will understand, and some men. Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, and tell him I sent you.

FLORA W. FOX, Rochester, Minn.—As one of your readers I would like to see the twenty-fifth anniversary of LUCIFER devoted to a rousing effort for repeal of the postal law—fathered by Anthony Comstock in 1873 at midnight. . . . The law concerning "obscene literature" is clearly opposed to the welfare of this nation, since it prohibits the means for educating the people into a better understanding of health and disease, vice and virtue, good and bad. The people are wholly to blame for these conditions, and nothing less than a cyclone of protests, coupled with active, aggressive work, will accomplish the repeal. If not a repeal, then let there be an amendment, so formed as to ever protect our teachers, publishers and editors from arrest and imprisonment. Every publication is in danger of being burned by postal clerks, should the destruction of LUCIFER'S editions be overlooked. . . . This outrage has never been perpetrated before without giving the owner fair warning. We need not go to Russia for press censors. . . . May the people awake to a sense of their wrongs and may they dare maintain their right to an untrammeled press, free mails and freedom of thought expression. Yours for Repeal.

REUBEN STEWART ASHURST, Charlotte, N. C.—Not having received the mid-August and first of September numbers of LUCIFER, I write to ask whether they were suppressed by the postal authorities, or my copies merely miscarried. . . . I sincerely hope that there was nothing in these last issues that offended the "moral" sensibilities of the zealots who so faithfully guard the purity of the race. May the time swiftly come when not the few but the many will realize that things can only be kept sweet and pure in the sunshine; that darkness covers a multitude of sins. I think the mistake we most often make in combating the powers of darkness is in not pointing out the vile and loathsome character of the moral contagion. We are too apt to admit the wisdom of some of conservatism's teaching, when we should shun the whole doctrine as an evil, foul and cankerous. Anything founded on untruth is necessarily baneful in its effect. The enclosed 10c in stamps is for two copies of "The New Hedonism," by Grant Allen.

[Many inquiries similar to this have been received at this office, and in reply will say that whenever a copy is missed the better way will be to notify us at once of the loss. Sometimes the fault is in the mailing department of LUCIFER; sometimes it is in the carriers, and sometimes in the postal department at Washington, D. C. In any case, we wish to know what issues or numbers have been missed; if in our power to do so, the lost numbers will be sent to all who have paid for them.]

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS AND PATRONS.

By consulting the date line of this issue it will be seen that we are still behind time one week, although it is only a week since the appearance of No. 1047. This derangement of the regular fortnightly appearance is simply the result of long waiting to hear from Washington, D. C., in regard to the mailability of numbers 1045 and 1046.

If no further interruption is met by us from the postal censors here or elsewhere, number 1049 will appear on time, that is to say, on or about September 28.

And now just a few words to all who wish to see LUCIFER live and continue the fight for freedom of speech and of press, and for the right of self-ownership for all, and especially for womanhood and motherhood. We do not need to say that the past three or four months have been very trying months upon the limited resources of LUCIFER. Without going into details, it is safe to say that the monthly expenditure for the summer of 1905 has been more than double the average expenditure for a like period. This includes court expenses, the cost of record in the District Federal Court, and also cost of record in appeal proceedings, also attorney fees.

To meet these greatly increased expenses many of our friends have come to our help nobly, generously, beyond anything we had reason to expect—whether as to payment ahead on LUCIFER, cash or stamps to send out the paper and pamphlets as missionary documents, or as contributions to defense fund. But while this is true, and very gratefully acknowledged, there is another side to the statement. Discouraged by the long-continued assaults upon the life of LUCIFER by the postal censorship, some of our old-time friends seem to have given up the fight, seeming to think further effort useless, and have therefore ceased to work for new subscribers, and have failed to send renewals of their own subscriptions. The result is that receipts have fallen considerably below expenditures for some weeks past.

It is nothing to be wondered at that the very irregular appearance of LUCIFER should have had this effect on many readers and former helpers. But now, with a fairly good prospect of getting the paper into the mails as of old, are we asking too much when we ask all readers, old and new, to do what they can to uphold the banner of freedom and justice by sending in renewals for LUCIFER, by getting new subscribers, and by helping to distribute the literature for which our paper has stood sponsor for the past quarter of a century?

The paper will live! That fact is fairly well assured, but the measure of its success depends upon its readers, its patrons and its contemporary workers in the various lines of radical reform.

M. HARMAN.

RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL.

This booklet contains the cream of all the ideas on the sex question published in LUCIFER during the last year. The various articles are selected, compiled and commented on in a masterly manner. It might also be titled "What the Engaged Ought to Know," for their ignorance on these questions is the cause of race degeneration. Unfortunately many of them learn the truth after it is too late.

It is true "No freedom of any sort, and especially no sex-freedom, is possible under economic dependence," and yet, realizing this, it does not mean that we should sit still or follow the old cow-path until conditions have changed. If we don't start today, the freedom we desire will never be gained. Even under present economic dependence we can at least attempt to spread our ideas, try to live up to our ideals as far as it is possible and thus set an example for others, especially for the younger generation. Even today we can cease creating unwelcome offspring. We can try to educate the welcome ones up to our standard of thinking, and make our own life happier and at the same time feel more independent if —if we have the contents of this booklet, "Right to Be Born Well," in our heart and brain. How much trouble, want and misery could we have prevented had we, in our younger days, known what we ought to have known, i. e., what we know today. Have not many of us good reason to curse our parents for keeping secret instead of teaching and telling us what they knew?

Many a Freethinker, Socialist and Anarchist I have met who thought that what he did not know was not worth knowing, but when I saw his family, his wife and children, I found no difference between them and the ill-liberals. The wife was the drudge of the house, the children were the veritable examples of ignorance, and the husband was the tyrant of the home. When I started to speak about the sex question the children were sent out of the room, the wife complained of too much housework and bother with the young ones, and the husband did not know how to prevent all this slavery in the home.

Is it not a fact that Socialist papers ignore the sex question almost entirely? Nothing but "scientific socialism" through the ballot box—as if this were the only ideal worth living for!

The same can be said of Freethinkers. Simply to fight God and Bible and preachers, and ignore every other important social question, is not freethinking, to my comprehension.

It is well that some people make a specialty of a certain branch of the great social question and expound it, but it should not be forgotten that there are other branches of equal importance to be solved ere freedom is gained.

Moses Harman has often been accused of riding a hobby, of being too one-sided, of expecting everything from the solution of the sex question, but many articles and paragraphs from his pen in recent numbers of LUCIFER indicate plainly that he is broad minded enough to see that more than one monster must be slain before the "Right to Be Born Well" is guaranteed to a future human race.

CARL NOLD.

"RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL" was sent to its subscribers several weeks ago—that is, to the greater part of them, but it is quite possible that, harassed as we have been, some names have been overlooked. We shall be very glad to correct all errors as soon as the mistake, or omission, is brought to our notice.

The price per single copy, paper bound, is 25 cents, or one dollar for six copies; twelve dollars and fifty cents per hundred. Handsomely bound in superior cloth, 50 cents per copy; $2 for six; $25 per hundred.

OUR ADVANCING POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

Since long before the foundation of the Federal government, American public sentiment has cherished freedom of the press above every other condition of popular liberty except trial by jury. With the press untrammelled our fathers believed that no menace to liberty could really gain a foothold, if an innovation, or long endure, if already established; whereas, if the press were subject to censorship, they felt that autocracy would flourish as in their day it did throughout Europe and as in ours it still does in Russia.

They did not mean that the press should have license to attack personal reputations or offend public morals with impunity. They conceded that publishers should be held to account for libelous and indecent publications. But they insisted that guilt should be determined by juries, after the act, and upon a full hearing of both sides; and not by bureau officials in advance of the act and ex parte.

Much has been said against this view on the ground that it would permit the accomplishment of wrongs which once done cannot be undone; and it must be confessed that the objection is not without plausibility when particular grievances are considered irrespective of general effects. But our fathers realized that the greater danger lies in empowering officials to impose upon publishers a decree of silence. A person outraged by libel would be vindicated by the verdict that condemned his libeler; common standards of public morals would be strengthened by the verdict of juries if the standards were true, and weakened by assault only in case they were false. But under a censorship, private outrages upon public rights might go unrevealed and uncatched; true standards of public morals might be perverted and false ones perpetuated; and with a pretence of protecting personal reputation and public morals, bureaucrats might insidiously undermine popular liberty.

Our fathers therefore made it a part of their political religion that every one should be free to print and publish whatever he would, subject to being held accountable therefor by a jury of his fellow citizens. So wedded were they to this theory of a free press accountable only to a jury of the people, that the result of a lawsuit in the old Colony of New York was acclaimed throughout the Colonies and helped kindle the fires of the Revolution, because the jury had found that an alleged libel against the Colonial authorities was justified and the publisher not guilty, notwithstanding that the Colonial judge before whom the case was tried had ordered the jury to convict.

So vital did this sentiment remain after the Revolution, that the Federal party went down in political wreck and ruin because it became responsible for the "sedition act," which evaded the principle of a free but accountable press by making libels against the President and other Federal officials triable before judges of the President's own appointment and juries selected by his own appointees.

So vital did that sentiment continue down the troublous century just ended, that even in the heat of the anti-slavery agitation a pro-slavery Senate revolted at a suggestion that anti-slavery newspapers be made unmailable.

We believe that this wholesome sentiment of liberty survives in the American mind. Though a great influx of foreigners in recent years—foreigners seeking not greater liberty as in earlier times, but only better wages—may have had the effect of making American landmarks of liberty fade in the public opinion of today, yet the autocratic conditions of which we get reports from Russia are abhorrent enough to stir even the dullest mind to some sense of the dangers which go with a bureaucratic censorship of the press. It is an innovation which we believe American public opinion would not consciously tolerate. Were any direct attempt made to subject to the control of a government bureau the right to print and publish freely, subject only to accountability to juries, it would surely overwhelm the political party responsible for it, as the Federal party of a hundred years ago was overwhelmed, with the condemnation of an indignant people.

But what could not be done directly because the people would resent it, might be done indirectly and surreptitiously because the people would not realize that it was being done.

And it is a fact, that by indirect and surreptitious methods a censorship is gradually being established over printing and publishing in the United States. It has advanced so far that a Federal bureau at Washington already possesses power of press censorship sufficient to enable it to suppress any periodical whatever, in the discretion of the officials who control the bureau.

We do not intend to say that every possible attempt at such suppression would succeed. What we do intend to say is that the censorial power which already exists in this Federal bureau is unlimited in its possibilities and threatening in its character. To a consideration of this fact we beg most earnestly to call serious public attention.

Let us consider first how a situation so serious might come about.

If an autocratic coterie, acute, skilful and patient, were deliberately set upon the purpose of creating a press censorship like that of Russia, in a republic like ours, where the traditions and the laws guaranteed freedom of the press subject to accountability only to juries, and where public opinion clung tenaciously to the spirit of those traditions, how would that coterie begin?

Not by trying to repeal the laws nor by violently overriding them. Either would be a hopeless undertaking in those circumstances. Such a coterie would begin by trying to invest with censorial power that bureau of the government, if there were such a bureau, which managed the distribution among the people of written and printed matter.

In doing this the coterie would at first carefully limit the censorship to such written and printed matter as was most intensely offensive to public morals; for that would be along the line of least resistance. A vast majority of the people, their thought centered upon offenses against morality and drawn away from offenses against liberty, would cordially approve the innovation.

Later a similar censorship would be extended by this coterie of liberty destroyers, to written and printed matter somewhat less offensive to public morals; and thus on and on by easy stages to such as was less and less offensive.

And the same acute discretion would be observed in the execution of these powers of censorship. The bureau so invested with censorial authority would at first execute its powers only against violators of the most sacred tenets of public morality. As its censorial powers were thereby commended to public approval, they would be applied to less repulsive offenders or those who occupied debatable ground, some of whom might bring the subject into the courts.

But the courts, keen to see that a decision in favor of minor or dubious offenders would make a precedent favorable to the repulsive class, would prefer making a precedent against liberty to making one against public morals. A few such precedents against liberty, in the guise of precedents for morality, and the hardest work of the censor-seeking coterie would be nearly done.

The bureau could then begin, on pretense of suppressing immorality, to discriminate against the publication of legitimate opinions. Over this there would be a struggle in the courts. But when the courts had decided that the bureau was engaged in executive work, and that its interference therein with private rights, even to the extent of seizing and confiscating private property upon evidence satisfactory to the bureaucrat, must not be prevented, the censor-seeking work of the coterie would be complete.

After that, there would be nothing to limit the scope of the censorship.

An object of sufficient importance to the coterie, and a confederate of sufficient nerve at the head of the bureau, would make a censorship which the crude censors of Russia might envy.

By deciding as to any periodical whatever, and however falsely, upon evidence satisfactory to himself, that its contents were offensive to public morals, the head of this bureau could effectually suppress that publication. And the mere fact that he could do this, would have a powerful effect in influencing all periodicals to support or oppose public policies as the persons or parties controlling the censorizing bureau might direct.

It is by insidious steps, such as are here suggested as possible, that the public opinion of free people has always been suppressed, and that their other liberties have been wrested from them in the consequent silence.

Now, in this country there is just such a bureau as we have imagined above. It is known as the Post Office Department.

That department controls the delivery and receipt of almost all the written and printed matter of the country. Nearly all private correspondence, nearly all books, nearly all periodicals, are circulated by its machinery. It has gone so extensively into the business of distributing letters and periodicals for the people that all business is dependent upon it, and any periodical against which it might discriminate could not long continue publication.

To invest this department with power to grant or refuse its distributing service to periodicals, with reference to its own judgment of the legitimacy of their printed contents, would be to place at its mercy every periodical which the department might wish to destroy.

But not only have we such a bureau in this country, in the Post Office Department, but that department has been gradually invested, in very much the manner indicated above, with the censorial powers outlined above as possible. And it has exercised those powers with similarly aggressive discretion. We do not mean that there has been a conscious and definite purpose of creating a dangerous censorship, as in the imagined case; but that there has been similar progress in a direction in which similar results are the inevitable ultimate.

The investiture of the Post Office Department with arbitrary censorship over the press, began (as we have indicated in our suppositions that such a censorship probably would begin), with legislation against such postal matter as was most intensely offensive to public morals. Obscene letters and papers were declared to be unmailable and the act of mailing them a crime. To this innovation objection was difficult. No appeal to the principle of freedom of the press could be made which would not seem like an attempt at shielding vile offenses, with appeals to political traditions and abstractions—like opposing "mere generalizations" or theories of government to actual immoralities. Under cover of the silence which decency thus imposed, the postal censorship thus gained a foothold.

Then further steps were taken. The ban of unmailability was extended to mail matter in furtherance of frauds. Decency did not impose silence here, but what could be said against laws for the suppression of fraud? Nothing that would not make the objector seem to be an apologist for actual crime on pretense of devotion to a mere "theory of liberty."

Nor was much difficulty encountered in extending the postal censorship against obscene and fraudulent mail matter to mail matter in connection with lotteries. Public opinion had become ripe for excluding that business from its old place in the category of the legitimate, and objections to this extension of the censorship were rebuked as sympathetic with lotteries, instead of being accorded a fair hearing in the interest of freedom of the press.

While censorial statutes were accumulating, criminal prosecution which never got before the highest court were building up a mass of precedents, and rules and rulings of the Postal Department were establishing censorial lines of administrative procedure which have crystallized with time. And so it has come about that the postal department has acquired and is actually exercising the ominous censorial power to which we invite attention.

Upon decrees sent out from a bureau at Washington, all their correspondence is withheld from individuals, on the charge, established before no judicial tribunal, that at some time in the past they have solicited correspondence through the mails for purposes of fraud; and legitimate periodicals are suppressed, on pretense that they contain obscene language or sentiments. In none of these cases is the alleged offender given a jury trial, in none does his case come before a judicial tribunal, in all his nearest approach to a trial is before attaches of the censoring bureau which makes the charge, and in some the specific accusations are withheld from him.

With the details of one of these cases of newspaper suppression we have been at the pains to make ourselves acquainted. It is the case of LUCIFER (p. 242), a Chicago publication, issues of which have but recently been suppressed by the postal department. Our information relates to a previous suppression for the same alleged cause, and not to a recent one. Whether the latter would prove to be similar to the former we do not know, nor do we regard it as important to the point under consideration, which is not the propriety or impropriety of suppression in a particular case, but the danger of suppression in this manner in any case. As the instance to which our information relates illustrates the tendency toward a censorship of the press, it is sufficient for the purpose in hand.

Our inquiry into the matter began with the following letter of January 27, 1904, to the postmaster at Chicago:

"I am informed that the Chicago office stopped the transportation as second-class matter of a Chicago weekly called LUCIFER, the issue of December 17; that the reason given was violation of section 497 of Postal Laws and Regulations; that nothing in apparent violation of that section appeared in the issue in question; and that your office refuses definite information. Will you kindly inform me, for public use, what the specific offense of the issue in question was?"

In his reply of January 29, the Chicago postmaster courteously stated that the Chicago office had not originated the act of suppression, but had merely obeyed orders from Washington. He wrote:

"The issue of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER dated Dec. 17, '03, was refused admittance to the mails by direction of the Department at Washington, which ruled that matter in that edition was in violation of section 497 of the post office laws and regulations. Under date of Dec. 19, '03, the publisher was advised to this effect."

It will be observed that the Chicago postmaster did not deny that specific information of his offense had been withheld from the accused publisher, and that he did not give the information asked for in the letter to which his was in reply, namely—the specific offense. In this reticence he was doubtless, as events subsequently indicated, obeying orders from Washington. It was also to be observed that the publisher was not notified of the suppression until two days after his date of publication.

Having learned from the Chicago postmaster that he had acted under orders from Washington, and been tactfully though courteously refused information as to the specific offense of LUCIFER, we extended our inquiry to the Postmaster General in a letter of February 13, 1904. In replying by letter of March 3, 1904, the First Assistant Postmaster General wrote:

"I have received your letter of February 13, addressed to the Postmaster General, in reference to the exclusion from the mails of a publication entitled LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. The issue of December 19 contained matter which is unmailable under section 497, Postal Laws and Regulations, and therefore the Postmaster at Chicago was instructed to treat copies of that issue in his office in the same manner as other unmailable matter is treated."

Still we had failed to get information of the specific charge against LUCIFER, sufficient to enable us by examining the paper to form a judgment as to the official good faith of its suppression; and from an examination of the whole paper we had been unable to discover anything apparently justifying the charge of violating the postal section referred to. Accordingly we asked of the Postmaster General, by letter of March 14, 1904, that he do us the favor of indicating—

"the particular article or articles, by their titles or otherwise, which are regarded by the Department as unmailable under section 497? If you could indicate the particular paragraphs of the articles that are regarded as unmailable I should be obliged?"

In answer to that inquiry the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General, in a letter of March 29 wrote:

"You ask that the particular article to which exception was taken by the Post Office Department be pointed out to you. If you will kindly call upon our Inspector in charge at Chicago, who has the copy of the paper to which you refer, that officer will be able to comply with your request."

An effort to act upon this suggestion, and the result, are described in a letter of June 13, 1904, to the Postmaster General, in which, after a recital of previous correspondence, we wrote:

"There seems to be some misunderstanding, possibly on my own part, though I do not see how I am at fault. In reference to your Acting First Assistant's letter, I have called on the inspector in charge at Chicago and shown him your Acting First Assistant's letter. After reading it he told me that he could not supply me with the information because his assistant, Mr. McAfee, in whose charge the matter had been, was then out of the city, but that upon the return of Mr. McAfee he, the Chief Inspector, would notify me and supply me with the information. Accordingly a few days later a messenger called at my office, and, I being out, left word for me to call up Mr. McAfee by telephone. When I did so, Mr. McAfee was out of his office. When I did so again, the next day, he had gone out of the city. But on the latter occasion the chief clerk in the Inspector's office, learning my identity and knowing my object, informed me that the Chicago office cannot furnish me with the requested information. He explained that the suppression of LUCIFER under section 497 had not taken place under the initiative of the Chicago office, but had been ordered by the First Assistant Postmaster General, and that the Chicago office does not know what the objectionable matter was. In answer to my further inquiry he assured me, but with entire courtesy, that I might regard this reply as official and treat it accordingly. I am therefore under the necessity of again troubling your office in this matter. Will you kindly arrange in some proper and convenient way to supply me, for legitimate newspaper use, with the information I am seeking, namely, what are the particular articles, designating them if possible by their titles, on account of which the Post Office Department suppressed the issue of December 17, 1903, of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, of Chicago, as unmailable under section 497 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, and what are the particular paragraphs of such articles in which the objectionable matter is to be found."

No attention having been paid to this inquiry, after the lapse of more than a month, we addressed the Postmaster General, by letter of July 23, 1904, offering to forward a copy of our letter of the 13th of June if the original had failed to reach the Department. Still without reply, on the 19th of August, 1904, we wrote again to the Postmaster General, referring to our two previous letters and asking:

"Will you kindly give me the information requested in those letters, or advise me of the time when you can probably do so, if delay is necessary."

This request brought a reply from the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General, dated August 25, 1904, as follows:

"I have received your letter of the 19th instant calling attention to the fact that yours of June 13 had not been answered. Replying specifically to your inquiry, I have to state that the article on page* . . . and the article on page* . . . are, in the opinion of this Department, offensive under the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1888."

The reply gives no indication of the paragraph or paragraphs of the articles mentioned as containing the matter which in the opinion of the postal censor is unmailable, although this information was distinctly requested. We are obliged, therefore, if we would examine into the good faith of the censor, to consider the articles as a whole, word by word, thought by thought, from first word to last. This necessity is in itself significant of the arbitrary and secretive methods of the Department in passing upon questions involving freedom of publication.

Upon examination of the articles we failed to find anything, either in the thought alone or the phrase alone, which could be condemned by the ordinary standards of decency. While it is true that the colloquial phrasing is so ill-adapted to the sociological subject discussed as to offend good taste, taste is not yet subject to postal censorship. And while neither the subject nor the phrasing would be appropriate at a young people's party, this is no test of postal propriety.

The subject matter, considered by itself, is a legitimate one for public discussion among adults; and, expressed in philosophical phrasing, it could not possibly be objected to as salacious.

The phrasing, considered by itself, is not out of the common in the current literature of fiction. If any well-known novelist had put these two articles, thought by thought and word by word, into the mouths of characters in a problem novel, it is almost inconceivable that any publishing house, other than the American Tract Society, would have suppressed them; and if the postal censors had condemned them as obscene by excluding the novels from the mails, a cry of derision would have echoed from one end of the country to the other.

The inference seems to us unavoidable, that the issue of LUCIFER of December 17, 1903, was excluded from the mails, not because of any violation of the postal statute, but because it advocated doctrines of social life at variance with those to which the postal censors are professedly devoted. In other words, it was suppressed, not for decency's sake, but for opinion's sake.

With the opinions intended to be censored by the suppression of LUCIFER, we are entirely out of sympathy. Were they up for discussion under circumstances demanding our participation, the question here is not whether they are unsound. It is whether we should emphatically condemn them—not because they are unconventional, but because we believe them to be unsound. But their discussion shall be forbidden.

On that issue we yield to no one in demanding the fullest freedom of discussion for every debatable question. Nothing but error can suffer from honest debate. And while we recognize the propriety as to taste, and the decency as to morals, of limiting discussions of some subjects, not only conventionally, but by law if necessary, to appropriate occasions, we do not regard the use of the mails for the distribution of any discussion whatever, for adult readers, and in good faith, as a violation of the proprieties of discussion. We do regard the denial of their use for such purposes as a menace to one of the most important safeguards of liberty, and an obstruction to the most important promoter of progress.

Yet we hesitate to denounce the postal censor for suppressing a paper for its opinions. To denounce him for that might be quite unjust. He only suppressed disagreeable opinions, and that is what most men would do who have the power. It is what the censors of the Czar do, when they forbid publication of the proceedings of a national congress. It is what our own censors in the Philippines did, when they forbade the publication of the Declaration of Independence. It is what we ourselves might be tempted to do if we were at the head of the postal censor bureau—since the opinions as to marriage which LUCIFER advocates are repugnant to our views. If we had the power as censor to read "offensive to the statute" into LUCIFER'S opinions, or into those of any other periodical whose opinions on social philosophy, religion or politics we reject, we might give way to the temptation to which the postal censor appears to have succumbed in LUCIFER'S case.

But all this is one of the very reasons why powers of censorship, even for the best of purposes, and though reposed in persons of liberal disposition, are dangerous powers.

Power fattens upon what it feeds on. Little by little, from suppressing evil reading to suppressing that which is doubtful, it advances to the suppression of unpopular opinions, and then to those that are popular; and it makes its advances so insidiously that all freedom of opinion is throttled by censors before the people realize it has been assailed.

That the point of suppressing unpopular opinions in one branch of social philosophy has already been reached, is evident from the circumstances of the LUCIFER case which we describe above.

Here is a publication depending for existence, as all others do, upon regularity of mail circulation. Without notice, accusation, specification, trial or hearing of any sort, a regular issue, the full edition, is confiscated by a local postmaster upon orders from the censor at Washington. After this suppression, the publisher is notified of it, but information as to the specific fact upon which the arbitrary action was based is withheld. He is told he has violated a particular postal law, but he is not told how he has done it. Nor does he get a hearing even on the vague general charge of which he is advised. The action is as arbitrary as such actions are in Russia. In Russia, indeed, the censor is more considerate. He lamp-blacks objectionable articles and circulates the rest of the paper; but our censor suppresses the whole edition, the "good" along with the "bad." And after the edition has been suppressed, another paper, interested in sounding an alarm if freedom of the press has been bureaucratically assailed,

*We omit the page numbers and the titles of the two articles which the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General gave in his letter. Our reason for the omission is that such a publication here might subject this issue of The Public to suppression by order of the postal censor bureau. The same Act of Congress by authority of which LUCIFER was censored for publishing those articles, provides also that "notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom or by what means an "obscene . . . publication of an indecent character" "may be obtained," is itself "non-mailable matter." Since the censors have already decided that the articles in question are obscene and indecent, they might decide that the naming of them by title and page in connection with the name of the publication in which they appeared, is a notice making the paper publishing it also guilty under the statute and therefore subject to suppression. Were they to so decide, they could suppress this issue of The Public, and we should be without protection or redress or any power to get a judicial trial. Inasmuch, therefore, as that part of the Acting First Assistant Postmaster General's letter which we have excised in quoting it above, is not absolutely necessary for the information of our readers, we prefer to avoid an unnecessary risk of censorship, by omitting it.

is trifled with by the censors for months, in its efforts to discover the specific offense for which the suppressed paper was suppressed, only to learn finally that it was for publishing two articles, only the titles of which are given, and in which, however offensive they may be to good taste, even a prude could hardly find material for specifications on a charge of immorality.

A censorship which can maintain this attitude toward freedom of the press respecting one subject of discussion, will have little difficulty in speedily advancing its meddlesome jurisdiction to other subjects.

The real issue here, let us repeat—and it will bear repetition again and again—is not the legal offensiveness of the particular articles noted above. That issue is important only for its bearing upon the point of the good faith of the censor. The real issue is the wisdom of allowing any official to deny mailing facilities to anything whatever which is otherwise mailable, merely upon his own judgment, as a censer, of the morality of the intelligence it conveys or the opinions it expresses.

Granted that some publications ought to be excluded, the power of discrimination cannot safely be entrusted to an administrative official. A bureau of administration with authority to exclude matter from the mails with reference to the intelligence or the opinions it conveys, will inevitably grow into a bureau of dangerous censorship.

For offenses against the purity of the mails the only safe remedy is the one that is applied to purity in every other connection—to the legitimate method which has been sanctioned and approved by long years in English-speaking countries; and this is to punish offenders after they, having had an opportunity to be heard upon specific charges, have been convicted by a jury of their fellow citizens.

If opinions in this country are to stand or fall upon reason and free discussion, the present postal censorship must be abolished. So long as publication through the mails can be denied arbitrarily by an administrative bureau of the government, the discussion of conflicting opinions is hampered.

Even the sentiment of fair play, entirely apart from all considerations of a free press, demands the abolition of this censorship. So long as an administrative officer can withdraw mailing rights from a publication for any offense whatever, without an opportunity for the publisher to be heard in his own defense before an impartial tribunal, fair play is impossible. Though we deny mailing rights to indecent publications, fair play demands that the person accused of the offense, and whose personal and property rights are involved in the accusation, shall have the opportunity he is guaranteed in all other cases to convince his fellow citizens that his publication is not indecent. It is his right to be judicially heard in his own defense.

Instances like that of the suppression of LUCIFER by postal censorship point so directly and unmistakably to great injustice and public danger that any fair-minded man may see it and every patriotic man ought to resent it. No matter what one's opinion of any paper and its teachings may be, there should be but one opinion of a postal organization which permits in any case what was done in that case, and this should be an opinion of unqualified condemnation.

The confiscation by postal clerks, of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censor, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country. Any law that authorizes it should be swept from the statute books.

The only difference between such a power and that of Russian censorship is a difference neither in kind nor degree. It is a difference only in scope of execution. And scope of execution widens with use.

The issue before us turns not upon the propriety of excluding indecent publications from the mails, but upon the wisdom and justice of allowing administrative officers to hamper freedom of the press and confiscate property rights, upon their own opinion of what constitutes indecency, and without an opportunity for the alleged offender to be heard in his defense. Under the postal censorship, publications are denied mailing rights, not because they are offensive to decency, but because the censor, from whom there is no appeal, chooses to think them so. Here is the seed of a mighty tree of absolutism.—Louis F. Post, in "The Public," Chicago (editorial), August 12, 1905.

"PURITAN PRUDERY THE CAUSE OF WOE."

Recently a college president told me that he had been making a careful investigation among nearly two hundred of his young men regarding their source of knowledge of personal purity and propagation of the race. He said that he had received a great shock, for the almost universal testimony was that the parents had done practically nothing in the way of enlightenment or instruction. He said that Puritan prudery was the cause of this reticence and that it had been the cause of no end of woe.—"Scribus," in "The Gazette," Milford, Mass.

In an age when every one is overtaught; it is appalling that children are in no way educated about marriage and for marriage. No mistake could be graver. Greek, French, algebra, history, the classics, Scripture and drawing are included in a boy's course of study; many hours a week are given to athletics. Woe unto him if, as the years go by, neither father nor mother has the sense to teach him anything about the requirements of a good husband and father. For what can it profit a boy if he gain all the curriculum of the universities and lose the chance of a happy fireside?—Louise Jordan Miln, in "Woolngs and Weddings in Many Climes."

THE STUDY OF THE REALITIES.

The saying that one-half the world knows not how the other half lives is very true, into whatever halves we divide the world. But people really know scarcely anything of the life even of their own half world, or of that fraction of it with which they are in contact. In truth, we do not even know ourselves. "If a man could read the story of his own life he would not believe it." We have studied human life in the same spirit as the child who loves fairy tales; and in all the many places where we cannot see facts we have placed fiction.

All the important facts of life are admittedly grouped around the two chief needs of humanity as of every animal—food and sex. Yet how very scanty is the knowledge which is made current coin among us about either of the subjects in its simplest form. We usually have to unlearn whatever was vaguely told us. The nurse tells the child to make haste over its meals, perhaps adding that it is greedy to spend much time eating; yet the best of all rules of eating is "Eat slowly." And with regard to sex, we all know that ignorance has been our motto, but too well adhered to, and we fear to face truth.

In our business, our friendships, our talk, our dress, we are bound to semblances, not realities; and in rejecting facts we are not even allowed to choose our own fictions; we are as much tied to "the style" in the color and cut of our conversation as of our clothing and all else.

The postal inquisitors have just recently given us an outstanding example of the worship of ignorance, and of the cowardice which utterly refuses to recognize facts and trace results. They laid down the rule lately that "Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and so unmailable—the only occasion for any talk of such matters is in the private conversations of physicians with patients" (words officially given by Assistant Attorney-General Goodwin, law officer of the postoffice department). As the secretary of the Propaganda of Free Discussion truly remarks, "This man holds our literature and art absolutely at his mercy." And such officials, like too many of the unthinking public, are incapable of realizing the effects of making physicians the only guides of conduct in sex. Our upholding of ignorance and suppression of books that give facts instead of fancies have already brought about this result to a great extent; but no honest physicians willingly accept the situation of being made in these lines sole confessors and directors of conduct as well as healers.

And when we remember that sex questions of delicacy arise chiefly at times when the susceptibilities are most easily affected, and also that the very people who have used their influence to prevent the publication of scientific works on sex also in the past prevented and still largely hinder women from becoming physicians, it should surely be clear that the personal dignity and natural feeling of women, especially, are disregarded by their being denied all knowledge of the health side of sex except by personal interviews with one of the opposite sex. I believe every physician in ordinary family practice could testify to the truth of the trying circumstances to which I refer; and only the most thoughtless of the laity who are determined to shirk realities would deny it.

With glaring inconsistency, the postal censors allow the transmission of the Bible, and I believe Boccaccio, through the mails, and deny it to the grave, scientific reasoning of such books as Dr. Drysdale's famous work, which circulates freely in every European country but which is forbidden in the United States. But even the quaint obscenities and unashamed improprieties of the Bible and Boccaccio are trifling disturbances of the mind compared to compelling girls, when they need reliable information, to discuss the most emotional of all subjects in conversation with a man. That painful sensitiveness and excitement of feeling often result is well known.

According to last census, 63 per cent of the people of the United States live in places of less than 4,000 population. Such places do not have qualified women doctors. Therefore the law officer of the postoffice department has decided that at least 63 per cent of the women of the United States shall either discuss with a man the health laws of sex, so important for a woman to know, or have no means of getting knowledge on the subject. How does this compare with the Roman Catholic confessional?

FIDEI DEFENSOR.

THE FOLLY OF SETTING LIMITS TO KNOWLEDGE.

I have been told by many good people that this question or that question was quite outside of the domain of science and presumptuous in one to inquire into, writes Professor A. E. Dolbear in an article on "The Science Problems of the Twentieth Century," in the July number of the Popular Science Monthly. Astronomy and geology and chemistry are graciously permitted to be in the hands of the man of science, but life and mind phenomena are declared to be outside the province of physical science; yet the same was said about astronomy and geology and chemistry not many generations ago. Was not Newton condemned for dethroning the Almighty by proposing the law of gravitation for keeping the planets in their orbits? Was not war made upon those who undertook to show that the earth was more than 6,000 years old, and were not the chemists who showed how organic compounds could be formed believed to be enemies of truth and bent on misleading mankind? Isn't it curious to contemplate that those who know least about a given science should be the ones to set its limits?

To-day men's lives are not endangered as they used to be for their attempts to find an answer to puzzling questions, so the work goes on, and the things discovered are never like what was anticipated by the good and conservative people who know beforehand what can and what can not be known. It took more than two generations to convince the world of the truth of the nebular theory, that the earth was millions of years old, that mankind had occupied the earth for hundreds of thousands of years; and the doctrine of evolution is hardly forty years old. Perhaps one of the good things which the twentieth century will be able to accomplish will be effectually to warn everybody of the danger of setting any limits to knowledge; also that any opinion mankind has held that has not been through the crucible of science is probably wrong, but the only reason for holding this is that so far every one so tested has been found to be erroneous.

It is noteworthy, nevertheless, that the freest countries in the world have the most divorces. In countries where a woman can earn her own living she will not consent to live her whole life with an unfaithful or tyrannous husband. The growing economic independence of woman is just as great a cause of divorce as the decline of a belief in marriage as an irrevocable sacrament.—Chicago Tribune (editorial).

EARLY CHRISTIAN THEORY OF THE UNIVERSE.

Among the very few scientific questions which occupied a considerable amount of attention in the early Church one of the most remarkable was that concerning the existence of the Antipodes. The Manicheans had chanced to stumble on the correct doctrine, and consequently the Fathers opposed it. Although, however, the leaders of the Church were apparently unanimous in denying the existence of the Antipodes, it appears that the contrary opinion had spread to a considerable extent among the less noted Christians, and some fear was entertained lest it should prove a new heresy.

About the year A. D. 535, in the reign of Justinian, there was living in a monastery of Alexandria an old monk named Cosmas, to whom the eyes of many were then turned. He had been in his youth a merchant, and in that profession had traveled much, especially in the regions of India and of Ethiopia. He was also noted for his keen and inquisitive mind and for his scientific attainments, and since he had embraced a religious life he had devoted himself zealously to the relations between Scripture and science. At the earnest request of some of the theologians of his time he determined, though now somewhat broken in health, and suffering especially, as he tells us, from "a certain dryness both of the eyes and of the stomach," to employ the remainder of his life in the composition of a great work, which was not only to refute the "Anila fable" of the Antipodes, but was to form a complete system of the universe, based upon the teaching of Revelation.

This book is called the "Topographia Christiana," or "Christian Opinion Concerning the World." (I have quoted the Benedictine Latin translation. In his preface Montfaucon has collected a long chain of passages from the Fathers denying the existence of the Antipodes.) Independently of its main interest, as probably the most elaborate work on the connection between science and the Bible which the early Church has bequeathed us, it is extremely curious on account of its many digressions concerning life and manners in the different nations Cosmas had visited. It opens with a tone of great confidence. It is a "Christian topography of the universe, established by demonstration from Divine Scripture, concerning which it is not lawful for a Christian to doubt." In a similar strain the writer proceeds to censure with great severity those weak-minded Christians who had allowed the subtleties of Greek fables, or the deceitful glitter of mere human science, to lead them astray, forgetting that Scripture contained intimations of the nature of the universe of far higher value and authority than any to which unassisted man could attain, and seeking to frame their conceptions simply by the deductions of their reason. Such, Cosmas assures us, is not the course he would pursue. "To the law and to the testimony" was his appeal, and he doubted not that he could evolve from their pages a system far more correct than any that pagan wisdom could attain.

The system of the universe of which remarks to this effect form the prelude may be briefly stated. According to Cosmas, the world is a flat parallelogram. Its length, which should be measured from east to west, is the double of its breadth, which should be measured from north to south. In the center is the earth we inhabit, which is surrounded by the ocean, and this again is encircled by another earth, in which men lived before the Deluge, and from which Noah was transported in the ark. To the north of the world is a high conical mountain, around which the sun and moon continually revolve. When the sun is hid behind the mountain, it is night; when it is on our side of the mountain, it is day. To the edges of the outer earth the sky is glued. It consists of four high walls rising to a great height, and there meeting in a vast concave roof, thus forming an immense edifice of which our world is the floor. This edifice is divided into two stories by the firmament, which is placed between the earth and the roof of the sky. A great ocean is inserted in the side of the firmament remote from the earth. This is what is signified by the waters that are above the firmament. The space from these waters to the roof of the sky is allotted to the blest; that from the firmament to our earth to the angels, in their character of ministering spirits.

The reader will probably not regard these opinions as prodigies of scientific wisdom; but the point with which we are especially concerned is the manner they were arrived at. In order to show this, it will be necessary to give a few samples of the arguments of Cosmas.

In the account of the six days' creation, it will be remembered the whole work is summed up in a single sentence, "This is the book of the generation of the heaven and the earth." These expressions are evidently intended to comprise everything that is contained in the heaven and the earth. But, as Cosmas contended, if the doctrine of the Antipodes were correct, the sky would surround and consequently contain the earth, and therefore, it would only be said, "This is the book of the generation of the sky." This very simple argument was capable of great extension, for there was scarcely any sacred writer who had not employed the phrase, "the heaven and the earth" to include, the whole creation, and who had not thus implied that one of them did not include the other. Abraham, David, Hosea, Isaiah, Zachariah, and many others, were cited. Even Melchisedec had thus uttered his testimony against the Antipodes. If we examine the subject a little further, we are told that the earth is fixed firmly upon its foundation, from which we may at least infer that it is not suspended in the air; and we are told by St. Paul, that all men are made to live upon the "face of the earth," from which it clearly follows that they do not live upon more faces than one, or upon the back. With such a passage before his eyes, a Christian, we are told, should not "even speak of the Antipodes."

Such arguments might be considered a conclusive demonstration of the falseness of the Manichean doctrine. It remained to frame a correct theory to fill its place. The first great point of illumination that meets us in this task consists in the fact that St. Paul more than once speaks of the earth as a tabernacle. From this comparison some theologians, and Cosmas among the number, inferred that the tabernacle of Moses was an exact image of our world. This being admitted, the paths of science were greatly simplified. The tabernacle was a parallelogram twice as long from east to west as from north to south, and covered over as a room. Two remarkable passages, mistranslated in the Septuagint, in one of which Isaiah is made to compare the heavens to a vault, and in the other of which Job speaks of the sky as glued to the earth, completed the argument, and enabled the writer to state it almost with the authority of an article of faith.—Lecky's "Rationalism in Europe."

FREEDOM IM LOVE.

The fifth commandment of love is this: Thou shalt not bind me with fetters.

The one fact that humanity is more loathe to accept than any other that love is a wilding that pines away and dies in captivity.

You can not teach it to be happy in a prison, no matter how much you gild the bars. You can not keep it from chafing at its bonds, no matter how soft and silken they are. You can not reconcile it to being held a captive, no matter if its jail is in the heart of the one that it prefers above all the world.

It must be free. It must have the sense of liberty, and this gives us a curious paradox—free love, and you bind it; bind love, and you free it. Leave the door open so that love may come and go at will, and it will not stir from your side. Lock the door, and bar every window ever so closely, and you can not make the prison so tight but what love will find a way to escape from it.

Thus it is that those who seem to hold love lightest and most carelessly really hold it most securely, while those who have fettered it and chained it in with affection, are surest of having the little elf give them the slip.

It is a matter of marvel that the so-called unconventional ties between men and women are frequently so enduring and ideal while the legitimate bonds that bind a couple together so firmly chafe and irritate to the point of madness and divorce. The reason is to be found in this world-old truth—that love must have freedom.

The law of love is the law of contraries. Nobody ever loved another because they ought to, or because it was expedient, or profitable. * * *

The mistake that most men and women make is in expecting their husbands and wives to love them because it is their duty, when in all the bright lexicon of Cupid there is no such word as duty.

Love is a free will offering, and it suffers no constraint. It must be free, and only those keep it that are wise enough not to try to fetter it.—Dorothy Dix, in Chicago Evening American.

VARIOUS VOICES.

T. M. Watson, Whitewater, Wis.—I enclose my second 25-cent piece, as promised, to help sustain you in your tribulations. I most sincerely hope all your subscribers and friends will remember to make little remittances from time to time, to encourage you in your struggles.

Gertie Vose, Home, via Lakebay, Wash.—Your latest trouble is certainly provoking much thought and heated discussions, which I believe will end in good work. Last Sunday, at our park meeting, Lois Waisbrooker read a prose-poem of her own composition, entitled "Freedom's Martyrs," which went through the audience like a thunderbolt. Tears streamed from many eyes, applause nearly shook the ground, and the deepest emotions were stirred in every breast. In such times one seems almost incapable of expressing one's indignation at the powers that ride rough-shod over the really pure and innocent ones, allowing the widest scope to degenerates—those with arrested mentalities. Wish you could spend a year at Home. We certainly have a good thing here—no angels or heaven, but just good warm comrades. Inclosed is $1 for subscription to LUCIFER.

F. A. M. Cook, M. D., Elm Place, R. R. 3, Columbus, Kan.—I am going to christen my new mail box by renewing my subscription to LUCIFER. It is surprising to me that men and women who claim to be intelligent do not think the human race need to be instructed in the science most essential to life. Stock and plants and fruit are improved; books, essays, and lectures are the proper thing on that subject; but boys and girls are not considered worthy of any improvement. They must not be taught that they have in their make-up organs which make them grand and noble by a proper use, or destroy them physically and mentally by abuse of the same. Inclosed find $1.50; the dollar for LUCIFER and the 50 cents for you, with the wish it was so many dollars.

Arthur Wastall, 2 Amalinda Road, East London, Cape Colony.—I thank you for letting me know what is happening. I received last week the Free Speech League's circular apprising me that trial would take place 1st June. I mailed them 30 shillings last week on behalf of two friends and myself. The one is a Frenchman here in East London, and the other an Australian lady. Both know you through me and admire your pluck and outspokenness. Lady Florence Dixie has always been a true friend of progress. She is well known in England to dietetic and anti-vivisection reformers, and used to help the Natural Food propaganda when I was conducting it. Such broad-mindedness is refreshing wherever found, but especially in aristocratic circles, where one scarcely looks for it.

J. W. Gott, Bradford, England—Your trial took place under a judge and jury who have done you a great injustice, which I hope will be righted in the higher court. I am glad to see you bear it with dignity and with the scorn such treatment deserves.

J. Allen Evans, Box 923, Cripple Creek, Colo.—I herewith enclose $1 to pay for "Thoughts of a Fool," already received and read. I've read many books on the sex question, but never read anything equal to "Thoughts of a Fool." The author is only a fool in the eyes of a time-serving, conventional society. She is not only a brilliant, but a fine, good woman; any radical sending for her book who does not say that it is worth its weight in gold can enclose the book to me and I'll send them the dollar for it. Don't fail to read the "Thoughts of a Fool"—it's the treat of a lifetime. It would be a grand old world to live in if all women were like the authoress.

George Brown, Philadelphia, Pa.—I cannot begin to tell you how entirely satisfied I am with you and what you do. The simplicity and dignity with which you meet and pass through such trying ordeals charms me out of myself. You at least have no "murdered ideals" to mourn over. You are, I think, the only man who has impressed me as being in yourself greater than the ideals for which we both stand. I do hope there will be some way of keeping you out of prison, for you are an old man and the physical strain might be too much for you; otherwise I should not so much fear, for I know that you will bear it to the confusion of your enemies. Do you know, I envy you the many honors that are being heaped upon you by those who seek to perpetuate ancient and hoary injustices? But I freely add mine to the many good wishes and kind thoughts that will go with you into the prison cell, should you have to go. You have the certainty that that cell should be the brightest and cheerfulest place on earth could we but make it so. I send you a dollar on subscription, and will send more soon. Of course I want you to send LUCIFER, even though I am a little slow in remitting; I will pay some time.

The Anthony Comstock legislation, as interpreted by the courts and the postal department, is entitled to no more respect than the acts of Parliament which our Revolutionary forefathers defied, or the pro-slavery statutes and decisions which the friends of liberty violated and apropos of which Wendell Phillips declared, "The chief use of good laws is to teach men to trample bad laws under their feet." We are as bound to break bad laws as we are to keep good laws. Whenever human law and divine law become irreconcilable, the human law, not the divine law, should be violated. "We ought to obey God rather than men." The leaders and saviors of men have often been law-breakers. Moses, Daniel, Peter, Huss, Luther, Tell, Kossuth, Bozzaris, George Washington and John Brown were law-breakers. Thank God for the brave men and women who break bad laws for conscience sake!—Doctor Jeremiah Justice, Mount Sterling, Illinois.

Phillip G. Peabody, 15 Court Square, Boston, Mass.—Like other lovers of justice, I honor you, and despise the politicians who are so insolently interfering with your and my rights, more than I can say. This outrage on you has done more to destroy my patriotism than anything that ever came into my life. I regret that I have ceased to be a good and loyal United States citizen. N. B.—The use of the word "American," to indicate a citizen of our country, is a sample of the arrogant impudence of the group of politicians at present "running" the country.—It gave me much pleasure to send to Dr. Foote, Jr., $25 for your defense. Not seeing it credited in "Lucifer's Helpers," on page 346, I write, as requested.—You have now, as always, my best wishes. To say that you are as far above those who are persecuting you, as Jesus Christ was above the men who crucified him, would be to pay you a very small and imperfect compliment.

Mrs. R., Washington.—How can I describe my feelings as I read your letter, also those pages of LUCIFER? I will do all I possibly can in the way of getting subscribers for LUCIFER—yes, I do want the paper, and will try to pay some on my subscription. I am owing you so much on that that I am almost ashamed to ask you to send the paper longer.

I do not know what I can say to express my sympathy. How I wish the mothers would awaken enough to appreciate you! I can't keep the tears from falling as I write, and I long to do something, so I am going to write to the few liberals I know, and try to rouse them to do something. I think I can get a few subscribers in that way.

I am still working by the day, at anything I can do to support my three children, and at times feel as if I must give up the struggle. I have not a bit of help, as I never got any alimony, and my relatives are nearly all so interested in the church that they have no time to think of anything else. Being away from home all the week, I do my own washing, baking, sewing, etc., on Sunday, which displeases my good relations still more. If they happen to come in and find me at work they are dreadfully shocked and sometimes scold me. It is very unpleasant being in such surroundings, and I often wish I could put a good distance between myself and my own people.

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

TO MARRY OR NOT TO MARRY.

"Mr. Harman's cardinal doctrine is that a woman should always have the control of her own person. He also believes in the abolition of legal marriage. With the first of these ideas we fully agree; with the second we differ in toto."

Thus speaks Alice Stone Blackwell in her very excellent editorial, entitled "The Postoffice and Free Speech," in "Woman's Journal," Boston, Aug. 12, 1905.

When on trial in the Federal District Court in this city in June last, Mr. Marston, Assistant District Attorney, who made the chief speech for the prosecution, asked the question with much emphasis and incisiveness of manner:

"Mr. Harman, are you not on record as an opponent of marriage?"

I was not allowed to answer the question, but that this implied indictment had much to do with securing the jury verdict of "guilty," there is much reason to believe, just as there is good reason for believing that my alleged opposition to the marriage institution had much to do with securing, in the Kansas Federal Court, 15 years ago, the sentence of five years' imprisonment and a fine of three hundred dollars. When delivering this sentence Judge Foster laid particular emphasis upon this point—that my paper was the enemy of marriage and, therefore, its editor and publisher deserved exemplary punishment.

The same charge is constantly made against me by leading Freethinkers, Agnostics, Infidels, Socialists, etc., many of whom have joined hands with orthodox Christians in their effort to bring LUCIFER and its editor under the ban of popular condemnation and of legal prosecution.

For these reasons I think it well to say a few words in self-defense, to show the real head and front of my offending in this regard.

While sincerely thanking Miss Blackwell for the two brave and strong editorials in defense of freedom of speech and of press, and for her kindly references to LUCIFER and its work, I would say that she seems not fully and truly to understand my attitude, and that of LUCIFER's leading workers on the marriage question. Speaking for myself alone I would say that I oppose "legal marriage" for the same reason and to the same extent that I oppose legal enforcement of religious creeds, religious rites and ceremonies, or legal enforcement of attendance upon church services, observance of holy days, or legally enforced payment of taxes for the support of church creeds, salaries of the clergy, and all legal privileges granted to churches, that are denied to societies or organizations that do not claim to be religious.

I oppose the conventional marriage system, the popular, the indissoluble, the sacramental marriage system, not because I would deprive any man or woman of their citizen right to be married in their own way, but because I believe the promises made "at the altar" to be immoral promises, that they enslave and degrade the parties, especially the woman, when taking upon themselves vows of lifelong fidelity. I oppose conventional marriage because I believe that such vows and their fulfillment often result in life-long misery to those who make them, and especially because I believe that fidelity to these vows on the physical plane—when love does not sanction their fulfillment, is one of the chief causes of race-degeneracy, and consequently the cause of the evils that grow out of race-degeneracy, including bad laws, political, economic, social; also including bad administration of otherwise good laws—all because of the well known principle that laws, institutions and their administration can be no better than the people themselves who make these laws and institutions, or (what is the same thing) who passively endure laws and their administration when saddled upon them by ambitious leaders of the present or of past generations.

This, in general terms, is why I oppose the popular marriage system, but I propose no violent revolution to secure the abolition of marriage laws, any more than I would propose a violent revolution to secure the abolition of the laws that now grant special privileges to churches and to churchmen. I appeal not to the arm of force, but simply to the common sense, and the sense of justice, of right and of fairness, that we all assume to lie at the bottom of human laws and government.

To put it a little differently, I believe in and advocate freedom of marriage, freedom of love, which is the only true basis of marriage, just as I believe in and advocate freedom in religious beliefs and religious observances, freedom of worship—the right to believe in one god, in three gods or a hundred gods, and the right to worship these gods in any way the devotee prefers, so long as that devotee does not try to force his belief and worship upon those of a different belief, or of no religious belief at all.

If I oppose "legal marriage," as Miss Blackwell says I do, it is chiefly because legal marriage opposes woman's right to self-ownership.

I oppose it because self-ownership and legal marriage are radically, irreconcilably opposed to each other.

One or the other must yield.

Which shall it be?

Self-ownership for woman is irrevocably bound up with her right to choose and to refuse her conjugal companionships, not once only and for life, but at all times just as she should have the right to choose at all times in matters of food, of drink and of clothing, or of business partnerships.

Once more for this time. If I read aright the book that Christians call the inspired volume, compulsory marriage laws are no part of the Christian code as first laid down. The greatest authority on Christian ethics, Saul of Tarsus, called also Paul, or Saint Paul, is quoted as saying:

"He that giveth in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth not in marriage doeth better." 1 Corinthians, 38th verse. Also: "I would that all men were even as I myself." That is, unmarried. Also: "I say, therefore, to the unmarried and widows, it is good for them if they abide even as I." Seventh and 8th verses of same chapter.

Much to the same effect is the teaching and the example of him who is regarded the chief hero of the Christian religion. The inferences to be drawn from these teachings and examples are obvious enough, and, therefore, I prefer not to take time and space to elaborate the matter further at this time. M. H.

Tendency to disease and tendency to vice are of similar origin, and neither can be cured by punishment, vengeance or imprisonment; but all tendency to disease, peculiarities, fears, weaknesses and vices in young or old can be cured or modified by favorable environment, suggestive therapeutics, massage and physical culture.—Medical Brief.

It is a matter of commonest observation that conventional marriage is hostile to friendship of every kind.—Dora Forster.

SWEET LAND OF LIBERTY.

In No. 1,046 Louis F. Post is quoted as saying: "Though a great influx of foreigners in recent years—foreigners seeking not greater liberty as in earlier times, but only better wages—may have had the effect of making American landmarks of liberty fade in the public opinion of today," etc. Although I greatly admire Mr. Post's article as a whole, yet I think that on this point he is altogether in error. If there has been a decline in American liberty, I do not believe foreigners are to blame for it.

When John Turner was deported I read an article in one of the New York dailies describing a public meeting held in his favor. It was stated that the meeting consisted chiefly of foreigners from the East Side, and the paper remarked that foreigners were now the only persons in the United States who cared anything for the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

Let us compare the United States and Europe as regards the freedom of the press to discuss the sex question. There is a well-known book, written by an English physician, which could not be named in LUCIFER. It advocates free love for unmarried women, denounces celibacy in unmeasured terms, and explains in full detail how to prevent conception. No American bookseller would attempt to advertise or mail it. This book has been translated into nearly every European language, and circulates with complete freedom in every European country. In France it is now going through the 6th edition, translated from the 32d English edition. My copy is in German and belongs to the 12th German edition. I bought it in 1890 in one of the largest book stores on the main street of Munich, my attention having been drawn to it by the prominent place it occupied in the window. At the beginning of the book are extracts from the press notices of it by the leading German newspapers, some of which I shall quote.

The "Neue Freie Presse" of Vienna is by universal admission the principal newspaper of Austria. It says of the book: "The father of a family who needs a reliable adviser regarding the bodily and mental health of his children, will be no less grateful to the unknown author of this work than will the student who wishes good instruction about the nature of society, and its moral and sanitary relations."

Many consider the "Frankfurter Zeitung" the best paper in Germany: It says: "Its standpoint will certainly shock, if not terrify, many unthinking persons, but it will be impossible to oppose it with arguments."

The "Berliner Tageblatt" is as prominent in Berlin as the "Tribune" in New York, or the "Inter-Ocean" in Chicago. It says of the book: "It deserves, indeed, the attention not only of all physicians, natural scientists and philosophers, but also of all men who have at heart the progress of human society."

There are flattering notices from seventeen other daily newspapers and scientific journals, all capitalist and orthodox like those I have quoted. Yet the book which these German papers extol cannot be named in print in the United States.

I take a French paper, edited by a well-known public man. It is devoted to the limitation of the family and contains matter which would quickly land any American editor in jail. The last issue I got was accompanied by a price list of eighteen different preventives. I need hardly say that I cannot give the name of the paper.

I have no personal knowledge of Russia, but am told that there is unlimited freedom of the press so far as the sex question is concerned.

To cut a long story short, it may safely be said that in every part of Continental Europe there is freedom to discuss this question. As much cannot be said of Great Britain, for now and again there have been Puritanical outbreaks there in the last thirty years. In 1877 Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant were prosecuted for circulating a book about preventives, and, although the Lord Chief Justice, who presided at the trial, recommended their acquittal, the jury found them guilty. Next year, however, a higher court quashed the conviction on a technicality, and Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant recommenced selling the book. The police told them that there would be no further interference, and since then there has been unlimited freedom of the press in England so far as preventives are concerned. The largest business in preventives is done from a country postoffice, and the postal authorities must know perfectly well that almost the whole business of that office is of that character. Yet, nothing is said.

During the past twenty-seven years there have been in England only three abuses of the obscenity law that have attracted general attention, although it is quite likely that there have been a number in the smaller towns which have been little noticed. In 1889 Vizitelly was imprisoned for a year for publishing some of Zola's novels. These do not discuss the sex question, but were supposed to contain indecent descriptions (one of Zola's novels is, or was, prohibited even in Germany). In 1898 George Bedborough was prosecuted for selling a book discussing love relations between persons of the same sex, and some articles in a magazine were afterwards included in the indictment. He plead guilty, and was allowed to go without punishment. About the same time a warrant was issued against Dr. Villiers for publishing another sex paper, but he escaped to the continent. Those were serious outrages, but far more have occurred in the United States within the same period. It must also be said that there is nothing in England like the administrative process of the United States postoffice.

Let me also remind Mr. Post that when outrages on liberty are committed in Europe, popular resistance is much more energetic than in the United States. Lillian Harman was in England during the Bedborough prosecution, and was deeply impressed by the organization and activity of the defenders of a free press. An American would be still more surprised at the vigor of the German Socialists, the Spanish Anarchists, or the Russian Revolutionists.

Finally, look at the names of the persecutors—Comstock, Hitchcock, McAfee, Madden, Hull, Goodwin. There is nothing foreign about these names. Except Goodwin, they are not even modern English; they are strictly American. I have a strong suspicion that the forefathers of every one of the persecutors were in America in the golden days of Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter" and the Blue Laws of Connecticut.

From the above facts it does not seem to me likely that foreigners are much to blame for the postal censorship of the United States. R. B. KERR.

LUCIFER'S HELPERS.

Bruce, $1; David A. Modell, $1; G. G. McMillan, 10c; Channing Severance, $1; Louis Fehlberg, $1; (Mrs.) Susan Reicherler, $1.25; Fred P. Young, $1; M. L. Studebaker, 50c; O. A. Verity, $1; W. G. Scott, 20c; (Mrs.) S. T. D. Robinson, $10; (Mrs.) S. S. Rockhill, $1; C. E. Coursen, $5; R. B. Kerr, $4.

In this list are included the names of those who send money or stamps to pay for LUCIFER, or its pamphlets, to be sent to friends who are not now subscribers; also the names of those who contribute to the fund for legal defense in the courts, and to keep LUCIFER's flag afloat while prosecuted for alleged "obscenity." If any names have been omitted that should have been included in this list, or, if included, incorrectly credited, the error will be gladly corrected when our attention is called thereto.

THE PEOPLE ARE NOT THE GOVERNMENT.

The ordinary citizen cannot take advantage of the cheaper market because the blessed tariff raises the prices on all such goods when they are brought home. The government, however, does not have to pay duties on its purchases abroad and may buy in the cheapest market. It is the misfortune of the people that, although they make the government, they are not the government, and must pay American taxes on American goods.—Boston Herald.

And just so, also, in the matter of literature, pictures, etc. The people make the government, pay all the government expenses, but they must not write, read nor send through the mails that which they think good for young and old to know. The privilege to do this is reserved for the government officials, and for their favorites—presumably for the class or classes supposed to be able to control the most votes on election day. M. H.

The vice of our theology is seen in the claim that the Bible is a closed book; that the age of inspiration is past; and that Jesus was something different from a man.—Emerson.

So long as we love, we serve. So long as we are loved by others I would almost say we are indispensible; and no man is useless while he has a friend.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

THE POSTOFFICE VS. FREE SPEECH.

Still another number of LUCIFER has been declared unmailable by the postoffice, and for a reason still more extraordinary than in the former cases to which we have called attention. The editor of LUCIFER had copied into his paper one of the Woman's Journal's recent editorials, in which we blamed the postal officials for suppressing an issue of LUCIFER because it quoted an extract from a medical book by a well-known woman physician—a book that is circulated through the mails without objection, and has been so circulated for years.

Superintendent Hull, of the Chicago postoffice, in notifying Mr. Harman that this later issue of his paper also was unmailable, marked four passages in it which were specified as obscene. Three of them were passages in the editorial copied from the Woman's Journal! Our readers have seen all that appeared in our columns in regard to this controversy. They can judge for themselves whether our comments on it were such as any man of sanity and good sense could declare to come under the law against circulating indecent literature.

The fourth passage pronounced unmailable by Superintendent Hull is a quotation from a report issued by the United States government through its Department of Agriculture, relating to the health of horses. In it the same advice is given in regard to the hygiene of brood mares that the woman physician gave in regard to the hygiene of prospective mothers.

The Free Speech League has issued another statement to the public. It says:

"Since our first appeal was printed repression has proceeded apace. The Washington authorities in immediate charge have continued to do injustice, while those really responsible are silent —therefore acquiescent. Assistant Attorney-General R. P. Goodwin, law officer of the Postoffice Department, who interprets the statutes for his chiefs, said to Dr. Immanuel Pfeiffer, agent of the league, 'Any and all discussions of the sex question is obscene, and so unmailable. The only occasion for any talk of such matters is in the private conversation of physicians with patients.'"

This amazing assertion is made in the face of the fact that the sex question is discussed in many scientific books that are freely circulated; it is discussed in scores of articles in the magazines; it is discussed in the medical journals, in ecclesiastical conventions, in the social purity societies and their organs, in the religious press and in problem plays and problem novels, often of very questionable taste. The matters that Mr. Goodwin says must not be talked about except in private conversation between physician and patient are spread broadcast before children and young persons in offensive quack-medicine advertisements in hundreds of daily papers; and the postoffice does not interfere.

If the postoffice officials really propose to take the ground that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene," they ought to make a general crusade against every one who discusses it. But they do not attack the strong publishing firms that print the problem novels and plays; they do not attack the great dailies, that publish the objectionable advertisements. They do not try to suppress the Woman's Journal, which has Mrs. Julia Ward Howe for chairman of its board of directors and many well-known and influential persons among its readers and supporters. But they direct a veritable persecution against little LUCIFER and suppress three issues of it in the course of two months, for articles which are not obscene in any honest or ordinary sense of the word. They do it because Lucifer advocates unpopular views and has few influential friends, and they hope to be able with impunity to deprive it of its constitutional right to free speech. Otherwise how does it happen that an editorial which was allowed to be published in the Woman's Journal without protest from the postoffice is pronounced indecent and unmailable as soon as it is copied into LUCIFER?

The United States Supreme Court would not for a moment sustain the monstrous proposition that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene, and so unmailable." It has habitually been held that that question may be discussed, provided it is done with due regard for propriety of language. The effort now is to stretch the law so as to suppress heresy on the plea of indecency. The Woman's Journal is wholly out of sympathy with many of the doctrines advocated in Lucifer, but we believe firmly in the right of free discussion. Truth has nothing to fear from it.

General Grant said that the best way to repeal a bad law was to enforce it, and some one else has said that it is a good thing to have an unsound hobby ridden hard, because it is the sooner ridden to death. It is fortunate that some of our postal officials are now so flagrantly abusing their powers under the law, because this will help to get the law amended in a way to make similar abuse of it impossible in the future. Meanwhile the attention of the postmaster-general at Washington should be called to the fact that some of his subordinates are stretching the law to a preposterous degree, and are showing marked unfairness by suppressing in one paper matter that is allowed to circulate freely in other publications.

Mr. Harman, the editor of LUCIFER, now 74 years of age, has been sentenced to a year in the penitentiary for circulating literature said to be indecent. He has taken an appeal to a higher court and has meantime been released on bail. Any one wishing to contribute toward the cost of carrying the case to a higher tribunal can send the money to the treasurer of the Free Speech League, Dr. E. B. Foote, 120 Lexington avenue, New York City.—A. S. B., in the Woman's Journal.

THE POSTAL INQUISITION AND DR. STOCKHAM.

Judge Bethea's conviction of the veteran woman reformer, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, on a charge of circulating improper literature through the United States mails will bring surprise and dismay to thousands of pure-minded American women who have written letters of thanks to that reputable physician for the valuable information given in the several books which she has written on marriage and motherhood.

It is safe to say that not one woman in a thousand who has read those books ever entertained the suspicion that they contained any improper word, phrase or sentence. They are written in delicate and chaste language, full of motherly sympathy for the countless women whose marital misery has been due in great measure to their ignorance of women's natural functions.

Dr. Stockham's books are devoted almost exclusively to the science of eugenics. The word eugenics is of Greek origin, and literally means good birth. The object of Dr. Stockham's books is to instruct women in the mysteries of motherhood, so that they may bear children well equipped physically and mentally, with little or no ill effect on the mothers. She has won the lasting gratitude of thousands of women because of her success in removing to a great degree the scriptural curse of maternity.

President Roosevelt is no more opposed to race suicide than is Dr. Stockham, but this physician, who has made a study of maternity for a period as long as the entire life of President Roosevelt, believes race suicide can best be prevented and race improvement best be promoted by the production of better children rather than more numerous children.

INTENT OF THE LAW.

"The old-fashioned father and mother believed literature on marriage and allied subjects was not for children," Judge Bethea is reported to have said in his ruling. "The young were told not to touch such subjects, just as they were told not to steal or lie. That is how the government came to have laws regulating the transmission of certain matter through the mails."

It seems to me that this is a remarkable misconception of the intent of the law, which was framed to prohibit the circulation of literature which has a tendency to deprave the morals and corrupt the minds of the young, and not in any degree to prevent the giving of scientific instruction to the mature on the most vital and most important of all sciences to the human race, namely: The science of eugenics, the science of race improvement.

Surely no congressman who voted for the passage of the often misused Comstock law had the most remote idea that he was voting to prohibit his wife or marriageable daughter from receiving advice through the mail from a reputable physician regarding prenatal culture, or the preparation for motherhood.

But, even supposing Judge Bethea is right in his contention that the original intent of the law was to prohibit the giving of such instructions—a supposition which attributes to the legislators a spirit of prudishness that few persons will admit they possessed—the law as framed surely does not forbid the giving of such instruction. It merely forbids the transmission of "obscene or indecent" literature. It requires a great stretch of the imagination to stamp as "obscene or indecent" the chaste and important information which has been given to the women of America in Dr. Stockham's book.

ATTITUDE TAKEN BY BETHEA.

"What we have to do," says Judge Bethea, "is to uphold the law as it stands."

He is right in that assertion, but how he could convince himself that Dr. Stockham's books violated that law will be hard for the many thousands of persons who have read them to understand.

"If these persons believe they are right in teaching these subjects so that the young may learn them they should have their doctrines interwoven with the law of the land," says Judge Bethea.

A remarkable statement! The highest law of the land is generally supposed to be the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to the people the right of freedom of press and of speech. It is not necessary to have the rights of the people "interwoven with the law"; it is sufficient that they are not forbidden by the law. The admirers of the work of Dr. Stockham have no desire to promote the circulation of literature forbidden by the law; but they contend that it is misconstruction of the law to hold that the instruction imparted in her books is in any way "obscene or indecent."

The learned judge gratuitously injects into his comment the phrase "so that the young may learn them." It is highly improbable that the young would be interested enough in Dr. Stockham's books to read them. Such an objection might be applied to the Bible or to many medical books which a child might read.

ARE UPHELD DESPITE RULING.

"I believe Mrs. Stockham had no intention of violating the law," continued Judge Bethea, in announcing the conviction of her business manager, Dr. Edward B. Beckwith, "but this man, a Harvard graduate and a physician, 35 years old, has been in this business for six years. He should have known better."

The inference is that Dr. Beckwith had the intention to violate the law, an intention which I am sure Dr. Beckwith would indignantly deny. "He should have known better." Better than what? Better than Dr. Stockham, who has given more than forty years of her life to the instruction of women in the functions of motherhood—better than she what is pure and what is impure, what is proper and what is impreper for every woman to know?

Those who know Dr. Beckwith, including many clergymen and estimable women in Chicago, assert that he is a man of the highest moral character, thoroughly conscientious, who gave up the prospect of acquiring a lucrative practice as a physician in order to devote himself to what he regarded as a more important work for the benefit of humanity, the freedom of women from the ills due to their ignorance of their physiological natures.

There are at times loud calls for the repeal of the Comstock law concerning the use of the mails, but this cry would never be heard if the law was not so frequently misused for the persecution of those who seek to benefit humanity by imparting wholesome instruction. The law is too sweeping because it does not make clear what "improper" literature is, but it is strange that a federal judge in this enlightened twentieth century could be found who would place such books as Dr. Stockham's under the ban of that law.—Jonathan Mayo Crane, in "Chicago Record-Herald," Sunday, June 11, '05.

DIVORCE A BLESSING.

New York, June 5.—In a sermon at the Church of the Messiah, Rev. Minot J. Savage has expressed the belief that, on the whole, divorces at the present time are altogether to be welcomed.

"They are," he said, "nearly always in the interest of oppressed women, giving them another opportunity for a free, sweet, wholesome life. There are cases where the divorce laws are abused, but not nearly so many as the ministers of a great many of our churches seem to imagine.

"Law does not make marriages. The church does not make marriages. Men and women, if they are ever married, marry themselves. All the law can do is to make a clumsy attempt to protect; all the church can do is to recognize and try to consecrate a fact which already exists. But if there is no marriage, then it is desecration to keep up the sham."

Promises are bad at any time, and when the heart is full silence befits it best.—Carpenter.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Sara T. D. Robinson, Lawrence, Kan.—Am sorry to hear of your continued persecution. I wish I could drive off the foe, but he is always close at hand. I send you the enclosed ($10) hoping it will help you some.

Sarah Stone Rockhill, Alliance, Ohio.—You ask how I like "The Right to Be Born Well." I think it perhaps the best of all your booklets, and think it will do much good. I will send one dollar with this for the defense fund.

C. E. Courson, Simpson, Kan.—Find enclosed my mite to help you a little. It is a late contribution but I trust it will be better than never. I wish you would send me a copy of the English Truthseeker. Also a copy of Florence Dixie's talk about what Roosevelt said at some woman's convention.

R. B. Kerr, Box 98, Oakland, Calif.—I enclose an article and $5. Apply $1 to LUCIFER'S subscription for one year, a proper amount to have Bradford "Truthseeker" sent to me for a year, and rest to defense fund. I am glad to see that a really vigorous defense is being made this time, and that the whole country seems on the eve of wakening up over the free press question.

R. W., Phenix, B. C.—I subscribe to the Blessed Trinity, Free Thought, Free Love and Free Labor, and am not ashamed to confess the faith that is in me. Am sending you $1.10 for a year's subscription to LUCIFER and the Bradford (Eng.) Truthseeker, in accord with your offer. Have seen an occasional copy of LUCIFER and like it well. Am sorry you are persecuted, but the world has always stoned the prophets and always will, I suppose. Have you any copies of "The Flaming Meteor," by Will Hubbard Kernan?

["The Flaming Meteor" is out of print, so far as we know. If any of our readers have copies to sell, please state price.]

Joseph S. Shatake, Denver, Colorado.—I see you were sentenced to one year imprisonment, hard labor, for the expression which you think in your mind is right and just. I also noticed that they have confiscated the last issue of your paper. It is true I do not agree with you in all your views, because I believe the women cannot be free as long as the men are slaves. We must be free economically first, then we shall surely be free sexually. We must see to take away the means of life from the exploiting class, but I do believe in free expression. I belive every man and woman should have a right to express his or her ideas, and if another man thinks in his ideas it is obscene, the only way that he can do is not to read or listen to a man's expression. I believe humanity could only be elevated by free discussion. Now we must see to find a proper way how to have free expression and free press. First, I believe we must use the same means as the oppressors of suffering humanity use. If your articles are obscene I believe there are many chapters in Shakespeare and in the Bible that have the same expressions as your so-called obscene literature has.

Channing Severance, Los Angeles, Cal.—The manner in which you are hounded by the Comstock outfit is meanly contemptible, and I often wonder if they will never be sated with persecution and let you alone. The absurd charge of obscenity, of course, is not the basis of their enmity. It lies in the ideas you advocate and not the language you use, for no one can assert, with sense or reason, that a calm and rational discussion of sex questions and matters is obscene. Obscene language is low and coarse reference to the so-called private sections of the physical form, and such language was never used, to my knowledge, by any sex-reform writer. You can hear it among low and depraved people and in certain classes of society, quite often, but no man or woman who is working for the betterment of mankind along the lines you have worked these many years has any use for obscene words or expressions, and those they do use are always chaste and proper. Anyone but a senseless fanatic knows the difference between coarse reference to sexual matters and an effort to enlighten the world as to a proper use of the sex organs and the evils that attend their improper use; also the difference between lascivious thoughts and scientific discussion of procreation, but this Comstock clique, with puritanical ideas of love and marriage, with religious insanity to insure prejudice in large quantities, seems unwilling to admit or incapable of seeing any difference between the two. * * * The man who asserts that every child has a right to be well born, and who declares there is a way by which they can be, is looked upon with holy horror, and an unjust and surreptitious law, enacted by a drunken Congress, is resorted to to suppress him and prevent the priceless privilege of a free press and free mails. It seems almost incredible, with the progress the world has made in the last fifty years, that honest men and women, with high ideals and sincere desire to better conditions under which we are born and must exist, are denied that right and are fined and imprisoned, as in Mrs. Stockham's case and yours.

New York World—Anthony Comstock and his methods of reform received yesterday a rude shock in Newark, N. J., when Charles B. Smith, of Bloomfield, who was arrested by the vice crusader, charged with misusing the mails, was discharged by United States Commissioner Bigelow.

Smith was arrested after he replied to a communication from Comstock. This proved a most important point in the trial of Smith. Comstock, under a fictitious name, sent a letter to the defendant concerning the drawing for an automobile and asking for tickets.

Commissioner Bigelow decided that the writing of a letter to a person who did not exist did not bring the accused within the penalties of the law. He said the offense in this case was not voluntary, but was brought about by the solicitation of the accuser.

"The means in this case," said the Commissioner, "which were adopted by the complainant were clearly unlawful, and there is absolutely no evidence of intent on the defendant's part to violate the law, excepting as created by the complainant's letter."

Dr. A. C. A., Washington, D. C.—I received your "Right to Be Born Well" and your offer to send six copies of same for one dollar. I do as much good, or more, loaning my copy, but enclose you a dollar and let you send me more pamphlets, many or few, as you please. I give away all copies of LUCIFER and talk fervently the injustice done to you. I treat forty to fifty patients a day, and if you do not get new subscribers it is not my fault. If you could send me back numbers of the magazine, I could distribute them and make my plea that much more forcible. . . . I suffered through an unhappy marriage—through ignorance of sex questions—and am most emphatic in teaching those coming in contact with me. I have an eighteen-year-old daughter who is a living example of what truthfulness about this momentous question will do. She is a happy, satisfied, normal girl. I was a studious old woman when I was twelve. I was bound to know, and my mother evaded the question. I got my knowledge from books intended for adults. My daughter got it naturally in the guise of a beautiful story. I was married when I was sixteen, a matter of curiosity; she has not the slightest desire—she knows. I was brought up "modestly"; she was brought up in the knowledge of natural law. There was nothing to cover up, nothing to be ashamed of. I am happy in having a pure, contented daughter. . . . My mother thanks me for having escaped worse than an unhappy marriage. . . . My case is one of many. Ignorance is sin and unhappiness. Truth only is normal. . . . Am glad to count Dr. Emanuel Pfeiffer among my friends. He has done all for you here that could be done. He inspired me with the desire to help you and the cause. . . . I enclose another dollar on subscription for the address below.

H. HANSEN, Colorado City, Colo.—Some years ago an editor in New York said, "When we get the most corrupt element of society in office, then government will cease." Another said, "No self-respecting person can afford to have his name connected with a political office." I am of the opinion that both of these statements are not far from the truth. One can pick up any kind of a newspaper and it contains one or more scandals, covering all sorts and sizes of stealing and boodling on the part of government officers from president down to dogpelter. United States senators and congressmen and post officials are no exceptions, so it is no wonder that those high-toned custodians of our morals should fear "The Light-Bearer." . . . The superintendent of our morals told the truth when he said that if the teaching of LUCIFER should be generally accepted society would be in a state of chaos. To him no doubt the politicians and priests mean society, and if LUCIFER'S ideas should prevail, then indeed those gentlemen might have to do something useful for a living. . . . I was once present in a Cripple Creek court house when in less than half a day six divorce cases were gone through with. There were six judge fees, twelve lawyer fees to be paid, and if the teachings of LUCIFER were generally recognized the lawyers and judge might have gone hungry that day. Such scenes are numerous throughout the country and people are silly enough to believe that it is necessary to parade their marital misfortunes before the world, and the real reason why LUCIFER is being persecuted is because it would cut off the income of those that profit by the misfortunes of others. . . . And, again, suppose that the idea of The Light-Bearer should prevail and children should be born well, what would become of the criminal lawyers? Their occupation would be gone. . . . To say that the paper is obscene is to talk nonsense. If there is any obscenity about it it must be in the mind of the reader; it can be nowhere else.

Better generate well than reclaim them when old—
For the gist of this matter is seeing
That to rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To hinder such people from being.

Than deliver from dungeon or galley;
Better put a stout fence round the edge of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley.

THE NEED FOR A MORAL CREED.

The people who are striving by all means, foul and fair, to maintain the subjection of women will scarcely come to accept enlightenment unless some clear idea can be presented of the principles which are involved in the future freedom of women. Not that conservatives have any definite creed themselves. Their hazy sentiment, gathered from northern ideas of justice, mixed with southern poetic chivalry, and jumbled up with scraps of Hebrew theology, without any observation of facts or modern scientific thought, is as impalpable to resist as a sea fog. All the greater is the duty of pioneers to make clear the principles and moral needs of the future.

The complicated relations of material needs and love needs in a highly developed society are disastrously obscured. Morality consists of just dealing in these relations and society does not know enough to be moral.

The advertisement pages of every journal contain suggestions of some method or other by which people may become rich with little or no labor and no complaint is made of the immoral principle involved. No one is ever taught the truth that for every one who spends a dollar without earning it, some one earns a dollar without spending it. All are encouraged to get rich; i. e., by the labor of others. The church—to its credit be it said—did lay down one great principle of social economy, that it is a duty "to learn and labor, truly to get mine own living." (Church catechism.) But the children of the church do not recognize this principle nor act upon it. Perhaps they are influenced by the example of bishops, who enrich themselves and their families on incomes of five thousand pounds a year.

It is no wonder that such people, when they confront the even more complicated questions of sex, have no morality. They can only inculcate silence. So great is the ignorance they have succeeded in maintaining that it is difficult to find any kind of statement, even in outline, of the functions of the sex faculties, much more any rules founded on such facts. I am compelled to go to the old church formulas.

Placed among the curious absurdities and contradictions of the marriage service, its reiteration of woman slavery in one place, its ecstatically romantic "worship" of the woman in another, is found the following statement of the three aims in the relations of men and women to each other, or, as it is expressed, "the causes for which matrimony was ordained."

"First. It was ordained for the procreation of children, to be brought up in the fear and nurture of the Lord, and to the praise of his holy name.

"Secondly, it was ordained for a remedy against sin, and to avoid fornication; that such persons as have not the gift of continency might marry and keep themselves undefiled members of Christ's body.

"Thirdly, it was ordained for the mutual society, help and comfort, that the one ought to have of the other, both in prosperity and adversity."

An enlightened churchman must have drawn up this. In fact the three sex needs are frankly recognized; first, parentage; secondly, instinctive passion; and thirdly, mutual help and friendship; and if we omit the errors that fear should be a part of education, and that sex unblessed by the priest is "sin," and the praise of asceticism as a gift, which moderns will call in question, it is a true statement of the three functions of sex.

I believe that the age that produced this simple sexual creed in great measure acted up to it. They did not shirk parenthood nor oblige women to wait till past their youth for it. It is true that they disregarded the problem of infant mortality, the inevitable accompaniment of reckless multiplication, but even down to our own day this problem has been very generally neglected. They did not ignore passion, nor try to force asceticism on all young persons. At their best they aimed at equal work for men and women, and not at making women either toys or slaves.

The sex system which conspicuously fails in either of the three functions of sex is doomed. This is why our present marriage system is being tried in the balance and found wanting.

If we could formulate a possible and common-sense morality, which would meet present-day problems, it would be responded to and acted upon. Is it not worth while to face risks of persecution and imprisonment to help build up an intelligible moral system which all except the the densely ignorant long for?

THE POLICY OF THE POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

No, Assistant Attorney General Goodwin did not, technically, make a "ruling" that all discussion of sex questions is unmailable because obscene. What you quote from him was said to Dr. Pfeiffer, of the Free Speech League. But all his rulings in the Harman cases, including his condemnation, this time in the form of an official letter to First Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock, of the Stockham matter in LUCIFER, are in exact harmony with what he said in conversation with Dr. Pfeiffer. And Mr. Hull, superintendent of second-class mails in the Chicago postoffice, informed Mr. Harman that he was only executing the decision of his Washington superiors in stopping all papers containing discussions of the relations of the sexes. So Mr. Goodwin, when he denies that he has made a "ruling" condemning all discussion of sex questions except in the private conversations of physicians with patients, takes the customary advantage of a mere technicality. What he has banned, as it appeared in LUCIFER, including the excerpts from the Woman's Journal, proves absolutely that his declaration in his conversation with Dr. Pfeiffer represented the settled policy of the postal department in so far as he formulates that policy.—Edwin C. Walker, Chairman Executive Committee, Free Speech League, in the Truth Seeker, New York.

England's heir to the throne, Prince Edward of Wales, now 11 years old, is a humorist. King Edward asked him the other day what he was studying, and the little prince said: "All about Perkin Warbeck." Asked who Warbeck was, he replied: "He pretended he was the son of a king, but he wasn't; he was the son of respectable parents."—Woman's Journal.

THE PIONEERS OF SEX REFORM.

We ought, from time to time, to call to mind the names and works of those who have preceded us in the aspirations of a rational humanity.

I subjoin a list of noteworthy books declaring for sex rationalism.

Though the writer, who is first, both in priority of time and of importance, Mary Wollstonecraft, had to combat the false sentimentalism of Rousseau on education, yet the English champions of the liberation of women certainly drew inspiration from French writers—who thereby repaid the instruction in free thought and political liberty which Frenchmen of the 18th century had gained from English philosophers.

A Vindication of the Rights of Woman. Mary Wollstonecraft, 1792. "I love man as my fellow; but his scepter, real or usurped, extends not to me, unless the reason of an individual demands my homage; and even then the submission is to reason and not to man."

An Enquiry Concerning Political Justice. William Godwin, 1793. "Marriage is an affair of property and the worst of all properties." "So long as I seek to engross one woman to myself and to prohibit my neighbor from proving his superior desert and reaping the fruits of it, I am guilty of the most odious of all monopolies."

Epipsychidion. P. B. Shelley, 1821. The passage beginning, "I never was attached to that great sect" remains the finest expression in verse of the breadth and essential nobility of love.

> "Narrow
> The heart that loves, the brain that contemplates,
> The life that wears, the spirit that creates
> One object, and one form, and builds thereby
> A sepulchre for its eternity."

Appeal of One-Half the Human Race, Women, Against the Pretensions of the Other Half, Men, to Retain Them in Political and Thence in Civil and Domestic Slavery. William Thompson. London, 1825.

The Elements of Social Science. London, 1854. Dr. George Drysdale, M. D. This book has been translated into many languages and has had a larger circulation than any other book on sex, except, perhaps, Bebel's "Woman." Its fearless exposure of the evils resulting from celibacy to both sexes is among its many good points. "Every natural desire, like every bodily organ, requires normal activity and satisfaction, and to attain this end should be the aim of every individual and of society as a whole." "It is absolutely impossible to have a free and worthy sexual morality in our society so long as marriage remains the only honorable arrangement for the union of the sexes." This book is perhaps the best of the three or four classics of sex reform.

The Rights of Woman and the Sexual Relation. Karl Heinzen.

The Subjection of Women. John Stuart Mill, 1860. "Hardly any slave is a slave at all hours. . . . No slave is a slave to the same lengths and in so full a sense of the word as the wife is. . . . However brutal a tyrant she may be chained to, he can claim from her and enforce the lowest degradation of a human being, that of being made the instrument of an animal function, contrary to her inclinations. While she is held in this worst description of slavery as to her own person, what is her position in regard to the children in whom she and her master have a joint interest? They are by law his children. He alone has any legal rights over them."

Bible Communism. The Oneida Social Theory, 1848. Reproduced, slightly condensed, in "History of American Socialisms," by the founder of the Oneida Community. John Humphrey Noyes, 1870. "In the Kingdom of Heaven, the institution of marriage, which assigns the exclusive possession of one woman to one man, does not exist." (Matt. xxii. 20; Rom. vii. 2; Col. ii. 20.) "All experience testifies that sexual love is not naturally restricted to pairs." "The law of marriage 'worketh wrath.' 1. It provokes to secret adultery, real or of the heart. 2. It ties together unmatched natures. 3. It sunders match natures. 4. It gives to sexual appetite only a scanty and monotonous allowance, and so produces the natural vices of poverty, contraction of taste, and stinginess or jealousy. 5. It makes no provision for the sexual appetite at the very time when that appetite is strongest. By the custom of the world marriage in the average of cases takes place at about the age of 24, while puberty commences at the age of 14. For ten years, therefore, and that in the very flush of life, the sexual appetite is starved. This law of society bears hardest on females, because they have less opportunity of choosing their time of marriage than men. This discrepancy between the marriage system and nature is one of the principal sources of the diseases peculiar to women, of prostitution, secret vice and licentiousness in general." "The amative and propagative functions are distinct from each other, and may be separated practically."

The Truth About Love. New York. Second Edition, 1872. Authorship attributed to "Jennie June" (Mrs. D. G. Croly), who originated "Sorosis." "The institutions which are founded upon human theories of the sexual relation do not correspond with the facts of that relation; the test of truth is not observed and our institutions are organized lies. Society only recognizes one form of the relation; there are many." "The coming man, the splendid man of the future, will be as great morally and intellectually as he is physically, and be able to subordinate his grand passions to higher human uses."

Woman in the Past, Present and Future. August Bebel, 1879. "The satisfaction of sexual desire will be just as much the personal affair of each individual as the satisfaction of every other natural desire. No one will have to give an account of himself regarding it; an outsider will have nothing to say in the matter."

The Origin of the Family. Frederick Engels, 1884. "In the family, the man is the bourgeois; the woman the proletarian."

Scientific Meliorism. Jane Hume Clapperton. "Birth of the fittest" is suggested.

The Ethic of Free Thought. Karl Pearson.

The Strike of a Sex. George Noyes Miller.

The Quintessence of Ibsenism. George Bernard Shaw, 1891.

The British Barbarians. Grant Allen.

Love's Coming of Age. Edward Carpenter.

The Old and the New Ideal. Emil F. Ruederbusch, 1896.

Motherhood in Freedom. Moses Harman.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses. Vice: Its Friends and Its Foes. What the Young Need to Know. Edwin C. Walker.

My Century Plant. Lois Waisbrooker. A remarkable collection of facts.

Man and Superman. G. Bernard Shaw, 1903. In "The Revolutionists Handbook," appended to this play, Shaw suggests, or, at least, hints at the solution of the sex problem, already clearly perceived on this side of the Atlantic by Moses Harman and R. B. Kerr as the only ultimate solution, viz.: that selective breeding can and will be carried out by women when untrammeled. "If a woman can, by careful selection of a father and nourishment of herself, produce a citizen with efficient senses, sound organs, and a good digestion, she should clearly be secured a sufficient reward for that natural service to make her willing to undertake and repeat it." "The maternal instinct leads a woman to prefer a tenth share in a first-rate man to the exclusive possession of a third-rate one." "Marriage, or any other form of promiscuous amoristic monogamy, is fatal to large states, because it puts its ban on the deliberate breeding of man as a political animal." "Englishmen hate Liberty and Equality too much to understand them. But every Englishman loves and desires a pedigree, and in that he is right."

CAUSE OF THE POSTAL DEFICIT.

Henry A. Castle, formerly auditor for the postoffice department, writes in a recent number of Harper's Weekly concerning the deficit in that department. Certainly he knows whereof he speaks when he says:

"In the United States last year the enormous sum of $46,000,000 was paid the railroads for transportation of the mails, of which sum $5,000,000 represented that inexcusable and scandalous graft, the rent of mail cars, under which item more is paid annually for the bare use of the cars than the cars cost in the first place."

Calculation according to official figures moves the Detroit Journal to remark:

"With this graft eliminated the treasury statement this year would show, instead of a deficit of $28,000,000, a surplus of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, even admitting that exorbitant express rates were paid on mail matter."—Star, San Francisco, Cal.

No man's life is free from struggles and mortifications, not even the happiest; but everyone may build up his own happiness by seeking mental pleasures, and thus making himself independent of outward fortune.—Von Humboldt.

THE CRIME OF INFANTICIDE.

[The following article is written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox as a comment upon the case of Clara Adler, a young girl arrested and to be tried for murder on the charge of infanticide.]

Before any jury decides to execute the girl who has slain her fatherless baby, in terror of the world's scorn, let all the wives of the land who have slain their unborn children because they did not want to be bothered with their care and expense be brought up for trial.

Child murder is murder whether the invisible child's heart beats under the mother's or visibly moves the cambric robe lying in her arms.

Fashionable women whose attendance at fashionable churches is unremitting, aided by fashionable medical accomplices, commit the crime of murder of unborn children all over our Christian land, and walk abroad unmolested by law. Were any physician, in any community, to state the number of respectable women and wives who appeal to him for such criminal collaboration, the world would be astonished at his reply.

Many of these women go about their project in cold blood, with no reason save selfishness and love of pleasure as incentives. This poor crazed girl committed her dreadful act in a frenzy of shame and terror—shame at her loss of self-respect, terror at the world's hand lifted against such offenders of established laws of civilization. She had loved as primitive woman loved, and followed the will of her lover, believing all he promised. She forgot self-protection in her love, and sacrificed pride, but there was no thought of sin in her mind. She was in God's sight, more truly the man's wife than many a woman who walks down church aisles, while the organ peals forth the wedding march, with hatred and disgust in her heart for the man whose gold bought her.

The child born of love of the mother for the father alone is legitimate in the sight of the Great Creator of All Things. No legislature, no court, no marriage laws can make the children conceived in hatred or indifference legitimate.

But the world needs laws and marriage. Imperfect and crude as our social conditions are, they are the best for the maintenance of order and decency which have yet been formulated.

The woman who fails to give her child the seal of love has wronged it for time and eternity. The woman who has failed to give her child the sanction of church and law has wronged it for its earthly span of life.

And she has wronged herself by descending from the standards set by the world and society for her to maintain. God made love, and man made marriage, and woman must follow the dictates of both before she brings a well born child into existence. Unfortunately, public opinion ignores the violation of God's law, and gives all its condemnation to the violator of man's law. The worst devil conceived by superstition never fashioned a hell so terrible as this world of church-going people provides for an erring woman.

It was the thought of her suffering and of the suffering of her fatherless child in this earthly hell which drove Clara Adler to her awful crime.

God pity her, and all like her; and God speed the day when the world will remodel its ideals of what constitutes illegitimacy and true motherhood. Progress speed the day when the man who deserts the mother of his child will share whatever punishment may be meted out to her by society, or courts of justice, for any desperate act. Childless wives, who hide dark secrets under lace covered breasts, as you sit in divine service next Sunday, send up a prayer to God for poor Clara Adler.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in "Chicago American."

MR. HULL DEFICIENT IN SANITY AND GOOD SENSE.

The Woman's Journal thus comments upon the allegation of one Hull, a postoffice clerk in Chicago, that its editorial upon the postal censorship established by him is obscene and unmailable:

"Still another number of Lucifer has been declared unmailable by the postoffice, and for a reason still more extraordinary than in the former cases to which we have called attention. The editor of Lucifer had copied into his paper one of the Woman's Journal's recent editorials, in which we blamed the postal officials for suppressing an issue of Lucifer because it quoted an extract from a medical book by a well-known woman physician—a book that is circulated through the mails without objection, and has been so circulated for years.

"Superintendent Hull, of the Chicago postoffice, in notifying Mr. Harman that this later issue of his paper also was unmailable, marked four passages in it which were specified as obscene. Three of them were passages in the editorial copied from the Woman's Journal! Our readers have seen all that has appeared in our columns in regard to this controversy. They can judge for themselves whether our comments on it were such as any man of sanity and good sense could declare to come under the law against circulating indecent literature.

"The fourth passage pronounced unmailable by Superintendent Hull is a quotation from a report issued by the United States government, through its department of agriculture, relating to the health of horses. In it the same advice is given in regard to the hygiene of brood mares that the woman physician gave in regard to the hygiene of prospective mothers."

Reprinting this the San Francisco Star comments:

"It might be considered a little odd that an extract from a United States agricultural report should be obscene—when quoted in Lucifer. Will these reports be censored hereafter to see if they are 'nice' enough for mail bag society and the farmers? Some of the agricultural journals are frightfully obscene along these lines! Why not appoint Bok, of the Ladies' Home Journal, official censor of all printed matter?

"The agent of the Free Speech League, Dr. Pfeiffer, interrogated Assistant Attorney General R. P. Goodwin, law officer of the postoffice department, who interprets the law for his chiefs, and was told:

"'Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene, and so unmailable. The only occasion for any talk of such matters is in the private conversation of physicians with patients.'

"By this ruling, all that parents may hope to know about 'the betterment of the race,' they must learn when they have become ill enough to summon a physician! A young medico with the ink scarcely dry on his sheepskin may instruct prospective mothers, while the wisdom of men and women gained through years of study and experience must be buried from sight as 'obscene matter!' (If the mother of Mr. Goodwin is living, how degraded she must feel.)

"Under this ruling we shall have no more reports of Professor Loeb's experiments and conclusions. Luther Burbank must stop talking and writing. Nearly three centuries ago Linnaeus and his works were put under the ban because the great naturalist said he had discovered sex in plants. Our assistant attorney general must be a mistaken reincarnation from some of those antique souls. Note, not only does he seek to banish the unclean subject of human life from prints, but he has decreed the one and only occasion when 'talk,' even, is permissible. The science of biology must be cut from the college curriculum. The Star is goaded to remark that the assistant attorney general is a blankety-blank fool, or words to that effect."

Mr. R. P. Goodwin, attorney general for the postoffice, now denies that he has made a decision that any and all discussion of the sex question is unmailable, which is technically true, but at the same time is but a quibble. Mr. Hull, of Chicago, takes Mr. Goodman's statement as a guide for his own ruling and confiscation of journals obnoxious to him, then refers the matter to the department at Washington, which means Mr. Goodwin, and Mr. Hull's view of the non-mailibility of the matter is confirmed by Mr. Goodwin, so that his statement amounts to an official ruling and judicial decision.

The constitution of the United States guarantees freedom of the press, and the suppression of some of the matter condemned by Mr. Hull is the most flagrant violation of that instrument which has ever occurred. None of the matter published by Mr. Harman is really obscene, though we can see where a narrow-minded man might find a peg upon which to hang a decision that it is. But as to the matter condemned, which has been reprinted by us, we can see no possible opportunity of calling it obscene. The denial of the mail to Mr. Harman is evidently in pursuance of a plan to suppress a publication which deals with the sex question in a radical way.

We wonder how Henry B. and Alice Stone Blackwell and Julia Ward Howe relish their inclusion in the category of obscene journalists!—Truth Seeker, New York.

MANY GOOD ARTICLES of contributors are again crowded out to make room for matter that seems timely and important, clipped from exchanges and cotemporaries; also to make room for brief utterances selected from a vast accumulation of personal letters written by subscribers and helpers. These utterances are printed with little regard to priority as to time, or to literary ability. Once more we ask the forbearance of all those whose articles have failed to see the light of print, or whose personal letters have not been honored with notice in the "Voices" column. No discrimination against any of these friends is intended. Selections are made hastily because of press of other work. BERNARD SHAW AND HIS CRITICS.

"Straws show which way the wind blows," is an old saying. Saw-logs in the river show which way the current flows, is another.

The recent publication of George Bernard Shaw's letter and the criticisms called out thereby, may be called a saw-log in the river, showing that there exists, deep down beneath the surface, a strong, a resistless current of thought in the public mind, concerning the ages-old question of sex—of sex as a factor, a chief factor, in the problem of life.

For the benefit of our readers who may not have access to the great daily papers, it may be well to say that there was an attempt made by the officials of the New York public library to keep out of that institution the books of the well known dramatist and essayist, G. Bernard Shaw, because those books contain plainly-worded criticisms upon the present popular sex ethics of modern civilization in Europe and America. In other words, Mr. Shaw's writings show very clearly that he is by no means an admirer of modern institutional marriage as a basis or standard of sex morality.

In reply to an inquiry from the London correspondent of the New York Times, asking what the dramatist thought of the action of the public librarian in New York in placing his books on "the restricted list," Mr. Shaw wrote the following letter, which, though long, will doubtless be read with interest by all who do not bow the knee to authority, and who claim the right to do their own thinking:

"Dear Sir—Nobody outside of America is likely to be in the least surprised. Comstockery is the world's standing joke at the expense of the United States. Europe likes to hear of such things. It confirms the deep-seated conviction of the Old World that America is a provincial place, a second-rate country-town civilization after all.

"Personally, I do not take the matter so lightly. American civilization is enormously interesting and important to me, if only as a colossal social experiment, and I shall make no pretense of treating a public and official insult from the American people with indifference.

"It is true I shall not suffer either in reputation or pocket. Everybody knows I know better than your public library officials what is proper for people to read, whether they are young or old. Everybody knows also that if I had the misfortune to be a citizen of the United States I should probably have my property confiscated by some postal official and be myself imprisoned as a writer of 'obscene' literature.

"But as I live in a comparatively free country and my word goes further than that of mere officialdom, these things do not matter. What does matter is that this incident is only a symptom of what is really a moral horror, both in America and elsewhere, and that is the secret and intense resolve of the petty domesticity of the world to tolerate no criticism and suffer no invasion.

"The one refuge left in the world for unbridled license is the married state. That is the shameful explanation of the fact that a journal has just been confiscated and its editor imprisoned in America for urging that a married woman should be protected from domestic molestation when childbearing. Had that man filled his paper with aphrodisiac pictures and aphrodisiac stories of duly engaged couples, he would now be a prosperous, respected citizen.

"If 'Man and Superman' were a specimen of the same propaganda its 'wholesomeness' would not be questioned. But 'Man and Superman' contains an explicit attack on marriage as the most licentious of human institutions. Consequently the domestic Asiatis, which has for so long wielded the stolen thunders of morality and religion to defend its excesses, with the result that man is the most morbid of all the animals, is terrified to find the thunderbolts burning its own hands and coming back like boomerangs at its own head. Well, let it defend itself if it can, how it can, and as long as it can.

"I am an artist, and, it is inevitable, a public moralist, and if everybody supposes that by going through a marriage ceremony or any other ceremony he can put himself outside the moral world on any subject whatever, he is mistaken.

"I have honor and humanity on my side, wit in my head, skill in my hand, and a higher life for my aim. Let those who put me on their restricted lists so that they may read me themselves while keeping their children in the dark, acknowledge their allies, state their qualifications, and avow their aims, if they dare.

"I hope the New York press will in common humanity to those who will now for the first time hasten to procure my books and witness the performances of my plays under the impression that they are Alsatian, warn them that nothing but the most extreme tedium and discomfort of conscience can be got by thoughtless people from my sermons, whether on the stage or in the library.

"I hope also that the many decent and honorable citizens who are bewildered and somewhat scandalized by my utterances will allow me to choose my own methods of breaking through the very tough crusts that form on the human conscience in large modern civilizations. Indeed, a man is hardly considered thoroughly respectable until his conscience is all crust and nothing else. The more respectable you are the more you need the pickaxe.

"I am extremely sorry that the insult implied in the action of the library authorities should to some extent reflect on Richard Mansfield, Arnold Daly, Robert Loraine, and the many artists who, as members of their companies, have been associated with my plays in America. Without for a moment pretending that the actor is committed to all the ideas of which he becomes the interpreter, I am yet convinced that the extraordinary enthusiasm with which my plays have been pushed to success on the American stage, in the teeth of managerial skepticism and general incredulity, has been due to moral as well as artistic enthusiasm.

"Pray do not suppose I am insensible of the good intentions of the leaders of the Comstockers, however corrupt and sensual may be the bigoted connubiality which provides them with the huge following that emboldens them to meddle with matters the greatest men touch with extreme diffidence. But, as I have said is 'Man and Superman,' 'All men mean well,' and 'Hell is paved with good intentions, not bad ones.'

"Before you undertake to choose between evil and good in a public library or anywhere else, it is desirable that you should first learn to distinguish one from the other. The moment you do that, say, after forty years' study of social problems, you realize that you cannot make omelettes without breaking eggs; that is, you cannot have an advance in morality until you shake the prevailing sense of right and wrong sufficiently to compel a readjustment.

"Now, if you shake the sense of right and wrong you give to every rascal his opportunity and to every fool his excuse. Preaching of Christianity makes some men Doukhobors instead of better citizens. Socialism may become the plea of the anarchist or the dynamiter, science of the vivisectionist, and Puritanism of the Comstocker; but the nation that will not take these risks will never advance morally.

"I do not say that my books and plays cannot do harm to weak or dishonest people. They can, and probably do. But if the American character cannot stand that fire even at the earliest age at which it is readable or intelligible, there is no future for America.

"Finally, I can promise the Comstockers that startling as 'Man and Superman' may appear to them, it is the merest Sunday School tract compared with my later play, 'Major Barbara,' with which they will presently be confronted. Yours faithfully,

"G. Bernard Shaw."

Among the many criticisms upon this letter as printed in the New York Times and reproduced very extensively throughout the United States, is one by the chief of the "Comstockers," Anthony Comstock himself, which criticism, on account of its length, cannot be reproduced in this issue of Lucifer. It will probably appear in No. 1051. Instead of Mr. Comstock's reply the closing paragraph of the New York Evening Sun's comment, under date of September 27, is herewith inserted:

"We are not concerned to defend the opinion of Mr. Bostwick [the librarian who is said to have excluded Mr. Shaw's book]. We think it unlikely that 'the little East Sider,' for whom he is so solicitous would be apt to suffer by the general distribution of Mr. Shaw's plays, for the simple reason that the little East Sider would find them quite unreadable. It is a marvel how these Comstockers strain at a gnat. A year ago a perfectly decent picture by a painter of considerable merit was ordered out of a dealer's window in Fifth avenue, while a store in one of our chief thoroughfares at no great distance has continued for a long time to display a remarkable variety of indecency and vulgarity with complete impunity. The minds of the Comstockers are wonderful indeed, but it is idle to pretend that they are confined to this country. If Mr. Shaw had not lost his temper he would never have professed to think that they were. However, he was not so completely disturbed as to overlook his opportunity, nor did he fail to remind his readers that he has another play ready, in comparison with which 'Man and Superman' is 'the merest Sunday school tract.' He assures us that he will 'not suffer either in reputation or pocket' in consequence of Mr. Bostwick's act. We are convinced of that; it will be a queer day when Mr. Shaw fails to turn the most untoward accident into an opportunity to advertise his wares."

That Mr. Shaw's letter, and his books also, are not above criticism, will readily be admitted, even by his most ardent admirers, but while perfection is not claimed for him it is earnestly believed that the books and plays of George Bernard Shaw will do much toward destroying faith in old-time superstitions in regard to sex morals, and that the attempt to suppress these books and plays will only hasten the downfall of the reign of ignorance, law-enforced ignorance, in regard to the most important of all problems pertaining to human life, that of sex and race-reproduction.

M. HARMAN.

GOVERNMENTAL USURPATION!

In 1845 a reduction in the rates of postage was forced upon Congress by private mail companies. Hale & Kimball, also Lysander Spooner, established private mail routes, carrying letters far and near for six cents, while the government was charging, according to distance, six and a quarter cents, ten cents, twelve and a half cents, eighteen and three-quarters cents and twenty-five cents, for conveying a letter.

While Spooner's company was handling mail between Boston and Baltimore, other companies were extending routes as far west as Cincinnati.

When the government discovered that private companies were securing the transportation of the greater part of the mail, the politicians in Congress decided to prosecute the private companies and drive them out of business, but Spooner met them with the unanswerable argument that the constitution did not prohibit the carrying of mail by private individuals. Congress then abandoned the prosecution of the companies and reduced the postage on a letter to five cents for three hundred miles and to ten cents for a greater distance. Even this rate did not destroy the private companies and Congress was forced at its next session to reduce the rates of postage still lower.

About the year 1882 a private mail company in New York engaged in the business of carrying letters at two cents, while the government was still charging three cents. These men were promptly arrested and suppressed, but the government immediately reduced postage to two cents per letter.

Anent the postoffice situation may be mentioned the fact that it is now unlawful for a private postoffice to be established. The president declared this about a year ago when he refused to allow the white people in a town down south to open, at their own expense, a branch postoffice rather than take their mail from a "nigger" postmaster whom Roosevelt had appointed.

[The authorship of the above article is not recalled at this writing, but the facts stated (if truly stated) and the arguments based thereon, speak for themselves.—M. H.]

DON'T INDICT THE CORPORATION.

There is a mistaken idea about corporations. A corporation isn't bad. It's the men in it. In cases where the criminal negligence of corporations results in the loss of human life, the individuals that compose the corporation should be held accountable . . . If you want to stop head-on collisions put a director on the cowcatcher. You won't have any more of them, will you? No. . . . . Don't indict the corporation; indict the men. One object some men have in incorporating is to be able to do things as corporations that they wouldn't do as individuals. There is ground for the assertion that because the men who do these things are too high up, because they have vast capital and great influence behind them, their acts are designated as "operation" rather than "crimes."—Judge James H. Dill, New Jersey.

If governments were established and administered for the good of all instead of for the benefit of the few, such indictments as this of Judge Dill would not be needed. When Theodore Roosevelt demands that the corporation be indicted and that the officials go free, is it not because he knows that he himself is at the head of the most criminal of all the corporations, the United States government itself?—and that if its officials were indicted for their crimes against the common citizen he himself would have to meet criminal charges more numerous than any other man, perhaps, now living on the American continent?

Do we need to specify?

How many of LUCIFER'S subscribers have been robbed of their property without the forms of law—bad as the laws are—by the appointees of Theodore Roosevelt?

And until he discharges the officials that have robbed LUCIFER'S readers of their property rights, and until he does what he can to make due compensation, due reparation, is he not morally as well as legally responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates?

M. H.

DOES IT PAY?

I am much interested in the contest for freedom of speech and press. But what can be done? I confess that it does not appear to me that there is much opportunity to do anything. There is a great conspiracy of concealment that now includes every department of government and every great organization, commercial and industrial. To have the truth fully known about the business enterprises so called would destroy 90 per centum of what is now called business. While, if the full truth was known about social matters and social relations, the hollowness of moral claims and pretenses would be at once manifest.

There is not a great evil that threatens the public welfare, or a great vice that tends to social degradation, of which wealth is not the support and the citadel. It looks like a hopeless fight when the so-called religious organizations, and what are supposed to be the moral forces in the social structure, are afraid to point out the sources of the evils or to tell the truth about their origin. It is terrible to be compelled to face the fact that the Christian virtues, or what are generally so regarded as such and sympathies of the heart, are under the influence of ignorance and superstition, agencies in the social organization tending to physical deterioration and moral degeneration. Only a few days ago two ladies called on me in the interest of a child-saving effort. They go down in the slums of the city and pull out of the pile of human debris a few specimens in whose bodies are wrapped up, possibly, three or four generations of vice and crime, and after washing them and dressing them decently they are engaged in planting them about over the state, wherever they can find any family foolish enough to take them, thus sowing tares like an enemy in the night in the social garden. If I had talked to them plainly about the ignorance that made these children what they are, and the pure, free and loving relations that would produce children that would tend to exalt the race, they would have been insulted and, I suppose, accused me of obscenity. It is ridiculous. But what can we do? The stone wall ought to be out of the way. But shall we butt our brains out in the impossible task of trying to remove it? Wealth pays tribute to such blind efforts at charity, but it sentences you to prison for an honest effort to better the condition of the human family. An effort that is approved privately by every well informed man and woman and that has the undoubted approval of scientific men and women everywhere. But science is not free from sycophancy to wealth and power, and many of its so-called votaries, knowing the truth, yet cannot be relied upon to assist in the attempt to secure freedom of speech and press. They bend the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning. Dishonest intelligence submits to ignorance. Does duty require a man to destroy himself? I doubt it. When you find that without doubt "Ephraim is joined to his idols," I am not sure but it is wise in more ways than one to "let him alone."

The great mass of the people are so engaged in the pursuit of material things, in the struggle for existence, or in the demands of avarice, that even though, when they stop long enough to think about it, they agree with you, will give it only a passing thought and no sympathetic assistance.

I admire your courage, hopefulness and sincerity, and as evidence I send a small contribution that I wish I could make much more.

OUR DESPOTIC POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

In the case of Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, the recent action of the postoffice department has been arbitrary, unjust and tyrannical, if the facts are as stated in a leaflet issued by the Free Speech League, and addressed "To Lovers of Freedom Everywhere,"

Mr. Harman has been convicted of mailing obscene literature and sentenced to imprisonment. He has appealed to a higher court and, meantime, he printed an edition of his journal with an account of his struggle with the censorship (which the Comstock law brought into existence) and mailed it in regular order. The entire edition was confiscated by the postoffice authorities, on the claim that it contained obscene matter, and two articles were pointed out by the superintendent in Chicago as violations of the postal law. One of the articles was an extract from Dr. Alice B. Stockham's Tokology, a book widely read and approved.

Protest against the outrage was made, whereupon R. P. Goodwin, assistant attorney general for the postoffice department, made this absurd ruling: "Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and unmailable. The only occasion for any talk of such matters is in the private conversation of physicians with patients."

Altogether the department has made itself ridiculous and a proper object of derision to all persons of sense and fairness.

It is quite evident that the confiscation referred to was made on other grounds than those stated, and that the articles were a mere pretext for suppressing the paper. If the United States government must resort to dishonest methods in dealing with one of its citizens, then it is sufficient cause to make all lovers of justice in the whole country blush for shame.

When well-meaning people learn the power of truth they will no longer be frightened by error.

If it is feared, as charged in the leaflet referred to, that the doctrines preached in LUCIFER will demoralize society, why not meet the situation by endeavoring to spread abroad the truth in their place? The gag and silence will never accomplish any good. They will only oppress the weak and condemn the ignorant to perpetual ignorance—or, that is what they would do, but they will not, because they will not long prevail.

The rational plan will soon be adopted, of effecting all kinds of reforms by teaching truth, instead of trying to silence error.—The Liberator, Minneapolis, Minn.

"RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL" was sent to its subscribers several weeks ago—that is, to the greater part of them, but it is quite possible that, harassed as we have been, some names have been overlooked. We shall be very glad to correct all errors as soon as the mistake, or omission, is brought to our notice.

The price per single copy, paper bound, is 25 cents, or one dollar for six copies; twelve dollars and fifty cents per hundred. Handsomely bound in superior cloth, 50 cents per copy; $2 for six; $25 per hundred.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

R. PETERSON, Paris, TEX.—Enclosed find $10 to be used against postal despotism, as you see fit.

A. C. SCHINDLER, San Francisco, Cal.—Enclosed find $2, which please apply where it is most needed. I must say I admire your courage.

ROBERT D. IRWIN, Secretary Brotherhood of the Daily Life, St. Louis, Mo.—Enclosed you will find $2 for two subscriptions—papers to be addressed to the Exposition Building, St. Louis. These subscriptions are to aid you in your fight for a free press.

E. VAN BUSKIRK, Galveston, Ind.—Inclosed find $5 which I promised some time ago to aid in LUCIFER'S defense. I hope that through you Comstockism will be overthrown. The Comstock law is the most dastardly legislation enacted by any "civilized" nation on earth.

M. L. STUDEBAKER, Highspire, Pa.—I think Mr. Post owns the foreigner in the U. S. A. an apology; according to Mr. Kerr, in an article in a recent LUCIFER the Americans seem to be the greatest enemies of liberty. Please send me copies of back numbers of LUCIFER. There are a few intelligent fellows here, and I want to give samples to them.

MRS. BERTHA MOORE, Portland, Ore.—I have read the booklet, "Right to Be Born Well," with heartfelt interest and pleasure. It is excellent. It is beautiful. It is rich in truth quietly and calmly spoken. It is clear as the cloudless sky and no more obscene. Love, intelligence and reason cannot do otherwise than commend it. Only hatred, ignorance and prejudice will condemn it.

H. W. BOOZER, Grand Rapids, Mich.—"The Right to Be Born Well" is received. It is a magnificent production—a most fitting companion to the others. I have enclosed circulars in copies of LUCIFER to physicians of this city and hope you may hear from some of them. LUCIFER must live. It is the liberator from woman's slavery. I have its cause ever in mind, and grieve I cannot do more for it.

A. A. COWLES, Cleveland, O.—Enclosed find $1 to apply on subscription. If you have some cards like the one I send, or any other good propaganda leaflets, advertising LUCIFER, you may send me as many as you like. I shall soon take a trip through several states and may be able to use them in a way that will aid you and the cause you stand for. As I shall travel on a wheel I cannot carry much, or I should distribute LUCIFER over the whole distance.

S. A. B., Little Crab, Tenn.—I should like to subscribe for LUCIFER, but I can't at present for I have been put out of business because of my Freethought ideas. I have only one copy of LUCIFER, but I like it very much. The world needs more papers like yours. I should like to have you send sample copies to the inclosed list of names. They are all those of free thinkers who, I feel sure, will be interested in LUCIFER. May you have the greatest success.

S. B. COWLES, Sand Lake, Mich.—The inclosed dollar is for three copies of "The Right to Be Born Well," cloth bound. I fully agree with Carl Nold in what he said in No. 1048 concerning this work. I feel greatly encouraged in seeing honest Socialists and revolutionists uniting in the "Industrial Workers of the World." "Our Advancing Postal Censorship," by Louis F. Post, is a grand production. Be of good cheer under your persecution for the sake of truth and righteousness.

A MOTHER, Illinois.—I received the booklet, "Right to Be Born Well." It is what the world needs, God knows, but it will be a long time before the great majority will accept its teachings. This is the greatest need to-day of the whole world. God bless you for ever starting the grand work. I cannot find words to utter the indignation I feel whenthinking of the treatment you are receiving, but we will help you. I received LUCIFER yesterday. Went by myself and read and reread every word of it. Am sending your 50 cents on subscription and 50 cents for you, and will take it as long as printed, but am so unfortunate as to be poor and sixty-five years old, and only have a little home and what I can earn. As I refuse to be the tool of any man I am not considered worthy of support, but God and a few good men will help us poor women. * * * I am going to drop two magazines in order to spare this dollar, but I'd rather have LUCIFER'S teaching on this vital subject than all the books that's published. I don't dare to show your writings here, for there is no one that wants to learn. You may use anything I write if you wish.

WALTER HUNT, Cincinnati, Ohio.—"The Right to Be Born Well" is not only an important, but an invaluable, addition to the none too abundant literature of eugenics. Its strong and commanding quality must commend it to all real thinkers, while the absence of any suggestion of pedantry should make it a most effective agent in popularizing a subject of paramount human interest, concerning which there is yet an amazing ignorance on the part of general society. Dignity and good taste characterize the work throughout. The dedication is altogether admirable; it especially appeals to me with directness and force.

OSCAR ROTTER, New York City.—I wish to express my sincerest sympathy with the venerable editor in his new persecution by the government of this so-called republic, the United States of America. I hope he will succeed in his attempt to defend the rights and liberties guaranteed by the constitution against its official violators and assailants. * * * The money enclosed is intended as a contribution to the defense fund in the warfare against the Russification policy of the national government and for the renewal of my subscription to LUCIFER for another year.

EDWIN P. LUDWIG, Washington, D. C.—Have you gotten out Nos. 1047 (Aug. 31) and 1048 (Sept. 7) as yet? I have not received either of these and presume it may be another case of holdup. It is outrageous the way the postoffice department is treating you, and I do trust you may be able to get the best of them in the fight. The truth is bound to triumph in the long run, but it is very hard for some of its earlier prophets to make much headway; but cheer up and be of good courage, for the right is on your side.

[Yes, we published Nos. 1047, 1048 and also 1049, and now are getting out 1050. Our friends should always let us know promptly whenever they miss a number.]

J. WARNER MILLS, Denver, Col.—I am sincerely sorry to know that you have again been made the victim of federal tyranny on account of your publication of LUCIFER. Mr. Post's able presentation of the matter in the "Public" makes it clear that you are such a victim, and that the tyranny bodes no good for the future. Saving his personal strictures, I join heartily in all he says. I trust your attorneys will be able to secure a new trial. I enclose you check for $5, which may be of some service to you in your present trouble.

Hoping all may yet turn out well for you and expressing my deep sympathy in your present distress, and congratulating you withal on your manly and heroic stand for freedom and right, I remain, yours sincerely.

AGNES BENHAM, Adelaide, South Australia.—In the "Fortnightly Review" (English) for March, this year, there is a very noteworthy article by Vere Collins, entitled, "The Marriage Contract in Its Relation to Social Progress." That such a radically written paper as this could find room in a magazine of such good standing and authority as the "Fortnightly" is surprising and shows that we are certainly moving. However slowly. In case LUCIFER comrades have not yet had this extremely well written article brought under their notice I beg to recommend it to them. It is so competently written that a synopsis of it is difficult, but it appears to me the very self-same principle of individual liberty in sexual matters that LUCIFER itself stands for. Perhaps you can find room for the following short quotation: "Certainly our ideas of morality seem to be inverted when it is regarded as respectable for worn-out women to be inverted when it is regarded as respectable for worn-out women to bear large families of diseased children to drunken fathers, while to bear large families of diseased children to drunken fathers, while maternity "in the lusty stealth of nature" drives the mother to the river or the streets. As Mr. Bernard Shaw points out ("Man and Superman"): "Every woman who can produce a citizen, with efficient reason, sound organs and a good digestion, should clearly be secured a sufficient reward for that national service to make her ready to undertake and repeat it." Mr. Vere Collins endorses Mr. Shaw's remarks, which he says mean in effect that "maternity should be made a charge on the state. Every woman might draw an allowance in respect of her children, subject to their being brought up properly and might herself be entitled to a pension on attaining a certain age. Prostitution would practically disappear and maternity would gain in honor. With regard to the question of expense, no system could be as extravagant as the present wastage, involving the industrial idleness of thousands of women and the propagation of disease"

That so radical an idea as that of "maternity being made a charge upon the state" (quite irrespective of the mother being married or unmarried) can be deliberately advocated in a journal of high repute shows that sex reform ideas are permeating thought everywhere, and not much longer will our brave leaders, such as Harman, be singled out for aught but praise and gratitude! Such as he are the dauntless pioneers who have "blazed the trail" for us to follow, and our children and children's children, born of liberty and love, will bear their honored names in sure remembrance.

FRANK D. BLUE, editor "Vaccination," Kokomo, Ind.—Social Freedom, by Hulda L. Potter-Loomis, published by M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago. Price 20 cents. This pamphlet deals with the unpopular subject of sex, which, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. Some one has said it is never safe to guess unless you know. I now confess I do not know, but it will be my guess that notwithstanding its present unpopularity the subject as well as experiments along the line of sex relationships will go on until a basis satisfactory to the vast majority will be reached. What that basis will be I have not the temerity to think. I know of one thing I am fully convinced: Women will settle it to suit themselves and all man made laws and customs to the contrary will have to "go way back and sit down." The pamphlet is epigrammatic in style and selections cannot do it justice. The author's contentions are radical, but lose none of their interest from that fact. It is necessary to shock people to get them to think, yet they must be awakened for progress to come. It is always well to know what the other fellow thinks, and this book will inform you.

W. C. NATION, Levin, New Zealand.—I am sorry to see you in the hands of the Philistines. Be of good courage. Every reformer gets "more kicks than ha'pence," but your persecutors are just advertising LUCIFER and its teachings the world over, and the public are reading and thinking. I am wondering whether you are "in durance vile." Ah, well,

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage."

You must sing like a canary and laugh at the law, because "the law is a hass," and has imprisoned and tortured and burnt some of the world's greatest heroes. The same tendency exists to-day, and among those who, while they persecute you, are sadly deficient in morality.

"The craven rook, the pert jackdaw,
Though neither birds of moral kind,
Yet serve, if hanged or stuffed with straw,
To show us which way blows the wind."

These people, according to Pope, have their purpose. They serve to show us which way the wind of popular opinion blows. Popular opinion strewed garments in the way for the Great Teacher to walk over. Popular opinion afterwards crucified him. In these days popular opinion counts for little. We want men who can defy it, and dare to do right, and if need be suffer for it. You must not send anything through the mails that savors of immorality, unless it is in a bound volume with gilt edges and a gold cross on the first cover. What would they say if you published the little stories about Abraham and Hagar, Lot and his daughters, Jacob and Bilhah, Dinah's defilement, Judah, Onan and Tamar, Absolom and his father's concubines? But there—you musn't! Enclosed are four shillings and six pence, payment for pamphlets.

Speak what you think now, in hard words, and to-morrow speak what to-morrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said to-day. A man should never be ashamed to own he has been wrong, which is but saying that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday.—Emerson.

DIETETICS—A CHAPTER ON.

Dear Friend and Brother:

I will give my views on economy on good but cheap living.

In the first place discard all flesh foods and eggs. There is no objections to eggs as to wholesomeness. Fruits, grains, nuts and vegetables are the least expensive. Four pounds unbolted cornmeal, one pound shelled Spanish peanuts, one peck of potatoes per week and some dried fruit or berries, or those fresh picked, which I can now get wild from the fields. I also have several varieties of berries in my garden. Apples in this locality are a total failure this season. Last year they were so plentiful that they could not be sold for 5 cents a bushel. I took a small load to market, but could not sell an apple at any price. I found poor women who earned their living over the washtub who accepted them as a gift, which saved my carting them home. I fed many to my horse, especially sweet ones. My rations cost me 48 to 50 cents a week. I eat about 1 pound of honey a week, which, if I had to buy, would cost 12 cents. I have 26 swarms of bees, so that I have honey to sell. Have string beans and green sweet corn. I eat a little honey about every meal. If I were to dispense with honey it would reduce my cost of living to 36 cents a week.

I occasionally make about one-half of my meal on grass. When I eat grass it reduces my rations to 18 cents a week. I should eat it more, but with my artificial teeth I cannot masticate it sufficiently. When I do eat it I grind it in a small hand mill. There is no food that I eat that agrees with me better than grass, or that I sleep better after eating. I use no stimulants, such as tea, coffee, tobacco or alcohol in any form. I have not drunk a cup of tea for 70 years and never drank 3 cents worth of coffee. I can't understand why it is that people cannot be satisfied to drink the best drink there is—water. It costs nothing and is the most healthful. My eighty-second birthday will be next Friday.

My health is good, but I am not as strong as in my earlier days. I can stand it to do about one-half of an able-bodied man's work. If I do much more I suffer from its effects. I want you to credit the dollar for paying cost on your suit. I only wish that I could make it ten times as much. Fraternally yours,

Red House, N. Y. A. H. FRANE.

TEACHINGS OUGHT TO MAKE MEN HAPPIER.

Moses Harman, the noble old man who for twenty-five years has published LUCIFER, has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary. The United States court found some articles published by Harman to be obscene.

Harman himself writes superior English and expresses his thoughts so skillfully that the most fanatic inquisition could not find fault. His assistants, especially some energetic women, are less careful and prudent, and one such article became the pretext for the lawsuit.

Moses Harman defends the right of free motherhood and the right of the unborn child. His teachings ought to make men happier. Whoever knows how much mischief is caused by jealousy and ignorance in matters of sex, will admit that teachers like Moses Harman are necessary; they should be highly honored and rewarded, and not punished.

An appeal will be taken from this terrible judgment, which may turn out to be a death-warrant for the much-tried old man. Such an appeal, though, costs much money. Whoever wants to show his sympathy to Moses Harman ought to read his paper and pay the $1 it costs per year. Write to his daughter, Lillian Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.—Neues Leben (Chicago).

"GOD AND MY NEIGHBOR."

"God and My Neighbor," by Robert Blatchford, author of "Merrie England," "Britain for the British," etc. Published by Charles H. Kerr & Co., 56 Fifth avenue, Chicago. Price, 50 cents in paper cover; cloth, $1. Some of the chapter headings are:

I, The Sin of Unbelief; II, What I Can and Cannot Believe; III, Is the Bible the Word of God?; IV, Evolution of the Bible; V, What Is Christianity?; VI, Can Men Sin Against God?

This book, as well as "Merrie England," has had a great run, both in England and America, among that class of people who do their own thinking.

Some sin through excess of love; others through lack of it, and these most of all.—Elbert Hubbard.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

CREATIVE LIFE.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

BY ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D.

A timely and important message not found in text books. Every girl seeks and should have this true, plain and practical knowledge. One writes: "Thank you, thank you, dear Doctor, for the plain but beautiful thoughts. Womanhood, motherhood and life have new meanings. You ennoble your theme." Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation.

AMERICAN EDITION, CLOTH, PREPAID, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book. "Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

DAINTILY PRINTED. PREPAID, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW.

A PRIMER OF SEXUAL RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

"Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. Price 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

THE STRIKE OF A SEX.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

LOVE'S WAY TO PERFECT HUMANHOOD.
By Agnes Benham.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia. Orders may be sent through this office.

THE CONQUEROR.

Drunken with victory, their hordes surge by;
Prone with the dead am I; but through the smoke
Glimmers the face of Truth, for whose dear sake
I fight, or die, or wear the captive's yoke.

THE DEGRADATION OF WOMEN BY PURITANISM.

It is often alleged that puritanism in matters of sex has improved the position of women. No statement could be more completely devoid of historical foundation. On the contrary, there is plenty of evidence that puritanism has been unfavorable to women, and I shall give some of it.

According to Sir Henry Maine, Rome had, during her most glorious days, "a marital tie which was in fact the laxist the Western world has seen." Puritanism was at its lowest ebb. "Yet," says the same writer, "no society which preserves any tincture of Christian institution is likely to restore to married women the personal liberty conferred on them by the middle Roman law."

About the time when the Christians became dominant in the Roman empire there happened one of the most extraordinary outbreaks of asceticism that the world has ever seen. Total abstinence from sex became the ideal of virtue, even marriage being considered degrading and immoral. Men fled by thousands to the desert to live as hermits, in order that they might never again behold the face of a woman. Sometimes a mother, deprived of her only son, followed him to the desert to try to speak with him; but these fanatics thought it degrading even to speak to or look at one's mother, and she usually had to return without having gained her end. Women, too, were attacked by outbreaks of holiness, and refused all further relations with their husbands.

What was the consequence to women of all this? Lecky has told us in his "History of European Morals." He says: "Another injurious consequence, resulting, in a great measure, from asceticism, was a tendency to depreciate extremely the character and the position of women. * * * Woman was represented as the door of hell, as the mother of all human ills. She should be ashamed at the very thought that she is a woman. She should live in continual penance, on account of the curses she has brought upon the world. She should be ashamed of her dress, for it is the memorial of her fall. She should be especially ashamed of her beauty, for it is the most potent instrument of the demon."

This frantic feeling against women soon began to show itself in legislation. Says Lecky: "The pagan laws during the empire had been continually repealing the old disabilities of women, and the legislative movement in their favor continued with unabated force from Constantine to Justinian, and appeared also in some of the early laws of the barbarians. But in the whole feudal legislation women were placed in a much lower legal position than in the pagan empire." "Women were even forbidden by a provincial council, in the sixth century, on account of their impurity, to receive the Eucharist into their naked hands."

As the middle ages went on, however, the tide began again to turn. The institution of chivalry arose and blossomed out in its full luxuriance during the Crusades. Of chivalry Hallam says: "Courtesy had always been the proper attribute of knighthood; protection of the weak its legitimate duty; but these were heightened to a pitch of enthusiasm when woman became their object. * * * But the morals of chivalry, we cannot deny, were not pure. In the amusing fictions which seem to have been the only popular reading of the middle ages there reigns a licentious spirit, not of that slighter kind which is usual in such compositions, but indicating a general dissoluteness in the intercourse of the sexes. This has often been noticed of Boccaccio and the early Italian novelists; but it equally characterised the tales and romances of France, whether metrical or in prose, and all the poetry of the Troubadours. The violation of marriage vows passes in them for an incontestable privilege of the brave and the fair." Here we have a clear case of a rise in the estimation of women going hand in hand with a break up of puritan morals.

In which modern nation have women achieved most? Undoubtedly in France. No other country has produced anything like the number of great women that France has done. Heloise, Joan of Arc, Agnes Sorel, Margaret of Navarre, Ninon de l'Enclos, Madame de Sévigné, Madame Roland, Madame de Staël, George Sand, Rosa Bonheur, Louise Michel and Sarah Bernhardt make a list of women remarkable in numbers and variety of talent and extending over many centuries. Not only has France produced many distinguished women, but women have always had very great influence on the public affairs of that country. When France was almost conquered by the English she was rescued by two women, Joan of Arc and Agnes Sorel. During the revolution the leader of the Girondists was Madame Roland. These were women of exceptional ability, but in almost every generation there have been some women of sufficient capacity and influence to write their names deep in the history of the country.

Now what are the relations of the sexes in France? It is hardly necessary to ask. During her whole history France has had an unbroken record for laxity of the marriage tie. Many of the great women I have named are known to have utterly disregarded the conventional proprieties, and Ninon de l'Enclos, Madame de Staël and George Sand are among the most celebrated varietists in history.

In his "Ancient Regime" Taine gives us much information about the relations of the sexes in the eighteenth century. From a contemporary he quotes the following about the Duc de Lauzun: "He was asked what he would say if his wife (whom he had not seen for ten years) should write to him that she had just discovered that she was enciente. He reflected a moment and then replied: 'I should write and tell her that I was delighted that heaven had blessed our union; be careful of your health; I will call and pay my respects this evening.'" "There are countless replies of the same sort," Taine adds. "Nobody is jealous, not even when in love."

As to the influence of women at that time Taine quotes an English contemporary: "Women were of consequence even in the eyes of the old and of the clergy; they were the roughly familiar, to an extraordinary degree, with the march of events; they knew by heart the characters and habits of the king's friends and ministers. One of these, on returning to his chateau from Versailles, informed his wife about everything with which he had been occupied; with us he says one or two words to her about her water color sketches or remains silent and thoughtful, pondering over what he has just heard in parliament."

Let us now contrast French women with those of two of the most vigorous puritan races, the Jews and the Scotch.

The Jews are noted for the strictness of their domestic relations, for their respect for the "sanctity of the home." The number of able Jewish men has been extraordinary. Yet I can find no record of any eminent Jewish woman except the actress Rachel.

Among the Scotch working class the relations of the sexes are rather the reverse of strict, but among the classes from which eminent women usually come there is as rigid puritanism as can anywhere be found. Scotland has produced more eminent men in proportion to population than any other modern nation, and it would therefore be reasonable to expect that she would have a good list of distinguished women. But she has not. I do not know if one could call Mary Stuart an eminent woman, but anyway she was half French by birth and wholly French by education. Lady Flora Hastings, the unfortunate young lady who wrote one exquisite song and then died, was also only half Scotch, and held an office at the English court. There is no doubt about Lady Nairne, however. She was almost, if not quite, the equal of Burns as a writer of songs, and must be ranked second or third among the poetesses of the world. But she is really the only great woman in the history of Scotland. Moreover, Scotch women have exceedingly little influence on public affairs of any kind. The Jews and Scotch agree with the German emperor that the sole business of women is to attend to church, cooking and children.

It is worth noting that the great puritan, Milton, is the one among English poets who has the lowest idea of woman, and most insists that she be kept in her place. He makes Eve say to Adam:

> "My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st
> Unargued I obey. So God ordains:
> God is thy law, thou mine: to know no more
> Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her praise."

What we know of Asia suggests the same inference as the facts of Europe. China and Japan are very like in many things, but they have always differed profoundly in their standards of sex morality, China has always believed in strict puritanism for women, but not Japan. "The Japanese," said Malthus, "are distinguished from the Chinese, in being much more warlike, seditious, dissolute and ambitious." W. E. Griffiths, speaking of the Japanese woman in his book on "The Mikado's Empire," says: "I shall not dwell upon the prevalent belief of foreigners that licentiousness is the first and characteristic trait in her character, nor upon the idea that ordinary chastity is next to unknown in Japan, for I do not believe that such is the case." But he admits that "the moral status of the Japanese is low enough, and every friend of Japan knows it." Yet Griffiths says. "In comparing all other Asiatic nations I am inclined to believe that Japan, in respect and honor to women, is the leader of them all. * * * An amount of social freedom prevails among womankind in Japan that could hardly be expected in a country at once Asiatic, idolatrous and despotic."

When we weigh all these facts it seems to me that, far from regarding puritanism as an elevator of women, we must come to the conclusion that it has probably done more to degrade women than any other influence whatever.

BERNARD SHAW AND HIS CRITICS.

"Straws show which way the wind blows," is an old saying. Saw-logs in the river show which way the current flows, is another.

The recent publication of George Bernard Shaw's letter and the criticisms called out thereby, may be called a saw-log in the river, showing that there exists, deep down beneath the surface, a strong, a resistless current of thought in the public mind, concerning the ages-old question of sex—of sex as a factor, a chief factor, in the problem of life.

For the benefit of our readers who may not have access to the great daily papers, it may be well to say that there was an attempt made by the officials of the New York public library to keep out of that institution the books of the well known dramatist and essayist, G. Bernard Shaw, because those books contain plainly-worded criticisms upon the present popular sex ethics of modern civilization in Europe and America. In other words, Mr. Shaw's writings show very clearly that he is by no means an admirer of modern institutional marriage as a basis or standard of sex morality.

In reply to an inquiry from the London correspondent of the New York Times, asking what the dramatist thought of the action of the public librarian in New York in placing his books on "the restricted list," Mr. Shaw wrote the following letter, which, though long, will doubtless be read with interest by all who do not bow the knee to authority, and who claim the right to do their own thinking:

"Dear Sir—Nobody outside of America is likely to be in the least surprised. Comstockery is the world's standing joke at the expense of the United States. Europe likes to hear of such things. It confirms the deep-seated conviction of the Old World that America is a provincial place, a second-rate country-town civilization after all.

"Personally, I do not take the matter so lightly. American civilization is enormously interesting and important to me, if only as a colossal social experiment, and I shall make no pretense of treating a public and official insult from the American people with indifference.

"It is true I shall not suffer either in reputation or pocket. Everybody knows I know better than your public library officials what is proper for people to read, whether they are young or old. Everybody knows also that if I had the misfortune to be a citizen of the United States I should probably have my property confiscated by some postal official and be myself imprisoned as a writer of 'obscene' literature.

"But as I live in a comparatively free country and my word goes further than that of mere officialdom, these things do not matter. What does matter is that this incident is only a symptom of what is really a moral horror, both in America and elsewhere, and that is the secret and intense resolve of the petty domesticity of the world to tolerate no criticism and suffer no invasion.

"The one refuge left in the world for unbridled license is the married state. That is the shameful explanation of the fact that a journal has just been confiscated and its editor imprisoned in America for urging that a married woman should be protected from domestic molestation when childbearing. Had that man filled his paper with aphrodisiac pictures and aphrodisiac stories of duly engaged couples, he would now be a prosperous, respected citizen.

"If 'Man and Superman' were a specimen of the same propaganda its 'wholesomeness' would not be questioned. But 'Man and Superman' contains an explicit attack on marriage as the most licentious of human institutions. Consequently the domestic Alsatia, which has for so long wielded the stolen thunders of morality and religion to defend its excesses, with the result that man is the most morbid of all the animals, is terrified to find the thunderbolts burning its own hands and coming back like boomerangs at its own head. Well, let it defend itself if it can, how it can, and as long as it can.

"I am an artist, and, it is inevitable, a public moralist, and if everybody supposes that by going through a marriage ceremony or any other ceremony he can put himself outside the moral world on any subject whatever, he is mistaken.

"I have honor and humanity on my side, wit in my head, skill in my hand, and a higher life for my aim. Let those who put me on their restricted lists so that they may read me themselves while keeping their children in the dark, acknowledge their allies, state their qualifications, and avow their aims, if they dare.

"I hope the New York press will in common humanity to those who will now for the first time hasten to procure my books and witness the performances of my plays under the impression that they are Alsatian, warn them that nothing but the most extreme tedium and discomfort of conscience can be got by thoughtless people from my sermons, whether on the stage or in the library.

"I hope also that the many decent and honorable citizens who are bewildered and somewhat scandalized by my utterances will allow me to choose my own methods of breaking through the very tough crusts that form on the human conscience in large modern civilizations. Indeed, a man is hardly considered thoroughly respectable until his conscience is all crust and nothing else. The more respectable you are the more you need the pickaxe.

"I am extremely sorry that the insult implied in the action of the library authorities should to some extent reflect on Richard Mansfield, Arnold Daly, Robert Loraine, and the many artists who, as members of their companies, have been associated with my plays in America. Without for a moment pretending that the actor is committed to all the ideas of which he becomes the interpreter, I am yet convinced that the extraordinary enthusiasm with which my plays have been pushed to success on the American stage, in the teeth of managerial skepticism and general incredulity, has been due to moral as well as artistic enthusiasm.

"Pray do not suppose I am insensible of the good intentions of the leaders of the Comstockers, however corrupt and sensual may be the bigoted connubiality which provides them with the huge following that emboldens them to meddle with matters the greatest men touch with extreme diffidence. But, as I have said in 'Man and Superman,' 'All men mean well,' and 'Hell is paved with good intentions, not bad ones.'

"Before you undertake to choose between evil and good in a public library or anywhere else, it is desirable that you should first learn to distinguish one from the other. The moment you do that, say, after forty years' study of social problems, you realize that you cannot make omelettes without breaking eggs; that is, you cannot have an advance in morality until you shake the prevailing sense of right and wrong sufficiently to compel a readjustment.

"Now, if you shake the sense of right and wrong you give to every rascal his opportunity and to every fool his excuse. Preaching of Christianity makes some men Doukhobors instead of better citizens. Socialism may become the plea of the anarchist or the dynamiter, science of the vivisectionist, and Puritanism of the Comstocker; but the nation that will not take these risks will never advance morally.

"I do not say that my books and plays cannot do harm to weak or dishonest people. They can, and probably do. But if the American character cannot stand that fire even at the earliest age at which it is readable or intelligible, there is no future for America.

"Finally, I can promise the Comstockers that startling as 'Man and Superman' may appear to them, it is the merest Sunday School tract compared with my later play, 'Major Barbara,' with which they will presently be confronted. Yours faithfully,

"G. Bernard Shaw."

Among the many criticisms upon this letter as printed in the New York Times and reproduced very extensively throughout the United States, is one by the chief of the "Comstockers," Anthony Comstock himself, which criticism, on account of its length, cannot be reproduced in this issue of Lucifer. It will probably appear in No. 1051. Instead of Mr. Comstock's reply the closing paragraph of the New York Evening Sun's comment, under date of September 27, is herewith inserted:

"We are not concerned to defend the opinion of Mr. Bostwick [the librarian who is said to have excluded Mr. Shaw's book]. We think it unlikely that 'the little East Sider,' for whom he is so solicitous would be apt to suffer by the general distribution of Mr. Shaw's plays, for the simple reason that the little East Sider would find them quite unreadable. It is a marvel how these Comstockers strain at a gnat. A year ago a perfectly decent picture by a painter of considerable merit was ordered out of a dealer's window in Fifth avenue, while a store in one of our chief thoroughfares at no great distance has continued for a long time to display a remarkable variety of indecency and vulgarity with complete impunity. The minds of the Comstockers are wonderful indeed, but it is idle to pretend that they are confined to this country. If Mr. Shaw had not lost his temper he would never have professed to think that they were. However, he was not so completely disturbed as to overlook his opportunity, nor did he fail to remind his readers that he has another play ready, in comparison with which 'Man and Superman' is 'the merest Sunday school tract.' He assures us that he will 'not suffer either in reputation or pocket' in consequence of Mr. Bostwick's act. We are convinced of that; it will be a queer day when Mr. Shaw fails to turn the most untoward accident into an opportunity to advertise his wares."

That Mr. Shaw's letter, and his books also, are not above criticism, will readily be admitted, even by his most ardent admirers, but while perfection is not claimed for him it is earnestly believed that the books and plays of George Bernard Shaw will do much toward destroying faith in old-time superstitions in regard to sex morals, and that the attempt to suppress these books and plays will only hasten the downfall of the reign of ignorance, law-enforced ignorance, in regard to the most important of all problems pertaining to human life, that of sex and race-reproduction.

THE NEED FOR A MORAL CREED.

The people who are striving by all means, foul and fair, to maintain the subjection of women will scarcely come to accept enlightenment unless some clear idea can be presented of the principles which are involved in the future freedom of women. Not that conservatives have any definite creed themselves. Their hazy sentiment, gathered from northern ideas of justice, mixed with southern poetic chivalry, and jumbled up with scraps of Hebrew theology, without any observation of facts or modern scientific thought, is as impalpable to resist as a sea fog. All the greater is the duty of pioneers to make clear the principles and moral needs of the future.

The complicated relations of material needs and love needs in a highly developed society are disastrously obscured. Morality in a highly developed society are disastrously obscured. Morality consists of just dealing in these relations and society does not know enough to be moral.

The advertisement pages of every journal contain suggestions of some method or other by which people may become rich with little or no labor and no complaint is made of the immoral principle involved. No one is ever taught the truth that for every one who spends a dollar without earning it, some one earns a dollar without spending it. All are encouraged to get rich; i. e., by the labor of others. The church—to its credit be it said—did lay down one great principle of social economy, that it is a duty "to learn and labor, truly to get mine own living." (Church catechism.) But the children of the church do not recognize this principle nor act upon it. Perhaps they are influenced by the example of bishops, who enrich themselves and their families on incomes of five thousand pounds a year.

It is no wonder that such people, when they confront the even more complicated questions of sex, have no morality. They can only inculcate silence. So great is the ignorance they have conceded in maintaining that it is difficult to find any kind of statement, even in outline, of the functions of the sex faculties, much more any rules founded on such facts. I am compelled to go to the old church formulas.

Placed among the curious absurdities and contradictions of the marriage service, its reiteration of woman slavery in one place, its ecstatically romantic "worship" of the woman in another, is found the following statement of the three aims in the relations of men and women to each other, or, as it is expressed, "the causes for which matrimony was ordained."

"First. It was ordained for the procreation of children, to be brought up in the fear and nurture of the Lord, and to the praise of his holy name.

"Secondly, it was ordained for a remedy against sin, and to avoid fornication; that such persons as have not the gift of continency might marry and keep themselves undefiled members of Christ's body.

"Thirdly, it was ordained for the mutual society, help and comfort, that the one ought to have of the other, both in prosperity and adversity."

An enlightened churchman must have drawn up this. In fact the three sex needs are frankly recognized; first, parentage; secondly, instinctive passion; and thirdly, mutual help and friendship; and if we omit the errors that fear should be a part of education, and that sex unblessed by the priest is "sin," and the praise of asceticism as a gift, which moderns will call in question, it is a true statement of the three functions of sex.

I believe that the age that produced this simple sexual creed in great measure acted up to it. They did not shirk parenthood nor oblige women to wait till past their youth for it. It is true that they disregarded the problem of infant mortality, the inevitable accompaniment of reckless multiplication, but even down to our own day this problem has been very generally neglected. They did not ignore passion, nor try to force asceticism on all young persons. At their best they aimed at equal work for men and women, and not at making women either toys or slaves.

The sex system which conspicuously fails in either of the three functions of sex is doomed. This is why our present marriage system is being tried in the balance and found wanting.

If we could formulate a possible and common-sense morality, which would meet present-day problems, it would be responded to and acted upon. Is it not worth while to face risks of persecution and imprisonment to help build up an intelligible moral system which all except the the densely ignorant long for?

Fidei Defensor.

There is a mistaken idea about corporations. A corporation isn't bad. It's the men in it. In cases where the criminal negligence of corporations results in the loss of human life, the individuals that compose the corporation should be held accountable . . . . If you want to stop head-on collisions put a director on the cowcatcher. You won't have any more of them, will you? No. . . . . Don't indict the corporation; indict the men. One object some men have in incorporating is to be able to do things as corporations that they wouldn't do as individuals. There is ground for the assertion that because the men who do these things are too high up, because they have vast capital and great influence behind them, their acts are designated as "operation" rather than "crimes."—Judge James B. Dill, New Jersey.

If governments were established and administered for the good of all instead of for the benefit of the few, such indictments as this of Judge Dill would not be needed. When Theodore Roosevelt demands that the corporation be indicted and that the officials go free, is it not because he knows that he himself is at the head of the most criminal of all the corporations, the United States government itself?—and that if its officials were indicted for their crimes against the common citizen he himself would have to meet criminal charges more numerous than any other man, perhaps, now living on the American continent?

Do we need to specify?

How many of Lucifer's subscribers have been robbed of their property without the forms of law—bad as the laws are—by the appointees of Theodore Roosevelt?

And until he discharges the officials that have robbed Lucifer's readers of their property rights, and until he does what he can to make due compensation, due reparation, is he not morally as well as legally responsible for the criminal acts of his subordinates?

Wheeler, 3223 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

A preacher in the east married the organist of his church without letting the good old ladies in the congregation know beforehand of his intention. Gossip scarified the reputation of his wife and wounded his sensitive heart. He hanged himself in the church belfry. Now the young widow threatens to kill herself. Yet we talk of indicting railroad officials when a brakeman is killed.—Sidney Holmes.

OUR ADVANCING POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

On Wednesday, October 11, LUCIFER No. 1050 was deposited for mailing at the Chicago post office. The superintendent of second class mails for this post office, being duly notified that such deposit had been made, was requested to tell the publisher whether the edition was mailable. After reading a copy of said number his reply was a very decided negative. When asked the reason for such decision he pointed to the article on second page of the issue, entitled "The Pioneers of Sex Reform," also to the paragraph at top of the second column, page 7, being part of the letter of Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia. When asked to point out particular paragraphs of the first article objected to he said he considered the whole article obscene and unmailable. Said he had forwarded a copy of the paper to the "Department at Washington for confirmation or reversal of his opinion."

October 17 we received the following official communication:

"CHICAGO, Oct. 17, 1905.

"Publisher LUCIFER, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago.

"Sir:—

"The Department at Washington rules that the issue of your paper dated October 12, 1905, is unmailable. Respectfully,

"F. E. COYNE, Postmaster."

This counts as the fifth hold-up of LUCIFER inside of five months, viz.: Whole No. 1042 (the double number, date June 22); Nos. 1043, 1045, 1046 and now 1050, dated October 12. All of these issues were confiscated and destroyed, in whole or in part—the part that was deposited for mailing.

A noted congressional orator once paused in the middle of his speech to ask, "Where am I at?"

Some of LUCIFER'S readers are asking, "Will postal outrages never cease?"

At the rate we are now advancing how long will it take to reach a point where the citizen will have no rights whatever that an office-holder will be in any way bound to respect? M. H.

HOW THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT CONVICTS ITSELF.

Some friend has sent us a copy of the Manhattan (Kan.) "Mercury," George W. Harrop, editor, dated October 11, in which appears, as a prominent editorial, an article entitled "Post Office Purity." The first paragraph of this article reads thus:

"The post office department of the United States government, backed by the federal courts, has demonstrated a virtue of questionable character by passing obscene matter through the mails and by prosecuting imagined offenders, or persons who have an honest purpose to elevate the race, by giving that information which would enable male and female to know themselves to the end that they might produce offspring of an improved type."

Then quoting the language of the American Free Speech League the "Mercury" proceeds to ask some very pertinent questions—as for instance:

"Are the relations which continue the race so obscene that all discussion of them is out of order, is dangerous, is worthy of fine and imprisonment? If they are so bad as all this, how will you improve them by silence, by concealment, by cursing? Will you better conditions by the prosecution of those who are trying to point out the causes of the defects that exist? Do you actually believe that in this domain ignorance is better than knowledge? If you do, why do you not contend that it is better in every other department of our lives? If you think that it is pernicious to make known the conditions and methods of recreation, why do you not move for the suppression of government and other publications which deal with the breeding of domesticated animals? Are men and women of less consequence than the quadrupeds and fowls they buy and sell and eat?

"The United States government convicts itself in a special report on diseases of the horse prepared under the direction of Dr. D. E. Salmon. It is published, printed and mailed by United States officials, and is a very valuable book of over 500 pages, but no more useful than ——— ——— unless mares are more worthy of good care than mothers, or unless fatherly Uncle Sam is more solicitous for colts than babies."

The Manhattan "Mercury" is not a sex-reform journal; therefore it is in no danger of suppression when it uses plain language in comparing the work of the United States government with that of Dr. Stockham and of LUCIFER. Following the words just quoted the "Mercury" inserts in its columns the exact language for the printing of which LUCIFER No. 1046 was denied the mailing privilege, and for which the edition deposited for mailing was confiscated, sent to the dead letter office and there destroyed.

Omitting from the "Mercury's" editorial the language that was condemned when printed in LUCIFER we proceed to quote the remainder of the paragraph:

"We prefer the editorial judgment of Drs. Salmon, Law and Stockham to the legal discrimination of R. P. Goodwin, and so we say to Uncle Sam—or 'the administration'—either remove R. P. Goodwin and put a saner man in the place or stop mailing 'Diseases of the Horse,' and many other 'non-mailable' public reports. As it is, Uncle Sam is either a fool or a criminal."

The "Mercury" then at some length shows how the United States government discriminates in favor of the large, popular and financially powerful papers, such as the Kansas City "Journal," and against such small, unpopular and financially weak ones as LUCIFER—"a paper so much disliked by the authorities that they are always glad of a pretext to suppress it; and edited by a man of ideas so unpopular that the general public has looked on with seeming indifference when the law was strained against him."

Says Editor Harrop of the "Mercury":

"Compare the following nine displayed advertisements found in the Kansas City "Daily Journal." The "Journal" is one of the best daily papers in the United States and as such gives character to these advertisements.

"Eight out of the nine have cuts which we cannot obtain, but which make the advertisements conspicuous.

"Everybody knows these advertisements are double enders, they point this way and they point that way. No one is deceived in regard to these 'ads,' and yet the post office department passes them by when the fact is plain that ——— seeks to prevent what these nostrums and mechanical appliances profess to cure.

"These advertisements are interesting from the fact that they are positive in their assurance of complete success.

"We give only that portion of the advertisement descriptive of the purpose and effect of the nostrum or appliance. For entire ad with cut, etc., etc., see the Kansas City 'Daily Journal.'

"Here are the nine ads as abridged:

"J. P. Those suffering from weaknesses which sap the pleasures of life should take Juven Pills. One box will tell a story of marvelous results. C. I. Hood Co., Lowell, Mass.

"Men—If you are small, weak or undeveloped, have lost strength, our Acme Vacuum Developer will restore you. Acme Mfg. Co., 515 Barclay Blk., Denver, Colo.

"Strenva—the developer appliance for weak men.

"For women only, Dr. Raymond's pills absolutely reliable. Perfectly safe. Relief brot to thousands after everything else failed. Dr. R. G. Raymond Remedy Co., Room 153, 84 Adams street, Chicago.

"Chichester's English Pennyroyal Pills original and only genuine. Safe. Always reliable. Refuse dangerous substitutions and imitations. Chichester Chemical Co., Madison Square, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Every woman is interested and should know about the wonderful marvel whirling spray. The new Vaginal syringe. Injection and suction. Best—safest—most convenient. It cleanses instantly. Marvel Co., 14 E. 23d St., New York.

"Big G. for men and women. Use Big G. for unnatural discharges, inflammations, irritations or ulcerations of mucous membranes. Cures in 1 to 5 days. Guaranteed not to stricture. Prevents contagion. The Evans Chemical Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Never known to fail. Tarrant's Extract of cubebs and copaiba in capsules. The tasteless, quick and thorough cure for gonorrhœa, gleet, whites, etc.

"Santal-Midy—These tiny capsules arrest in 48 hours without inconvenience, affections in which copaiba, cubebs and injections fail."

The only comment I choose to make upon these discriminations, these partialistic rulings of the officials now in charge of the United States government, is this well-known quotation from Shakespeare:

"Man clothed with a little brief authority plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven as make the angels weep." M. H.

HONORS TO THOMAS PAINE.

The following letter by the secretary of the Paine Memorial Association is the second of similar import received from him within the past few weeks:

"I hope you will not construe my silence into neglect of you in the present fight against postal censorship. My sympathy was expressed in dollars which I sent to Dr. E. B. Foote, treasurer of the Free Speech League, New York. I have just returned from New Rochelle, where the monument of Paine has been rededicated and turned over to the city.

"When the Revolution was waning Paine gave them Common Sense, and when soldiers faltered he gave them a Crisis, and when the publishers of the Rights of Man were occupying a prison cell he wanted no words of sympathy but sent them $1,000 to help fight the enemies of mankind. Stephen Girard and Paine both stood by the American Republic when in need.

"I have lived long enough to see the monument erected to Paine's memory accepted by the mayor of New Rochelle, a city that refused his vote at a Federal election; also to hear the benediction of a clergyman pronounced upon the monument and upon the people there assembled.

"I have lived to see the marble bust of Paine accepted by Independence Hall, after having been refused that honor at the Centennial of 1876—persistently refused until one month ago. I may live long enough to see the defender of the Rights of Women and Children accorded a reception and to see the downfall of Comstockism. These things were as remote in the general public mind when the Paine Memorial Association was organized four years ago—now become a reality. What Thomas Paine was to the political world a century and a quarter ago you are to the social world.

"Don't give up the fight! I was in a fight for a runaway child—a fugitive from a cruel mother backed by the police system of two cities, and yet I won the fight—for the child!

"I do hope that the admirers of Paine will send each 25 cents and have their names entered on our roll. We need Western help to spread Paine's gospel. We want to show you how the people cheered—the soldiers in Washington's uniform—at New Rochelle. I have a few certificates of membership left and some pictures of the bust of Paine just admitted to Independence Hall. They are 25 cents each while they last.

I enclose a letter. It shows the deep interest manifested in your case. You never published the other letter I sent. I know that your space is valuable at this time, but the true admirers of Paine are all on your side. Don't forget Paine and yours truly,

"JAMES R. ELLIOTT.

"3515 Wallace St., Philadelphia, Pa."

My first comment on this letter is that Bro. Elliott does me too much honor when he links my name with that of Thomas Paine, and my second is that the secretary of the Paine Memorial Association should have received an earlier and better acknowledgement of his tireless, his wholly voluntary services in behalf of the memory of the "Author Hero of the Revolution." Without these tireless services I am certain that the late public honors accorded to the memory of Thomas Paine—at New Rochelle, where he lived, and at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, where of all places his name should be given the highest honor, respect and reverence—would not have been witnessed in this generation.

Our thanks are due to Brother Elliott and also to others who have sent us newspapers describing the complete success of the work of the Paine Memorial Association. We have much desired to republish the tardy and inadequate yet very gratifying published tributes to the memory of Paine and his immortal services in behalf of human emancipation from slaveries of all kinds, but our struggles with the postal censorship have, in great measure, defeated this desire. Much more might be said on this subject, but space will permit only an earnest request that LUCIFER'S readers will send each the small sum of 25 cents to the address above given, for a certificate of membership in the Paine Memorial Association and for a picture of the bust so lately admitted to an honored place in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. M. H.

Addi, $1; C. Hardon, $5.

In this list are included the names of those who send money or stamps to pay for LUCIFER or its pamphlets to be sent to friends who are not now subscribers; also the names of those who contribute to the fund for legal defense in the courts, and to keep LUCIFER'S flag afloat while prosecuted for alleged "obscenity." If any names have been omitted that should have been included in this list, or, if included, incorrectly credited, the error will be gladly corrected when our attention is called thereto.

Some have sent money direct to the treasurer of the Free Speech League, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, from whom we have not yet had a full report. Others have sent a few stamps, five or ten cents at a time, of which no account is taken in these public credits.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building. Sunday, October 29, the meeting will be addressed by Hubbah Potter Loomis, on the Training of Children.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2228 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

CAUSE OF THE POSTAL DEFICIT.

Henry A. Castle, formerly auditor for the postoffice department, writes in a recent number of Harper's Weekly concerning the deficit in that department. Certainly he knows whereof he speaks when he says:

"In the United States last year the enormous sum of $46,000,000 was paid the railroads for transportation of the mails, of which sum $5,000,000 represented that inexcusable and scandalous graft, the rent of mail cars, under which item more is paid annually for the bare use of the cars than the cars cost in the first place."

Calculation according to official figures moves the Detroit Journal to remark:

"With this graft eliminated the treasury statement this year would show, instead of a deficit of $28,000,000, a surplus of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, even admitting that exorbitant express rates were paid on mail matter."—Star, San Francisco, Cal.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

JOHN A. HAGHTHOM, Illinois.—I was glad indeed to get LUCIFER again. Comment on action of postal authorities is needless. Such action is more than absurd. The cause must grow through such persecution.

A. THOMAS, Detroit, Mich.—Count on 25 cents a month toward extra expenses brought about by the "postal inquisition." Hope you will succeed in your struggle for truth. As soon as I am in better shape financially I will help more substantially.

S. B. COWLES, Sand Lake, Mich.—I like the book, "Thoughts of a Fool." It is no more radical than is the truth. Our immoral capitalist government is fast making opponents. But it has yet too many willing supporters. Inclosed is a dollar on subscription to LUCIFER.

MRS. V. D. H.-V., Denver, Colo.—I very emphatically agree with Mr. Kerr, in 1049, on the attitude of foreigners in regard to liberty of the press, etc., and think that it is the true American, if we can use the term, who is most derelict in appreciation of perfect freedom of mind and body.

MORRIS SCHIFFEL, Chicago.—I want to receive LUCIFER as long as it is published. The greatest evil in this world is ignorance, and especially sexual ignorance. When I look into the lives of my friends and acquaintances I can see that it is the great obstacle which keeps them from developing into more perfect manhood and womanhood. Inclosed find $1 to aid in the circulation of LUCIFER.

C. HARDON, Centoocook, N. H.—I enclose a small contribution ($5) to use for what you need it most. I reckon there is a wave of indignation on its way from the people of this country not only against this postal censorship, but several other outrages on their rights. I hope you may be saved from the penitentiary and the country from the lasting disgrace of putting you there.

NANCY MCKAY GORDON, Louisville, Ky.—Of course it is useless for me to say it, but I think these "hold-ups" amount to nothing more than small persecutions—too small, it seems to me, for the United States postal laws to trifle with, and also that a mighty government, such as the United States claims to be, should get into a larger business than that of small persecutions of individuals who are trying to live rightly and well.

D. F. HANNEGAN, St. Louis, Mo.—To suffer for the cause of free speech is glorious. The United States is suffering from a moral disease generated by two pestilential microbes—Prudery and Pruriency. The absurdity of supposing that vice in America can be destroyed by suppressing free and honest discussion is worthy of a congenital idiot. I hope you will publish my contribution. Meantime, courage! Be strong in the cause of right.

T. J. BOWLES, M. D., Muncie, Ind.—It would afford me infinite pleasure if I had the power to lift from your weary shoulders the heavy burdens that you are compelled to carry, imposed by wicked men and vicious institutions, and I hope that every subscriber for LUCIFER will contribute something to enable you to continue your fight for freedom of discussion. The friends of humanity are contending against fearful odds, and it will require a long and desperate struggle to subdue the assassins of liberty and reanchor the Republic to the Declaration of Independence. But we are making progress and I am sustained by the hope that the bandits who now control the land and the pirates who control our commercial seas will finally be exterminated.

GLADYS VERA LAMB, Dryden, Mich.—Sympathy, however acceptable, will not keep LUCIFER, its editor and this movement alive, hence I have postponed "condolences" until I could add along with it some of the "needful," however small the sum may be. Wish I could help you in your fight against an indecent, overbearing postal department. In their ignorance men enslave one another and themselves, therefore let us have light. It dazzles the eyes of those in darkness, but they get used to it eventually. Many of your co-workers are women, perhaps a majority. Would that all women had "gall enough to make oppression bitter," and were not "pigeon-livered." Let us keep on working while we live for the complete emancipation of mankind.

W. M., Kansas City, Mo.—I needn't use words to assure you of my continued sympathy and good wishes. I have learned lately of several cases of married infelicity which go to prove the frailness of present systems. In talking with a business man, a professed liberal, he said. "I believe in radicalism, but not such radicalism as advocated by Harman." "Why," he continued, "Harman would have us live like beasts and forever destroy the sanctity of home life. Now I believe in woman's freedom and the purity of motherhood, etc., etc." I told him he didn't believe in the two any stronger than does Moses Harman; that the principles LUCIFER advocates are the very ones of freedom and purity. So you see that there is still need of LUCIFER's work because there are so many yet ignorant of its mission.

O. B., New York.—Your letter and circulars received. Many thanks. Have not, unfortunately for me, been a subscriber to LUCIFER heretofore. Am only just entering on life, and your paper, which I bought at lectures and meetings from time to time, has been a god-send to me. I was brought up in the usual way., i. e., entirely ignorant of the truth concerning sex matters. Now when I am able to search for the truth myself the all-knowing "guardians" of the weak and young must interfere. The stand the United States government has taken in this damnable outrage is a dangerous one, and if the people of this country do not wake up soon they will be confronted by dangers far more difficult to overcome than the present one. Would that I could aid you financially in your fight for truth and liberty, but what little I can do I will. Your battle is my battle.

AGNES BENHAM, Grenfell street, Adelaide, South Australia.—I received to-day a welcome letter from your [L. H.'s] father—just a few lines. He speaks of want of energy. He has had trouble enough to wear out many far younger and stronger men! I do hope that somehow he will escape the most undeserved fate that hangs over him now. Please send me one dozen more LUCIFERS, No. 1044. I will distribute them well and wisely or you can send more if you have them. Don't you think that it would be well to announce that all sales of "Perfect Humanhood" by yourselves for some time to come will be for the cause (LUCIFER's defense). It might induce sales, which I should be glad to furnish for your sakes, say rather for our sakes! The inclosed ten shillings is to pay for LUCIFER to be sent one year to enclosed address, and for a bas relief medallion of Moses Harman.

SAMUEL T. HAMMERSMARCK.—While away on my last trip I reread one book that should have been included in your list of "Pioneers of Sex Reform" and that is Geo. Bernard Shaw's "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant." * * * It fairly makes my blood boil to think that the postal authorities should have such despotic rule over the newspapers of our country, and I for one am so thoroughly in earnest that I offer my protest in the form of a year's renewal of my subscription to LUCIFER and $2 to help wherever necessary. Rather than be without this paper I would walk up to 500 Fulton street each week to get it. * * * I do not think the friends of freedom fully realize the importance of the fight you are making or they would rally to your assistance more enthusiastically, not only with words of encouragement, but with that all-important necessary evil—money. * * * I hope to be able to give you one of the Sunday nights in November before the Social Science League with a full house of representative radicals.

WM. H. BERNER, Talent, Ore.—Enclosed find $1, which apply to expenses in your present fight for keeping out of the clutches of the postal inquisition. Would it not be well to quit harping on the "Right to be born well" and change it to "Right to be married well?" Physical materialism and materialistic theology have promulgated theories of sex, love and marriage which tend to make of the union of men and women only acts of nutrition and reproduction. The effort of LUCIFER for women's equality and freedom in all relations meets my hearty approval. Its puny efforts to throw discredit on legal marriage I do not indorse. I admit there is plenty to improve in our present legal marriage code, still it is the best the race has so far developed, and as soon as the forces for religious, social and economic reforms become conscious this will be attained. I wish to say that the root of all matrimonial unhappiness lies outside and prior to legal marriage. The man and woman married by natural laws will not condemn the legal code; it is only those whom nature divorces who will rebel against the legal code. Whenever we teach and raise the ideal of marriage to nature's standard, two human beings attuned physically, mentally and spiritually on the same key of vibration, we have the perfect marriage, and in such the "Right to be born well" is safeguarded. Hoping you will come out all right in your present trial.

HENRY BOOL, Ithaca, N. Y.—I send you herewith $5. I am so disgusted with this persecution I can hardly keep within bounds. Inclosed is copy of letter which I have sent to President Roosevelt. With the best of wishes for your welfare, I am, yours truly.

[Here follows copy of letter to which reference is made.]

To His Excellency, the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States:

As a staid man of the world who has known life in two hemispheres I have been and am astonished, pained and cast down at the persecution of Moses Harman, publisher of LUCIFER, Chicago, by the postal officials. I do not know of a man in all the world that I honor more for the work he has done and is trying to do than this same Harman. He is the soul of honor, honesty and clean manhood. He is now in the sere and yellow leaf of life. I hope and pray that High Heaven will influence you, Mr. President, to look into his case and boost the pendulum of intolerance and hate in the direction of liberty of press, thought and speech as nobody else may or can. I as in duty bound will ever pray, etc.

Yours for Righteousness, Justice and Love. HENRY BOOL.

[Of Mr. Bool the "Weekly Ithacan" has this to say: "Just completing a job for Henry Bool calls to mind that this erstwhile mechanic, merchant, manufacturer, florist, farmer and dairyman, now retired, finds pleasurable pastime in circulating sociologic and hygienic literature. During the past four years he has broadcasted upwards of 40,000 pieces of radical reading, getting requests for same from all over the United States, Canada, Great Britain and Australia. His heart and hand are not yet atrophied, hence it is, with him, ask and ye shall receive."]

W. C. NATION, Levin, New Zealand.—I am sorry to see you in the hands of the Philistines. Be of good courage. Every reformer gets "more kicks than ha'pence," but your persecutors are just advertising LUCIFER and its teachings the world over, and the public are reading and thinking. I am wondering whether you are "in durance vile." Ah, well,

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage."

You must sing like a canary and laugh at the law, because "the law is a hass," and has imprisoned and tortured and burnt some of the world's greatest heroes. The same tendency exists to-day, and among those who, while they persecute you, are sadly deficient in morality.

"The craven rook, the pert jackdaw,
Though neither birds of moral kind,
Yet serve, if hanged or stuffed with straw,
To show us which way blows the wind."

These people, according to Pope, have their purpose. They serve to show us which way the wind of popular opinion blows. Popular opinion strewed garments in the way for the Great Teacher to walk over. Popular opinion afterwards crucified him. In these days popular opinion counts for little. We want men who can defy it, and dare to do right, and if need be suffer for it. You must not send anything through the mails that savors of immorality, unless it is in a bound volume with gilt edges and a gold cross on the first cover. What would they say if you published the little stories about Abraham and Hagar, Lot and his daughters, Jacob and Bilhah, Dinah's defilement, Judah, Onan and Tamar, Absolom and his father's concubines? But there—you musn't! Enclosed are four shillings and six pence, payment for pamphlets.

A MOTHER, Illinois.—I received the booklet, "Right to Be Born Well." It is what the world needs, God knows, but it will be a long time before the great majority will accept its teachings. This is the greatest need to-day of the whole world. God bless you for ever starting the grand work. I cannot find words to utter the indignation I feel when thinking of the treatment you are receiving, but we will help you. I received LUCIFER yesterday. Went by myself and read and reread every word of it. Am sending your 50 cents on subscription and 50 cents for you, and will take it as long as printed, but am so unfortunate as to be poor and sixty-five years old, and only have a little home and what I can earn. As I refuse to be the tool of any man I am not considered worthy of support, but God and a few good men will help us poor women. * * * I am going to drop two magazines in order to spare this dollar, but I'd rather have LUCIFER's teaching on this vital subject than all the books that's published. I don't dare to show your writings here, for there is no one that wants to learn. You may use anything I write if you wish.

J. WARREN MILLS, Denver, Col.—I am sincerely sorry to know that you have again been made the victim of federal tyranny on account of your publication of LUCIFER. Mr. Post's able presentation of the matter in the "Public" makes it clear that you are such a victim, and that the tyranny bodes no good for the future. Saving his personal strictures, I join heartily in all he says. I trust your attorneys will be able to secure a new trial. I enclose you check for $5, which may be of some service to you in your present trouble.

Hoping all may yet turn out well for you and expressing my deep sympathy in your present distress, and congratulating you withal on your manly and heroic stand for freedom and right, I remain, yours sincerely.

OSCAR ROTTER, New York City.—I wish to express my sincerest sympathy with the venerable editor in his new persecution by the government of this so-called republic, the United States of America. I hope he will succeed in his attempt to defend the rights and liberties guaranteed by the constitution against its official violators and assailants. * * * The money enclosed is intended as a contribution to the defense fund in the warfare against the Russification policy of the national government and for the renewal of my subscription to LUCIFER for another year.

S. B. COWLES, Sand Lake, Mich.—The inclosed dollar is for three copies of "The Right to Be Born Well," cloth bound. I fully agree with Carl Nold in what he said in No. 1048 concerning this work. I feel greatly encouraged in seeing honest Socialists and revolutionists uniting in the "Industrial Workers of the World." "Our Advancing Postal Censorship," by Louis F. Post, is a grand production. Be of good cheer under your persecution for the sake of truth and righteousness.

S. A. B., Little Crab, Tenn.—I should like to subscribe for LUCIFER, but I can't at present for I have been put out of business because of my Freethought ideas. I have only one copy of LUCIFER, but I like it very much. The world needs more papers like yours. I should like to have you send sample copies to the inclosed list of names. They are all those of free thinkers who, I feel sure, will be interested in LUCIFER. May you have the greatest success.

A. A. COWLES, Cleveland, O.—Enclosed find $1 to apply on subscription. If you have some cards like the one I send, or any other good propaganda leaflets, advertising LUCIFER, you may send me as many as you like. I shall soon take a trip through several states and may be able to use them in a way that will aid you and the cause you stand for. As I shall travel on a wheel I cannot carry much, or I should distribute LUCIFER over the whole distance.

H. W. BOOZER, Grand Rapids, Mich.—"The Right to Be Born Well" is received. It is a magnificent production—a most fitting companion to the others. I have enclosed circulars in copies of LUCIFER to physicians of this city and hope you may hear from some of them. LUCIFER must live. It is the liberater from woman's slavery. I have its cause ever in mind, and grieve I cannot do more for it.

MRS. BERTHA MOORE, Portland, Ore.—I have read the booklet, "Right to Be Born Well," with heartfelt interest and pleasure. It is excellent. It is beautiful. It is rich in truth quietly and calmly spoken. It is clear as the cloudless sky and no more obscene. Love, intelligence and reason cannot do otherwise than commend it. Only hatred, ignorance and prejudice will condemn it.

M. L. STUDEBAKER, Highspire, Pa.—I think Mr. Post owner the foreigner in the U. S. A. an apology; according to Mr. Kerr, is an article in a recent LUCIFER the Americans seem to be the greatest enemies of liberty. Please send me copies of back numbers of LUCIFER. There are a few intelligent fellows here, and I want to give samples to them.

E. VAN BUSKIRK, Galveston, Ind.—Inclosed find $5 which I promised some time ago to aid in LUCIFER's defense. I hope that through you Comstockism will be overthrown. The Comstock law is the most dastardly legislation enacted by any "civilized" nation on earth.

ROBERT D. IRWIN, Secretary Brotherhood of the Daily Life, St. Louis, Mo.—Enclosed you will find $2 for two subscriptions—papers to be addressed to the Exposition Building, St. Louis. These subscriptions are to aid you in your fight for a free press.

A. C. SCHINDLER, San Francisco, Cal.—Enclosed find $2, which please apply where it is most needed. I must say I admire your courage.

R. PETERSON, Paris, Tex.—Enclosed find $10 to be used against postal despotism, as you see fit.

Bible, Beer and Socialism, by S. J. Brownson, M. D., Fayetteville, Ark. 10c. The best solution of the temperance problem yet produced. Learned, logical and conclusive. Address the author.

REPLY TO LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

My Gentle Sister: Quoting your words to the President of the United States of America, I beg leave to say: "Here is your opportunity."

The fruit of a man-made civilization, far less just to your sex than the barbaric age preceding it, sees fit to proclaim to the listening world, as an ethical tenet, the ancient first principle of said "civilization," the gauging of feminine values by feminine productivity in the interests of war, the curse of all times.

Take you now a scientific step; without delay, make a motion—in presence of us all, we are all in attendance—make a motion that there be without delay arranged a scientific text-book of morals minus religion, to be placed in the hands of all young couples at the altar of wedlock, whereby both contracting parties may be wisely instructed on vital matters pertaining to the welfare of the race, now in act of suicide.

Make the motion; we will all second it, and at once begin a course of reading to be designated by yourself and the president, which, from its scientific nature, shall make of us all worthy co-operating critics and reviewers of the work that you and the president shall be pleased to submit as a suggestive outline for said catechism of morals.

We need only a general insight into such simplified science as is presented by Allan Benson, Moses Harman and Walter Thomas Mills; since the criticism on our part, and on the part of the framers of the catechism, the appearance of pedantry or dictatorial egotism (both of which are active factors in the present day rejection by the youth of religious teachings touching these matters).

More than introduction into Washington society, do our boys and girls need exact scientific teaching on the all-important subject of prenatal influences on the foetus, bearer of the twin souls of the lovers, when, in accordance to the orders from the president, they begin the rearing of future generations.

Also they need definite instructions on the vital subject of child-origin, transmission of spirit, and that long neglected and fruitful source of race deterioration—unnatural degeneration of sex-energy—for placement in hands of their children when they attain to the questioning age.

Another thing demanding immediate attention in this matter of character-teaching on a foundation of faith in fables, which, owing to the larger growth of reason in the youthful generations, makes impossible reverence of the sacred relation, since it is taught in the Bible alone.

Our president has, without doubt, seen these grave needs, and it is to his credit that he has seen fit to divert the attention from worldly pursuits to those of a spiritual nature. You will do the future generations an inestimable good if you take advantage of this your opportunity and take the next step in the movement inaugurated by the president.

I ask this as a personal favor. I ask it in the name of my only daughter. I am forbidden to teach her morals minus religion. I see no religion minus superstition. I am under the law. At death of the child's father a guardian was appointed. I am a mother. As such I feel the grave responsibility of a true mother. I want to teach my child the truth. I do not want to poison my child's mind, for mind rules matter, and therefore I consider mental poison a factor in racial suicide too horrible to consider for a moment.

Will you come to my rescue, the rescue of my child? Lady Florence, I pray you to make the motion.

HELEN BARTON HOWARD PHILBRICK.

THE POLICY OF THE POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT.

No, Assistant Attorney General Goodwin did not, technically, make a "ruling" that all discussion of sex questions is unmailable because obscene. What you quote from him was said to Dr. Pfeiffer, of the Free Speech League. But all his rulings in the Harman cases, including his condemnation, this time in the form of an official letter to First Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock, of the Stockham matter in LUCIFER, are in exact harmony with what he said in conversation with Dr. Pfeiffer. And Mr. Hall, superintendent of second-class mails in the Chicago postoffice, informed Mr. Harman that he was only executing the decision of his Washington superiors in stopping all papers containing discussions of the relations of the sexes. So Mr. Goodwin, when he denies that he has made a "ruling" condemning all discussion of sex questions except in the private conversations of physicians with patients, takes the customary advantage of a mere technicality. What he has banned, as it appeared in LUCIFER, including the excerpts from the Woman's eJurnal, proves absolutely that his declaration in his conversation with Dr. Pfeiffer represented the settled policy of the postal department in so far as he formulates that policy.—Edwin C. Walker, Chairman Executive Committee, Free Speech League, in the Truth Seeker, New York.

"RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL" was sent to its subscribers several weeks ago—that is, to the greater part of them, but it is quite possible that, harassed as we have been, some names have been overlooked. We shall be very glad to correct all errors as soon as the mistake, or omission, is brought to our notice.

The price per single copy, paper bound, is 25 cents, or one dollar for six copies; twelve dollars and fifty cents per hundred. Handsomely bound in superior cloth, 50 cents per copy; $2 for six; $25 per hundred.

CREATIVE LIFE.
A BOOK FOR YOUNG GIRLS.
BY ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D.

A timely and important message and found in text books. Every girl seeks and should have this true, plain and practical knowledge. One writes: "Thank you, thank you, dear Doctor, for the plain but beautiful thoughts. Womanhood, motherhood and life have new meanings. You ennoble your theme." Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation.

AMERICAN EDITION. CLOTH, PREPAID, $1.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book. "Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

LOVE'S WAY TO PERFECT HUMANHOOD.
By Agnes Benham.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia. Orders may be sent through this office.

LITERATURE OF PROTEST.

Resistance is the law of life.

No; not the law, but the necessary condition of life, of all organized individualized life.

When we cease to resist we cease to live.

But while this is true as a general statement, there is always a choice of methods of resistance. The most common method is to resist force with force, meaning the lex talionis, law of retaliation—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a life for a life. Upon this principle, this law, all human governments are built and administered, so far as I know.

Another method of resistance is by opposing evil with good; repelling hate with love; meeting curses with blessings. This method does not mean slavish submission to invasion or exploitation. Doing good for evil is quite consistent with a strong and manly protest, a resolute and courageous and determined remonstrance against acts of invasion; and when all other means have failed it is quite consistent with compulsory restraint of the evildoer. I maintain the doctrine that there is nothing man or woman can do but may be good, right and proper to do under conceivable conditions. No act is good or bad of itself.

Applying these principles—this fundamental "basis of ethics"—to LUCIFER, its work and its workers:

We find ourselves invaded, exploited, robbed; deprived of our just share of the common mail facilities, for whose running expenses we are supposed to be paying our equitable share; deprived of our property, month after month, with no opportunity allowed to defend our right before a "jury of our peers," which opportunity is commonly believed to be the most fundamental civil right of every freeman when his personal liberty is invaded, or when the possession and use of his property is denied him.

We have protested.

We have remonstrated.

We have appealed to the sense of justice believed to be inherent in the minds of all sane and humane people.

We have appealed to the traditions that have come down to us from the time of the formation of the so-called American Republic —the teachings of such men as Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, Thomas Paine, Benjamin Franklin and John Adams. These traditions, these laws, guarantee freedom of speech and of press, and the right of trial by a jury of our peers—which means, if it means anything, a trial by citizens who are so well informed in matters pertaining to personal and civil rights that they do not need to be instructed and coached by a partizan judge appointed by a partizan president and confirmed in office by a "House of Lords" whose wealth makes them interested in maintaining special privileges for the few rather than in securing equal rights for all.

Up to the present time our appeals have been in vain; our remonstrances and protests unheeded. Invasion has followed invasion, robbery has succeeded robbery in quick succession. Judging from the nature of the charges against us, judging from the flimsy pretexts on which numbers 1045, 1046 and 1050 of LUCIFER were declared unmailable and consigned to the "dead letter" office, there is no telling what numbers will be next declared unmailable and consigned to the "dead letter" office, there to be destroyed, it will not be long until no pretext whatever will be needed, nothing but the arbitrary will of the censor, to cause the suppression and destruction of ANY publication that may not please the prejudices or the whims of the "man clothed with a little brief authority."

Discouraging as the outlook now seems, we have not lost all faith in resistance to tyranny by means of protest, remonstrance and appeal to the press and people of the United States and of the liberty-loving people of all lands and tongues. In order to make more effective our campaign of protest and remonstrance a few of us are asking for help in distributing the following named booklets that represent to a great degree the vanguard of the Literature of Protest against the bureaucratic methods of the postal department of the United States government.

First, "Who Is the Enemy; Anthony Comstock or You?" This is a well written pamphlet of sixty-three pages, printed on superior paper, with large type. The author and publisher is Edwin C. Walker, of 244 West One Hundred and Forty-third street, New York City. In this pamphlet, in his exceptionally clear, logical and forceful manner, Mr. Walker has summarized the history of the doings of New York "Society for the Prevention of Vice," and of its secretary and chief agent, Anthony Comstock; also the history and real character of the Federal statutes under which the postal censorship has got in its work for the past thirty years. Published by the author and sold by him for 20 cents per copy. Also sent from this office postpaid on receipt of price.

Second, "Do You Want Free Speech?" by James F. Morton, Jr. Price, 10 cents per copy. The quality and style of this booklet may be gathered from the opening paragraph:

"The cause of free speech is the cause of man. A gagged mouth is worse than a shackled body. Truth is born of open discussion. The days of the inquisition were the dark days of the human race. A beneficial censorship is a contradiction in terms. Every censor is, consciously or unconsciously, an enemy of humanity. The paltry excuses for restriction of free discussion sometimes to be heard from pulpits or read in newspaper columns, always have their genesis in corrupt motives or in gross ignorance. No honest man needs to fear the open discussion of any question. When all sides are given a full hearing, there can be no fear of the defeat of the truth. Conscious error likes to creep into dark holes, and shuns the bright light of day. The whine that the opposition should be suppressed comes from cowards who have no real faith in the convincing power of that in which they pretend to believe. The persecutor brands himself in the eyes of the coming age. He may triumph for the moment; but his memory becomes a stench in the nostrils of future generations; and his cause is doomed, unless worthier advocates succeed in purifying it from the stain. Comstock is the greatest enemy of purity in the United States, as Philip the Second of Spain was in reality the deadliest foe of Christianity, and as those who suppress the utterance of anarchist opinions are the worst traitors to the government they profess to adore. The crowned madman of Germany has done more to bring monarchy into disrepute than the entire radical press of Europe; and his lese majeste laws have only succeeded in bringing him into richly deserved contempt."

Published by the author at the office of the "Demonstrator," Lake Bay, Washington. Sent also from this office, and from the author's present address, 244 West One Hundred and Forty-third street, New York City.

Third, "The Rights of Periodicals." "The Most Dangerous Assassin Is He Who Strikes at the Liberty of the Press." By James F. Morton, Jr., A. M. Published by the author at 244 West One Hundred and Forty-third street, New York City. Price, 10 cents.

This pamphlet is a reprint of an article first published in the "Public," Chicago, Louis F. Post, editor, and is chiefly devoted to a history of the doings of "Edwin C. Maiden, third assistant Postmaster general, the chief agent of the restrictive policy of the past few years." One of the despotic methods of this man Madden is thus recited:

"A strange feature of the recent department policy has been the refusal to give specific rulings or to answer questions, which would enable legitimate publishers to make sure of complying with the law as interpreted by the postoffice officials. LUCIFER, of Chicago, was notified that it carried too much personal advertising, and must show cause why its second-class privilege should not be taken from it. To the request of the publisher for a decision as to how large a proportion of personal advertising would be allowed, the answer was made that the department refused to rule on the subject. The unfortunate publisher was simply called on to conform to an unknown standard existing solely in the mind of Mr. Madden. Few despots have ever gone so far as this. While ignorance of law is held to excuse no one, the law must at least exist in some accessible form. Except in the most violent tyranny, no man has ever been punished for violating the terms of a secret edict, which has never left the closet of the autocrat who drew it up. To term such a monstrous injustice unconstitutional is to use a very mild term. More than one publisher has complained of a similar experience. The standard, which must be obeyed by instinct, without being known, is evidently an elastic one, since the Delineator, using seventy pages of a single issue to describe and advertise the patterns made by the firm issuing the periodical, as clearly for 'advertising purpose' as any of the papers Mr. Madden has attacked on this pretext, has never had the slightest trouble with the authorities. The Demonstrator, entered at Lakeby, Wash., was notified that its exchange formed too large a percentage of its circulation list. An inquiry as to what percentage would be deemed 'legitimate' was met with a refusal to give any information. The publisher must guess at it, under the penalty of losing his privilege if he happens to guess incorrectly, in a matter in no way defined by law, and depending on the mere whim of a single individual. This extraordinary method of suspending a sword of Damocles above the heads of publishers, who ask nothing better than to obey the strictest letter of the law, hardly falls under any recognized principle of jurisprudence."

Fourth, "The Conspiracy Against Free Speech and Free Press." By George Pyburn, M. D. Price, 6 cents. A sample of Dr. Pyburn's reasoning is found in the following paragraph:

"Look at the forms in which this spirit of opposition to liberty, of hatred of free speech and a free press, manifests itself. First, there is the censorship exercised by the Postoffice Department. This thing shall not be transmitted by mail, it is antagonistic to the ruling powers; that thing does not please Anthony Comstock, it is obscene; the other matter is inflamatory, seditious, and not acceptable to the 'government.' Now the point here contended for is this: an executive officer or department is incompetent—by law, and in fact—to exercise judicial functions. Let matter passing through the mail—if you must discriminate—be presented or indicted along with its publishers, in the proper courts, as libelous or indecent and unfit for transmission upon clearly defined principles; let issue be joined, tried, and adjudged—Yes or No. Then the whole question of the right to print freely could be discussed and the decision referred to the highest tribunal of the land. Publicity would advertise the issue, and prevent narrow-minded officials from invading successfully the rights of a citizen. For we must consider that this right to the use of the mails is a kind of property or 'chose in action'—common property if the paradox may be allowed—and should not be taken away without due process of law. Further, fairness would insist that only after due adjudication of unfitness for transmission, and enjoinment thereof, should a person be held misdemeanant for mailing any printed or written matter whatsoever. The postal department should not be permitted to neutralize or abridge the liberties of the citizen. Otherwise the postal department is above the fundamental law of the land."

Published by Edwin C. Walker, 244 West One Hundred and Forty-third street, New York City.

Fifth, "Our Advancing Postal Censorship." By Louis F. Post, editor of "The Public," Chicago. This booklet of twenty-eight pages is a reprint of an editorial first published in "The Public" August 12, 1905. In this editorial Mr. Post shows that he has studied his subject with the most painstaking and careful attention to details, especially the details of the treatment received from the censorship by LUCIFER during the past two years. He gives the correspondence with the heads of the department at Washington and himself, in his effort to get at the exact facts and reasons for denying to LUCIFER the "second class privilege," as well as the facts concerning the suppression and destruction of whole number one thousand of that publication. Mr. Post is careful to state that he undertook and performed all this labor not as a partisan of LUCIFER, but simply in the interest of justice, and of freedom of the press. On this point he says:

"The inference seems to us unavoidable that the issue of LUCIFER of December 17, 1903, was excluded from the mails, not because of any violation of the postal statute, but because it advocated doctrines of social life at variance with those to which the postal censors are professedly devoted. In other words, it was suppressed, not for decency's sake, but for opinion's sake. With the opinions intended to be censored by the suppression of LUCIFER we are entirely out of sympathy. Were they up for discussion under circumstances demanding our participation, we should emphatically condemn them—not because they are unconventional, but because we believe them to be unsound. But the question here is not whether they are unsound. It is whether their discussion shall be forbidden. On that issue we yield to no one in demanding the fullest freedom of discussion for every debatable question. Nothing but error can suffer from honest debate."

Published by "The Public" Publishing Company, First National Bank Building, Chicago. Price, single copy, 3 cents; by the hundred, $1.50.

These booklets will all be sent in quantity from this office, postpaid, at reduced or wholesale prices, so long as the supply lasts. Postage stamps of any denomination accepted in payment.

The Literature of Protest against the autocratic, the bureaucratic methods of the United States postal department is not confined to these five booklets. With these will be sent free other leaflets and pamphlets treating of the same general subject—but this article is already too long for further description in this issue.

Shall we hear from the lovers of liberty and justice everywhere?

M. HARMAN.

FREE SPEECH OR SLAVERY?

It is a mere commonplace that freedom of expression is a fundamental condition of progress. The darkest period of human history is universally recognized to have been that of the middle ages, when thought lay strangled, and "heresy" was punished as the crime of crimes. All history teaches that the enemies of free speech are the enemies of the people. A censorship is always a shelter for infamy. More harm is done by repression than by the circulation of the most atrocious doctrines. Truth will always vanquish in open discussion, and never needs to be bolstered up by force. The persecutor may not unfairly be said to be always in the wrong, and to have no sincere reliance on what he pretends to revere as truth. Suppression of free speech points the way back to barbarism and to the loss of all that our civilization has gained.

The foregoing remarks are so self-evident that it is no less than astounding to find them actively challenged in this of all lands. The establishment of an Inquisition in the freest of countries is a phenomenon so startling and menacing as to deserve immediate and aroused attention. For over thirty years the foul serpent of censorship has been tightening its coils about our liberties, until now its head is boldly raised and its fangs displayed in the sight of all. Henceforth there can be no excuse for ignorance or indifference. With the vilest motives and purposes, it has made use of the best sentiments of our people in order to effect its foul ends. When the Congress of 1873, the "crime" year, in the rush of its closing days, with no debate or consideration, hurried through a harmless appearing bill against "obscene literature," few saw the deadly significance of the measure. Its proponent, the notorious Anthony Comstock, raised an insidious plea for the protection of our children against a flood of unhealthy prints and pamphlets, sold by unscrupulous dealers in order to pander to premature sexual excitement. The harm of these wretched things could not be questioned, and the average parent was only too ready to shirk his own duty of instruction, and to trust to prohibition to do the work that only education can accomplish. But that the Comstock law had any other or ulterior aim, not one dupe of the craftiest blackmailer in history had the faintest suspicion.

Having gained their first point, Comstock and his crew were at first very cautious in beginning their plotted work of persecution. Trusting in the inability of public ignorance and prejudice to separate the importance of a principle from the unpopularity of an individual in whose person it is denied, they first assailed one or two persons who had given much offence to the conventional world through the pronounced tone of their attack on institutions held sacred by others. This minimized the protest raised against these primary acts of outrage and injustice. As early as 1878, Comstock bragged before his Vice Society, in his official report, of his perversion of the law toward the end of suppressing ideas, as well as obscenity, and the steps already taken in that direction. He even expressed unequivocally the intention of destroying freedom of religious discussion. In this last aim, however, he has failed as yet; but his attempt to prevent education in matters of sex has succeeded beyond his highest expectation, bringing with it incalculable misery and ruin to many thousands of victims of law-encouraged ignorance.

Step by step the conspiracy against intelligence has proceeded, until today we are confronted with a more startling infamy than even Comstock himself ever dared to champion. Paul Hull, superintendent of second class mails in Chicago, and R. P. Goodwin, assistant attorney-general for the Post Office Department, have made a bid for the chief seats in the Hall of Infamy reserved for the destroyers of liberty, the foes of knowledge, persecutors and enemies of the human race. The arrogance of these little men has actually reached the point of declaring all discussion of the sex question obscene and unmailable! Is it necessary to discuss such a monstrous proposition? If there is one thing most needed in this country, it is education on sex; and the men who would prevent it are the worst of criminals. Even Comstock himself has indorsed one set of treatises on sex life; and Roosevelt, of whose administration these officials form part, has discussed the question with great frankness, and in the most public manner.

The first use made of these rulings of the new American censorship is seen in the attacks on Moses Harman, of Chicago, and LUCIFER, his paper. He is under indictment; and issue after issue of his paper has been arbitrarily held up in the mails. This is only the beginning. If the outrages perpetrated on him fail to arouse the people, the conspirators will become emboldened to go further. Their intentions can no longer be mistaken, since their own speech has betrayed them. We are on the eve of one of the most serious struggles in history between intelligence and ignorance, liberty and slavery, science and brutality, mediævalism and progress. The danger is not that any honest or intelligent man or woman will join hands with the Hulls and Goodwins. The only peril is that of indifference and inaction.

The Free Speech League has been formed as a nucleus around which to rally the opponents of a censorship. It is composed of men and women of every phase of opinion, who believe in preserving the freedom of speech, press, assemblage and mails, guaranteed to us by the constitution of the United States and essential to our existence as a free people. The League is not merely in embryo, but already actively at work. It is arousing public sentiment all over the country. Besides fighting the immediate battles for the victims of persecution, it is organizing a great national movement for the overthrow of the tyrannical and unconstitutional administrative process and the repeal of the pernicious Comstock law. For this work, large funds are necessary; but the preservation of our liberties is worth any price that can be paid. Contributions should be sent to E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., 120 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. The time to act is at once.

The entire conspiracy against free speech and a free press in America is laid bare in a pamphlet by the present writer, entitled "Do You Want Free Speech?" Price, 10 cents. Send to James F. Morton, Jr., 244 West 143rd St., New York, N. Y. "The Rights of Periodicals," by the same author, is a detailed exposure of the jugglery by the Post Office Department with the second-class mail matter, for the purpose of undermining free speech. Price, 5 cents, at the same address.

"Our Advancing Postal Censorship," by Louis F. Post, is an extremely searching examination of the administrative process. Price, 3 cents. Address The Public Publishing Company, First National Bank Building, Chicago, Ill.

Two other exceptionally valuable pamphlets are "Who Is the Enemy; Anthony Comstock or You?" by Edwin C. Walker, price 20 cents, and "The Conspiracy Against Free Speech and Free Press," by George Pyburn, M. D., price 6 cents. Both these may be ordered from E. C. Walker, 244 West 143rd St., New York, N. Y.

Let all who wish to understand the existing situation procure and read this small body of free speech literature. It will be found worth its cost many times over, in its salutary warning and its invaluable information. No reader of the startling array of facts presented will be able to doubt the gravity of the present crisis, or to escape from a sense of personal responsibility. The time has come to see whether Americans are worthy of freedom.—James F. Morton, Jr., in November "Tomorrow," Chicago.

[It is only just to say that Mr. Goodwin has denied that he made any such official ruling. The facts, however, the acts of suppression of six editions of LUCIFER, and the grounds for such suppression, speak for themselves.—Editor LUCIFER.]

Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.—John Milton.

FALSE MODESTY THE CAUSE OF DEPRAVITY.

The law against permitting "obscene" matter to be carried by United States mails was no doubt originally intended to exclude vulgar literature and pictures, French novels and salacious writings of all kinds, but unfortunately, under the present ruling by the postal authorities a broader sweep is given to the law, so that really vital matters pertaining to sex and motherhood, subjects of deep sociologic and general scientific significance are also excluded through the untrained and whimsical interpretation of the officers in charge.

Were these public servants versed in the meaning and realities of general democracy, no such ruling would be possible, else they would know that to stop discussion through the press of vital matters pertaining to sex and motherhood, means stagnation and a stoppage of advancement along those lines of thought which is pitiable in the light of the rapid increase of the divorce evil.

By way of showing that the evils of press censorship are liable to become much greater than the wholesale and unrestricted discussion of sex and marriage ever can be, it is pertinent to relate how the writer recently addressed a personal letter to a party in New York, which same was promptly sent back by the Post Office, bearing the stamp, "Returned on account of fraud."

It seems that the gentleman was an officer of a corporation that had declared dividends on stock which some enemies and detractors of his declared were unearned, although the statement of the corporation showed otherwise. Not only was the corporation promptly made bankrupt without trial by having its mail and remittance withheld, but the personal mail of its officers who, also without trial were declared frauds, was withheld and returned to the writers.

These rulings imply that none but honest men are to be allowed use of the mails, but still preachers who are promising heaven and hell, and who have never been known to make good, are permitted to receive their mail without challenge. Lawyers, from whom truth has fled these thousand years, still continue to receive their billet doux and bills and duns.

Not a word has been heard in regard to any intention of the Post Office Department stopping the mail of the Standard Oil Company, the Beef Trust, or of any Railroad Company giving rebates, or of any Insurance Company practicing all kinds of frauds, and so we ask, wherefore this strange discrimination?

As educators, we take issue with the Post Office Censorship, the Government and all the pious frauds who clack of things they know not of, for we know that even small children should be told all about the reproduction of plants, animals and human beings just as rapidly as they show any interest in these topics, and they should be told them by people for whom they have respect, and in language that decency employs, instead of being compelled to gain their knowledge as sneaks from the rough scuff of the streets and from obscene verses and pictures in lavatories and alley ways. Any listener to the talk of urchins in the street going to and from school or in their romps together on Saturday, may secure ample evidence of the vileness and depravity of the language being constantly employed by children eight or nine years old on these "sacred" topics. Parents, preachers and Anthony Comstocks had better awaken to the fact that it is their false modesty that is the cause of this depravity and foul language, for were the real truths of sex and everything pertaining to life and living given to the growing mind on the proper plane and in a clean and wholesome spirit through the medium of commonsense parents and a free press, this knowledge would assume its proper place and proportion with all other knowledge, and the atrocious and shocking grossness that characterizes nine-tenths of the language of children at play would be much modified, if not done away with entirely.

In a country, however, where the husbands and sons of American mothers spend five times as much for liquor and tobacco as they do for the entire cost of education, and support thousands of houses of prostitution and gambling, all unnecessary, unnatural and foolish, by what right or reason need we expect them to employ real common sense or common decency in other directions?

There is much hypocrisy and pretense carried on these days under the guise of protecting children, ergo, substituting ignorance for innocence, a strange paradox, when actual contact and acquaintance with these strange and elusive creatures of eight years old often discovers them to be past masters in the knowledge of the salacious material that their "protectors" are struggling to keep away from them. More confessions anon.—Parker H. Sercombe, Editorial in November "Tomorrow," Chicago.

THE TEMPEST IN NEW YORK.

Back in the forties and fifties of last century, as some of us are young enough to remember, the great eastern dailies and weeklies would occasionally report great excitement over the attempts to discuss in public the merits and demerits of the relation between the African slave and his Anglo-Saxon master. And sometimes the publication of a book treating of the same subject, such as the book called "Uncle Tom's Cabin," would raise a similar commotion, and in both cases there would be attempts at suppression of discussion of what was by common consent considered an improper if not dangerous subject.

Much in the same way now, a half century or more later, the papers occasionally report much excitement over the attempt to discuss, in a radical and thorough-going manner, the sex relations of women and men—that is to say, the relation of masculine man as sex employer, or sex owner, and of feminine man as sex employe—sex hireling for a limited time, or sex servant or slave for a lifetime.

A noteworthy instance of this determination on the part of the self-elected guardians of the best interests of human society to prevent the showing up, in a realistic way, the defects—"the seamy side"—of the system of sex ethics sanctioned or at least condoned by church and state authorities, was lately witnessed in New York, the commercial metropolis of the United States and most populous city on the American continent. The occasion of this unusual commotion among the guardians of sex-morality, of sex-orthodoxy, was the attempt to place the books of George Bernard Shaw on the shelves of the New York public library, and later the attempt to present to the theater-going public of New York one of the plays of this writer, showing in a truthful way, a matter of fact way, the actual working of this much-lauded and sacredly guarded sex employer and sex service system.

The play that provoked the wrath of these self-elected guardians is entitled "Mrs. Warren's Profession."

LUCIFER'S editor has not read this play, has not seen it enacted, but he is now reading for the first time one of Shaw's most noted books, "Man and Superman." On page 186 of this work, under the head "The Revolutionists Handbook," appears this significant paragraph:

"One fact must be faced resolutely in spite of the shrieks of the romantic. There is no evidence that the best citizens are the offspring of congenial marriages, or that a conflict of temperament is not a highly important part of what breeders call crossing. On the contrary it is quite sufficiently probable that good results may be obtained from parents who would be extremely unsuitable companions and partners, to make it certain that the experiment of mating them will sooner or later be tried purposely almost as often as it is now tried accidentally.

"But mating such couples must clearly not involve marrying them. Its conjugation two complementary persons may supply one another's deficiencies: in the domestic partnership of marriage they only feel them and suffer from them.

"Thus the son of a robust, cheerful, eupeptic British country squire, with the tastes and range of his class, and of a clever, imaginative, intellectual, highly civilized Jewess, might be very superior to both his parents; but it is not likely that the Jewess would find the squire an interesting companion, or his habits, his friends, his place and mode of life congenial to her.

"Therefore, marriage, whilst it is made an indispensable condition of mating, will delay the advent of the Superman as effectually as Property, and will be modified by the impulse toward him just as effectually."

From these paragraphs it will be seen that Bernard Shaw attacks both institutional marriage and institutional property. His real offense, then, is much the same as that of LUCIFER, and the wonder is not that the guardians of conventional marriage morality and conventional property superstitions should have taken alarm and should have forbidden the general reading of Shaw's book—by the young—and prohibited the performance of such of his dramas as show the legitimate fruits of the masculine sex-ownership system. The wonder is rather that the clergy and the Grundies, male and female, have not taken the alarm sooner and caused the arrest and confiscation of Shaw's books and plays, for the same reasons, under same pretexts, that they have caused the arrest and confiscation of LUCIFER and the arrest, conviction and imprisonment of its editor. LETTERS TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

For some weeks we have been in receipt of letters containing information regarding correspondence between LUCIFER'S friends and the office of President Roosevelt at Washington. The following are some of the sample letters said to have been sent to the chief executive of the United States government:

October 28, 1905.

President Theodore Roosevelt, Washington, D. C.

Your Excellency—The undersigned wishes to record his protest against the rulings and actions of Superintendent of the Postoffice Department at Chicago in denying mail facilities to the magazine LUCIFER, conducted by M. Harman. The writer believes that if the enormous mass of matter concerning the relations of God and man be permitted postal circulation there is no reason for suppressing the mail distribution of publications which deal in an entirely scientific and reverent, if candid, manner with the social and sexual relations of man and woman, whose creation is attributed to the Deity. It would seem that any stretching of the laws whereby such publications are refused the use of the mails is entirely out of harmony with the spirit of the age and the potatively enlightened character of our government.

Yours respectfully,
PAY LEWIS.

Colorado City, Colo., October 26, 1905.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

Sir—I am now and for years have been a subscriber of a paper called LUCIFER, the Light Bearer, edited by one Moses Harman of Chicago. Of late I have missed several copies and upon investigation have found that the paper has been stopped by the postoffice department, and in some instances destroyed under the plea that it was obscene. I would like to know by what right the postoffice destroys my property. I would like to know by what reason the postoffice department says that my family and myself are of low moral character, for saying that the paper is obscene is another way of saying that its readers are of low morals. Inclosed find clipping from which you will see that two of the condemned articles are taken from a ladies' journal and one from literature sent through the mails by the government itself. I hope the matter will be looked into and the guilty officials called to account. Respectfully yours,
H. HANNES.

Bank of Hecla, Hecla, S. D., October 25, 1905.

Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir—At the age of 18 years I left home to take a position as telegraph operator and station agent.

My mother, who had a strong personality and a strong confidence in knowledge as against ignorance, especially in matters sexual. She subscribed for and had sent to me a few years a paper treating on sexual science called LUCIFER, the Light Bearer, in which is contained a free discussion of the theme, since which time I have been a constant subscriber (in all twenty-four years).

I think the free discussion of the subject has caused me to comprehend the situation much clearer, and I am firmer and more virtuous than I would have been had I remained in ignorance.

I notice that of late several copies of my paper have not reached me, and am informed that the postal authorities have held up those editions on the claim that they were obscene. Now it appears to me as rather unjust and un-American to let some one officer constitute himself judge and jury and without notice or hearing confiscate the editions of a paper whose aim is a higher and purer humanity, and it appeals to me that its editor is being persecuted rather than prosecuted.

I think that if you will familiarize yourself with the facts in this case that you will find that an injustice is being done and that you would have it remedied.

I am sending herewith some matter from John Gordon, 46 Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill., just as I received it through the mail a few days ago. This appeals to me as vulgar and astonishes me that anybody would send it through the mail. I refer it to you that it may receive proper attention.

I trust that you will see that LUCIFER and its editor gets a square deal. Yours very truly.
ARTHUR E. CLARKE.

So far as we have heard, no direct answer from Roosevelt himself has been received by the writers of these letters, but several answers from Mr. Hitchcock, first assistant postmaster general, have been sent to the writers, saying their letters to the president had been referred to him and that they would receive proper attention.

While we of Lucifer's office prefer not to suggest any form of letter to those who are now adopting the advice of the Free Speech League the hope is hereby expressed that such letters should take the form of remonstrance and protest rather than of petition. Why should an American citizen, man or woman, take the attitude of petitioner when addressing a public servant, whether the highest or lowest of these servants?

To my thinking one great cause of the abuse of power in the hands of public officials is the very deferential attitude of the average citizen towards such officials. When a farmer employs a helper on his farm, is it customary to address a petition to the farm hand, humbly praying him to do certain work in a certain way?

And so likewise, when a merchant or manufacturer employs clerks or mechanics, skilled or unskilled, does the employer of such labor present a petition to his employes, in humble and guarded phraseology, when he finds that something is going wrong in the details of a large and complicated business?

Do the American people really know that they are not now living under a monarchy and aristocracy?

Do they really know that Washington and Rochambeau won the battle over Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown? M. H.

THOSE SCURRILOUS POSTAL CARDS.

Hugh O. Pentecost, in his lecture in the Grand Opera House, Chicago, on Sunday, November 5, spoke of the danger of increasing the powers of the executive arm of the federal government. He mentioned the fact that the victims of these usurpations of executive authority are usually persons who lack wealth and influence to resist it, and in that way precedents are made for further usurpations. As an instance of such arbitrary use of executive power he mentioned the seizure and confiscation of several issues of LUCIFER by the postoffice authorities.

As LUCIFER is an unconventional paper the postal authorities felt safe in confiscating it "without due process of law," and doubtless their action was approved by many persons who do not approve of LUCIFER'S teachings. But these very persons failed to see the danger of establishing such a precedent. They failed to foresee the time when a similar arbitrary ruling may exclude from the mails papers which advocate some social, religious or political doctrine in which they believe.

The danger was exemplified in a striking manner on November 4, when Postmaster Wilcox of New York City sent out an order for the confiscation of 361,000 postal cards which had been mailed to voters by Tammany Hall. On each of these cards was printed a cartoon picturing President McKinley above a red bomb, the fuse of which was burning, while in the background was the fleeing figure of a man labeled "Hearst." It bore the inscription, "Lest We Forget," and contained alleged extracts from one of Mr. Hearst's newspapers.

The cards were confiscated on the grounds that they were "scurrilous." Doubtless many readers of LUCIFER will agree that they were scurrilous. Some, perhaps, will say that they ought to have been confiscated.

Those who take this latter view place themselves in line with the persons who approved of the confiscation of LUCIFER on the ground that it was—well, improper. But what authority has the postmaster to decide what is improper or what is scurrilous? Where is the line to be drawn between proper and improper literature, between scurrilous and non-scurrilous postal cards?

Has there ever been a campaign conducted in any large city since the newspapers began the printing of cartoons when many of the papers did not contain pictures which were scurrilous in the judgment of the persons depicted in the cartoons?

I make no apology for the postal cards which Postmaster Wilcox confiscated. The pictures were disreputable and misleading. They were to be circulated with the evident intention of making voters believe:

That William McKinley was killed by an anarchist, which is untrue.

That William R. Hearst is an anarchist, which is untrue.

That William R. Hearst instigated the killing of McKinley, which is untrue.

I was employed on one of Mr. Hearst's papers for three years and I know that he and all his sub-editors were so opposed to anarchy that it was practically impossible to have a fair statement of the views of an anarchist published in any of his papers.

But that is not the point at issue. If the postmaster has power to decide what cartoons are mailable and what are not mailable it is easy to see that he could confiscate entire issues of every newspaper of the party to which he is opposed.

I am glad those postal cards were seized. Not because I think the postmaster had a right to seize them, but because his act perhaps will reveal to the public the danger of permitting such usurpations of authority.

So long as only financially weak and comparatively unknown persons are victims of this bureaucratic tyranny there is little hope of checking it. But when such a powerful organization as Tammany Hall is a sufferer possibly the nation may be aroused to put a curb on too officious public servants. JONATHAN MAYO CRANE.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

The eighteenth annual memorial celebration is commemoration of the victims of the Chicago labor movement—August Spies, Albert Parsons, Louis Lingg, Geo. Engel and A. Fischer. Given under the auspices of labor organizations, turners, singing societies and others, Saturday, November 11, 1905, Aurora Hall, Milwaukee avenue and Huron street, commencing at 6 p. m. Tickets 10 cents.

Sunday, November 12, Mabel McCoy Irwin of New York will speak at the Grand Opera House, Chicago, on Walt Whitman, the Poet Liberator of Woman, under the auspices of the Spencer Whitman Center. Lecture to commence at 11 o'clock a. m. Admission free. All invited.

Meetings of the Spencer Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building.

A CALIFORNIA IDEA.

"I, O. A. Verity, do hereby authorize and empower Moses Harman or his legally constituted agent to proceed in a criminal action against the postal inspector and postmaster at Chicago, Ill., first assistant postmaster and postmaster general at Washington, D. C., for robbery of the United States mails and willfully and maliciously extracting therefrom and destroying and causing to be destroyed five copies of a paper called LUCIFER that was addressed to me, and placed therein by the editor and publisher of said paper to be delivered by common carrier to my address, and on account of their destroying said papers I have been deprived of the knowledge and opportunity to gain knowledge that I believe would have been a value to me of the sum of $50. Therefore I also empower him to commence civil action against the aforesaid parties in a suit for damages for the said $50 and cost of suit.

I herewith enclose $1 to help defray my share of said suit, and promise $1 per month or as much as is needed thereof to take the suit through the highest courts in the United States.

How many of LUCIFER'S subscribers will stand by me in this suit, uniting their suit with mine, thus putting the courts of our land on record as to whether this high-handed outrage of destroying the mail of peaceable citizens will receive their approval?

Yours, OLIVER A. VERITY,
1523 Market street, Oakland, Cal.

THE DISHONEST CARRIER.

[The following are the opening paragraphs of a large circular a bundle of which was lately received at this office. No name is attached thereto, and nothing to show by whom written or published.] M. H.

A gentleman had sold a quantity of goods to several thousand persons. These goods were paid for in advance, and were to be delivered in parcels two a month. Occasion arose in which the dealer prepared a double parcel, several of his customers having paid for extra parcels. He took these parcels to the public carrier, paid for their delivery and went home thinking all was well.

Presently he began receiving word from his customers that they had not received their parcels. He went to the carrier's office to learn why, and found that there were some things in the double number which did not please the carrier, who always had a sample, and because of it they had been sent to the headquarters of the general delivery office and there burned.

"What right had you to destroy the property of several thousand people, who had paid me for these goods, and thus prevent me from fulfilling my contract," asked the man who had given the parcels into the keeping of the Carrier Co.

To this no satisfactory answer was given. Now what should be done with one who has violated public trust?

"His license should be taken away from him, and he should be imprisoned," is the unanimous verdict! If he has property, enough of it should be taken to make up the loss, and if not he should be made to work out the amount."

A just verdict. Let those robbed thousands prosecute the offender, and put in their claims for what is their due.

But hold! That public carrier is the postal department of the United States Government. Those parcels were newspapers, and the double number confiscated contained matter that the clerk of second-class mail did not like, so he falsified, told the publisher it was obscene, thinking thus to justify his lawless act. The articles condemned are not obscene, as I will give you a chance to judge for yourselves before I am done. And surely, you who read these lines, are as capable of judging as is a postal clerk in Chicago, the clerk who sent the whole edition of "LUCIFER, the Light-Bearer," No. 1042, to Washington, D. C., where, in defiance of the rights of both publisher and subscribers, it was unlawfully burned.

What is the language of this unlawful proceeding? Simply this: We have pronounced the matter obscene and you dare not send it out to the public, and thus uncover our falsehood."

Will the thousands thus robbed be thus cowardly? Some of them will not.

AGAIN THE CENSORSHIP.

We have received from Mr. Harman, by sealed mail, a copy of his paper which has been denied mail privileges by the Chicago postoffice censor, one Mr. Hull. The matter which the censor objects to is marked. It bears out what we said some time ago that the evident intention is to suppress LUCIFER. There cannot be any pretense whatever that the matter marked is obscene. One article is a list of books on the subject of sexual relations, and the other is a letter from a woman in Australia, in which she quotes G. Bernard Shaw in "Man and Superman," and a writer in the Fortnightly Review on "The Marriage Contract in Its Relation to Social Progress." There is simply nothing to either of the articles obnoxious to any law, and if the case could be taken to court we feel sure Mr. Harman would win. But that would settle the matter for only that one issue of the paper, and the censor could condemn another and force him to go again to court. Practically, therefore, Mr. Harman will be forced to give up his propaganda. He will have to make LUCIFER another sort of a journal or move out of Chicago. We do not think there is another postoffice official in the country who would condemn the matter marked in the copy of LUCIFER sent us.

As we have said before, there are a few questions which should be crowded home to the postoffice authorities. Where do they find their legal authority to suppress matter without bringing the publisher to trial? Where does Mr. Goodwin, one of the Washington postoffice authorities, find his law permitting him to say what subjects shall be discussed in the public prints? There is no such law, and until President Roosevelt set the example of making law by official ruling the postoffice people did not arrogate to themselves that power. Mr. Madden made law by ruling on what is second-class matter, properly entitled to pound rates of postage, for he denied postal privileges to publications only on the ground that they properly came under another head, and could be mailed by paying another rate of postage. It has remained for Mr. Hull of Chicago to make of himself a Russian censor.

The Free Speech League has asked each subscriber to LUCIFER to write a respectful letter of protest to President Roosevelt in this matter, and it may well happen that the Free Thinkers should add the weight of their numbers in the matter. We suggest that we all write to him protesting against the acts of his subordinates in suppressing papers dealing with subjects they do not care for in a way they do not like. The freedom of the press is dangerously threatened. If the say-so of the postoffice attorney is good as to LUCIFER why not as to other papers? Chicago once had a daily paper (perhaps it still has) which published the advertisements of the scarlet women. Mr. Hull did not interfere with that, nor does he interfere with the many prurient publications which emanate from the presses of the city. This indubitably shows that he is after one paper because it deals with one subject. He is establishing a censorship of ideas, which is not only un-American as to its broad aspect, but is illegal and unconstitutional in its narrow phase. Write to President Roosevelt and protest against this press censorship.—"Truth Seeker," New York, October 28, 1905.

SHALL THE PRESS BE MUZZLED?

Editor of "The Globe:"

Sir—George Bernard Shaw's comparison of the United States and England, reference to which is made in your editorial "Nastier Than Supposed," may or may not be fair, but it is nevertheless true that there is a tendency in this country to put a ban on unpopular ideas. We may disagree with Mr. Shaw as to marriage being "the most licentious of human institutions," but shall we muzzle a writer because he does not agree with us on the marriage question? Take the case of the paper mentioned in Mr. Shaw's letter. It is a little fortnightly publication devoted to the discussion of sex problems, and its literary style is beyond reproach. Its editor has recently been sentenced to a year's imprisonment for publishing an article of a very innocent nature, and the paper is now censored by the postal authorities before delivery to subscribers; and if anything in it does not please the censors the whole edition of the paper is destroyed. And why? Simply because the editor holds unconventional views on social questions, as no attempt is made to show that there was any indelicate language in his paper. Now, it may be well enough to suppress vulgarity and obscenity, but to prosecute a man for expressing ideas in decent language, no matter how unpopular these ideas may be, is an outrage. Are the American people in favor of a postoffice censorship of the most odious kind? Is it possible that we are introducing the methods of the Russian autocracy into the land of freedom?—Cyrus W. Coolidge in "New York Globe."

New York, September 27.

PRESS WRITERS' ASSOCIATION.

October 30, 1905.

To the Editor of LUCIFER:

About September 1, 1905, I accepted the duties and office of general secretary of the American Press Writers' Association, General Secretary A. C. Armstrong telling me he was overworked and too busy to do the duties thereof. I expect he will later make a full report of the great and good work done while he was general secretary.

I wish LUCIFER and other publications to aid in asking old members to send me their permanent addresses, though it be the same as per the old card list. I hope funds may be supplied to have new lists of members printed. Every member ought to be active, as is shown by the trials, persecutions and annoyances pressed on the warrior for liberty, justice and equality—Moses Harman. Yours truly,

A. F. HILL,
Suite 2. 134 Isabella St., Boston, Mass.

BAS RELIEF MEDALLIONS OF MOSES HARMAN.

Bas relief medallions of the bust of Moses Harman, size 9 by 14 inches (oval), the work of La Verne F. Wheeler, a well-known Chicago artist, can be had at the following prices: Plain white, $1; old ivory, $1.50; plain bronze, $2; Etruscan bronze, $2.50. Thirty-five cents additional for boxing and shipping. The proceeds of sales, after deducting bare cost, are to be devoted to the defense of LUCIFER's editor. Send orders to La Verne F. Wheeler, 3323 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. ALLEN EVANS, Cripple Creek, Colo.—Times here are exceedingly dull. The "scab" miners send their money out of the camp and Cripple Creek is on the ragged edge financially.

ANNIE B. FISH, Newburgh, N. Y.—I think Mr. Watson's idea a very good one. So here is my first 25 cents and I, too, will try to send one every month. With best wishes I remain, yours for truth.

G. M., Pennsylvania.—O I am so glad that so many thinking people are attacking the postal tyranny. It is a shame that you should be a martyr to the cause, but it is a great cause. My whole heart is with you. Inclosed is check for $2.

"The Star," James H. Barry, Editor, San Francisco, Cal.—Enclosed find money order for $5, which use as you see fit. I need not tell you that Mr. Barry's heart goes out to you in your persecutions. God grant that freedom of speech and press may not be strangled. Mr. Barry would like to do more than this for you (the cause), but he has so many calls for financial assistance that he can not fulfill his desires in these things. Mr. Barry is extremely busy and unable to take time to answer all his friends, so he directed me to give you his regards and godspeed.

O. H. STONE, Baring, Wash.—It is self-evident that the postal authorities desire the death of LUCIFER very much, judging by the flimsy excuses they resort to in order to bar it from the mails. It is therefore still more important to keep the good old ship afloat. I have complied with the request of the Free Speech League, although I have very little faith in appeals of this kind. But of course we should leave no stone unturned in our effort to obtain justice, and it can't possibly hurt to make our grievances known. This is not a very good field for missionary work, but you may send me a few of the leaflets you mention and I will distribute them among my fellow-workers. I enclose $5 to be used as needed.

A. F. HILL, Boston, Mass.—Enclosed are 10 cents in stamps for postage. I do not care for you to endanger yourself by sending me any condemned ideas. I am not afraid to read anything you might send me, but I have read the Holy Bible, therefore my mind is trained so that you can't suggest any worse ideas than David of forty wives, and Solomon of one thousand women. The New Testament authors teach no marriage or giving in marriage in heaven (a place and condition on earth), and the Lord's prayer asks to have it on earth as it was in heaven 1800 years ago. Now, be cheerful. Keep clear within the law of the majority, as you ought to know how to do. I have asked the postmaster general some questions today and await a reply.

J. T. P., Fremont street, Seattle, Wash.—In reply to yours of the 17th inst. will say that I like your paper, yet it advocates that old wornout doctrine that "Evil needs resistance." Resistance is warfare, and warfare is eternally wrong, for the result is might instead of right. To my request for a lady correspondent, which appeared in LUCIFER October 22, 1905, not a single response was received. This is conclusive evidence that this superior class of female readers still prefer preaching to practice and I have become weary of preaching alone, and as I have no money to assist in spreading light among the thinkers (many of whom have more light than I possess) I will ask you to discontinue sending LUCIFER when my subscription expires. Yours for the uplifting of others through one's self.

H. M. ADDISON, Adelaide, South Australia.—I am in receipt of yours of 18th July last. Let me first say that I hardly care to offer you sympathy without relief, for fear I should be considered as one of those who say "Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled," and yet give not the things which are needful. But I grieve that you should be so persecuted "for righteousness' sake." What a race of silly prudes and hypocrites dominate not only you but also the world. I presume "The Bible" is mailable in America, though probably none of your persecutors, nor the proprietor of any newspaper printed in English, would dare to publish "selections" from it. I intensely admire your moral courage in a noble cause. I will distribute as many circulars and LUCIFERS as you like to forward to me.

R. B. KERR.—In my recent article on "The Degradation of Women by Puritanism," I said that the actress Rachel was the only eminent Jewess. I now find that Sarah Bernhardt is also a Jewess. That only enforces my argument, however. France has had far more famous women than any other country, and it seems that, although the Jews are scattered through all nations, the only eminent Jewesses have been French Jewesses. That shows that the social and moral conditions of France are particularly favorable to women.

GAYLORD WILSHIRE, Editor "Wilshire's Magazine," New York City.—It seems to me the postoffice has gone daffy in regard to you, and I feel that you are fighting for a principle which certainly will be of the greatest importance to the people of the United States at a very near day. I doubt if we can ever do very much towards freedom, however, as long as we have capitalism. I fear the censorship will grow stronger and stronger with the increased power of the capitalists and that we will not get rid of the censor until we have socialism.

I sent an account of your stuff to Bernard Shaw, 10 Adelphi Terrace, London, Eng., with the result that when he wrote to the New York "Times" recently he mentioned you, which I suppose you noticed.

C. L. JAMES, Eau Claire, Wis.—When a copy of LUCIFER is put into the postoffice addressed to me, who have paid for it, it is no longer the editor's property; and talk about confiscating his property is irrelevant, whichever side it comes from. That copy of LUCIFER is my property. If it is obscene, that's not my fault. Ordering and receiving obscene matter by mail is not forbidden; though depositing it in the mail is. Comstock does the former every day. Neither have I been "fraud-ordered." Then the postmaster at Chicago, or elsewhere, has no right to confiscate (steal) my property. He could be prosecuted for doing so; but a better course is to see him. If he says he acted by orders from Washington, that only affords ground for suing the post master general also. It does not exonerate himself. This is exactly what I should do if I could pay a lawyer.

EDWARD SECREST, Randolph, Kan.—I was glad to see by the note received the other day that you are still footloose and breathing the lake air outside of prison bars. This outburst of Comstockism is making propaganda for the cause of right and truth, liberty of press and speech, every day. Just let the sleuth-hounds yelp and snarl as they follow your tracks. This disgraceful attitude of our postal inquisitors at Chicago and Washington is opening the eyes of more than one thoughtful, patriotic citizen up and down our broad land, especially among your editorial collaborators. They see how surely, though little by little, 'Coming events cast their shadows before;" how a growing imperialism is feeding the apathic "herd" with homeopathic doses of Old World despotism and medieval methods. So we must keep up the fight, lie on our arms and store up ammunition. I see my subscription is due you for the brave little LUCIFER. Enclosed find $2 to cover another year's voyage on the turbulent sea. The remainder apply where most needed. I have petitioned the throne at Washington direct. Don't know just how humble in tone I addressed our servant (?). I enclose the petition, not for publication, but just to ask you whether I used the King's English in diplomatic form! I sent Editor Harrop, of the Manhattan "Mercury," a copy of LUCIFER and the manifesto of the Free Speech League, and asked him to say something about your case, and the postal satraps whenever the sign was right. He is a liberal, and independent thinker, an able writer, and a fearless, outspoken journalist. The "Mercury" is a long established Democratic paper, the most heretical paper west of Topeka, if not in the state, and is cordially hated by the clericals. I thank you most sincerely for your warm words of sympathy. They do good and are welcome these lonely days and dark hours. But through all the gloom we have the sweet memory of comradeship in the past and warm hearted, whole souled communion with dear friends and fellow workers of the Auld Lang Syne. That you and your good daughter may see the silver lining in the murky, black and threatening cloud overhanging your rooftree is the sincere wish of, yours sincerely.

[This letter is from a former "Regent" of the State Agricultural College of Kansas, a farmer by occupation, but one who has wielded not a little influence in the reform politics of his adopted state. The copy of the letter to Roosevelt sent, not for publication, is in the form of petition, rather than of protest. Part of it reads as follows: "Your humble petitioner has read the paper LUCIFER for many years; is personally acquainted with the publisher and knows him as an honorable, kindly, sincere citizen and noble-hearted humanitarian; knows that the charges of 'obscenity' against him are unfounded if not ridiculous. As an American citizen your petitioner feels himself aggrieved by the arbitrary and high-handed, if not unconstitutional, method of seizing our property and condemning it without judge or jury, and believing that this action of the postal authorities is un-American in spirit, anti-democratic, an infringement on the liberty of the press, against the genius of our cherished institutions and our country's beloved flag, which flag your petitioner had the honor to carry at the head of a Kansas regiment in the late civil war—your petitioner most respectfully entreats the President to kindly inquire into this case and give us a hearing at his earliest convenience. And, as in duty bound, your petitioner will ever pray."

Mr. Secrest (Sigrist, as originally spelled) was born and reared in Europe, hence it is not strange that he adopts the old-world petition rather than remonstrance when asking for redress of grievances. It seems hard for the American citizen, whether native or foreign born, to remember that this is a "government of the people, by the people and for the people," and not a government of officials by officials and for officials. Perhaps we have not yet suffered enough from the abuse of the power that we delegate to these officials.—M. H.]

And don't fill out legal papers or card memos—or make out accounts or hotel menus in your own handwriting.

It looks bad, reflects on your standing, makes people think you can't afford a stenographer, and is sometimes ambiguous.

You can write out your letters—make out an abstract—fill in an insurance policy—enter your card memo—make out your accounts, or a hotel menu—or do any other writing you need, on any kind, size or thickness of paper, and space any way you want on

The OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer.

You can write any of these things yourself if you do not happen to have a stenographer.

For you can easily learn, with a little practice, to write just as rapidly, and as perfectly, as an expert operator on the OLIVER. Because the OLIVER is the simplified typewriter. And you can see every word you write. About 80 per cent more durable than any other typewriter, because it has about 80 per cent less wearing points than most other typewriters.

80 per cent easier to write with than these other complicated, intricate machines that require "humoring"—technical knowledge—long practice and special skill to operate.

Than machines which cannot be adjusted to any special space—with which it is impossible to write abstracts, insurance policies, or odd-sized documents except you buy expensive special attachments requiring experts to operate.

You can adjust the OLIVER to any reasonable space—you can write on any reasonable size and thickness of paper, right out to the very edge, without the aid of any expensive attachment or special skill, and your work will be neat appearing, legible and clear.

For the OLIVER is the typewriter for the doctor, the lawyer, the insurance agent, the merchant, the hotel proprietor—or any man who does his own writing.

THE FENCE OR THE AMBULANCE.

'Twas a dangerous cliff, as they freely confessed,
Though to walk near its crest was so pleasant;
But over its terrible edge there had slipped
A duke and full many a peasant.
So the people said something would have to be done,
But their projects did not at all tally.
Some, "Put a fence around the edge of the cliff,"
Some, "An ambulance down in the valley."

But the cry for the ambulance carried the day,
And it spread through the neighboring city;
A fence may be useful or not, it is true,
But each heart became brimful of pity
For those who slipped over that dangerous cliff.
And the dwellers in highway and alley
Gave pounds or gave pence, not to put up a fence,
But an ambulance down in the valley.

Then an old sage remarked: "It's a marvel to me
That people give far more attention
To repairing results than to stopping the cause,
When they'd better aim at prevention.
Let us stop at its source all this mischief," cried he,
"Come neighbors and friends, let us rally;
If the cliff we will fence, we might almost dispense
With the ambulance down in the valley.

"Oh, he's a fanatic," the others rejoined;
"Dispense with the ambulance? Never!
He'd dispense with all charities, too; if he could.
No, no, we'll support them forever!
Aren't we picking up folks just as fast as they fall?
And shall this man dictate to us? Shall he?
Why should people of sense stop to put up a fence,
While the ambulance works in the valley?"

—JOSEPH MALINS.

Better generate well than reclaim them when old—
For the gist of this matter is seeing
That to rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To hinder such people from being.
Better close up the source that generates crime
Than deliver from dungeon or galley;
Better put a stout fence round the edge of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley.

BERNARD SHAW IN SELF-DEFENSE.

For two months or more, and to an extent almost if not quite unprecedented, the great metropolitan dailies of two hemispheres have given publicity to a controversy over the books and plays of George Bernard Shaw, the distinguishing feature of which books and plays seems to be that they depict human life in the great cities as it is really lived.

The fame of another London playwright, one William Shakespeare, rests chiefly on the fact that he painted human life so well that his stage characters seem even more real to us than the women and men of flesh and blood we meet every day.

Is not this the true explanation of the extraordinary prominence lately given to Bernard Shaw, his "Superman" and his "Mrs. Warren's Profession"?

Out of the great mass of "interviews" and "criticisms" given to the sensation-hunting public, in regard to this matter, within the past few weeks I select two articles, one from the Chicago "Record-Herald," and one from the New York "Sun." Lack of space prevents "display" of head-lines to correspond with the original presentation in these dailies, but the essential points of these head-lines are given herewith as printed in the metropolitan dailies:

SHAW IN MARTYR ROLE.

English Playwright Airs Indignation at Suppression of His Drama. Rails at "Comstockery."

Author of "Mrs. Warren" Threatens to Shock New York Censor Out of His Wits.

[Special Cable Dispatch to the Chicago Record-Herald.]
[Copyright, 1905, by New York Herald Company.]

London, Nov. 6.—The Morning Leader will publish tomorrow an article by Bernard Shaw in defense of his play, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," in the course of which he says:

"There is no side issue in 'Mrs. Warren's Profession.' There is the direct and inevitable consequence of the relations between parties, which is not shirked, and which, if it were shirked, would leave the play open to the charge of being an advertisement of the advantages of a disreputable life. In the play Mrs. Warren is pictured as sober, greedy, hard working and pursuing her trade with plenty of business ability and consequent commercial success.

SET OF HISTORY GIVEN.

The interference of American police has an instructive history. Some time ago an unfortunate editor published an article in America in which the marital relations were broadly handled. For this offense against decency he suffered the prompt confiscation of his paper and a severe sentence of imprisonment, and his case was a by no means isolated one.

"He appealed to me to help him draw attention to the infamy of his treatment. I of course could do nothing, but I bided my time, and when the terror established by Anthony Comstock, secretary of vice, but it is a society of persons who call public attention to their own purity and to other people's impurity—when this terror frightened the Manhattan public libraries into placing a restriction on the distribution of my book, I succeeded in compelling them to withdraw the restriction by mentioning the case I have described and adding that Mr. Comstock was making America ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

PUTS BLAME ON COMSTOCK.

"I used the term 'Comstockery' to describe the white terror, and the word struck the fancy of New York. It laughed, and Comstock was furious, declaring that my works were immoral; that he would set the law in motion against me; that he had never heard of me nor read my works, but would now do so in search of something to prosecute me for.

"He has certainly been as good as his word. With the municipal elections at hand and Tammany eager for suffrages of the pure, he has had no difficulty in persuading the commissioner of police to raise the white flag by prosecuting not 'Mrs. Warren' and 'Sir George Crofts,' but my attempt to throw some light into the dark places whence they draw their profits.

"The public has nothing to do with the attack. It supports Comstock generally, because he has destroyed ninety-three tons of post cards in his lifetime as indecent, and it believes that most of the publications he suppresses are noxious rubbish and no good to anyone, but when it comes to imprisoning and ruining men for trying to protect women from reckless conjugal behavior and setting up a censorship of literature, by a private official of obviously limited literary intelligence, whose life has been spent in hunting out obscenities, I have protested, and Comstock has declared his intention of suppressing me. He had better, for if he does not, I am afraid I shall end by shocking him out of his wits."

SHAW PROUD OF HIS PLAY.

Police Not Protecting Public Morality in Suppressing "Mrs. Warren," He Says.

[Special Cable Dispatch to The Sun.]

London, Oct. 31.—The correspondent of The Sun today interviewed George Bernard Shaw in reference to the suppression by the New York police of his play "Mrs. Warren's Profession." Mr. Shaw said:

"If Police Commissioner McAdoo has earned by his public services the confidence of the American people as a man of higher character and deeper insight into social needs, moral problems and greater concern for the good of the community than I, it is not for me to question his qualifications or to incite Mr. Daly to resist his authority. I have a certain reputation in the world, which will not be altered by Mr. McAdoo's conviction that I am a blackguard. The New York police have a certain reputation in the world, and that also will not be altered by my conviction. I know my own business better than they do.

"In the opinion of the police prostitution is a permissible subject on the stage only when it is made agreeable. In my opinion the numerous plays in which it is made agreeable should be counterbalanced by plays in which its sordid cause is exposed.

"I am extremely proud of having written the play. It has made me more friends than any other work of mine, especially among serious women. It will make me friends of the same stamp in America, and these friends will keep steadily pressing the two questions: Are the facts exposed in 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' denied? If not, in whose interests are they suppressed?

"It will be seen more and more clearly that the police, doubtless with the best intentions, are protecting not public morality but the interests of the most dangerous class, namely, the employers who pay women less than subsistence wages and overwork them mercilessly to grind profits for themselves out of the pith of the nation. Naturally they raise the clamor of immorality and disgusting dialogue, but in the end the public conscience of America, at present a hasty, unintelligent and easily duped force, will get educated and go over them like a steam roller, with an effective factory code stated by the way.

"Mr. Daly offered to abide by the verdict of the New York press. If this is true, he must have forgotten that the New York press does not go to the theatre. It only sends critics. Let the editors come and the verdict proposed by Mr. Daly will be possible, but if social and moral questions are left to the critics they will not improve on Mr. McAdoo, who probably knows the real world much better than they. For my own part, I would prefer a jury of public spirited women with experience in rescue work and slum life to any other jury whatever. They know how society makes vice by refusing to pay virtue decently."

From these clippings it would appear that Mr. Shaw's offense is substantially the same as that of LUCIFER'S editor—for which offense said editor is now a prisoner under sentence of one year at hard labor in the Illinois penitentiary. This offense is neither more nor less than TELLING TOO MUCH TRUTH to suit the ears and the eyes of the censors of morals in this country and in England. Hence it is not strange that Bernard Shaw should express a sympathetic interest, a fraternal interest, in the case of an "unfortunate editor who published an article in America in which the marital relations were broadly handled," and for which offense "he suffered the prompt confiscation of his paper and a severe sentence of imprisonment." While it is not quite correct, by the way, to say that I "appealed" to Mr. Shaw to "help call attention to the infamy of the treatment" I was, and still am, receiving, it is true that one or more of LUCIFER'S friends on this side the Atlantic did call Mr. Shaw's attention to this outrage and asked him to lend the power of his pen to help get the facts of this Chicago persecution before liverty-lovers everywhere who read and speak the English language.

LUCIFER'S friends and helpers, as well as its editor, owe a debt of gratitude to Bernard Shaw for what he has done and is doing to help onward the work of creating a public sentiment, a public conscience, that will soon demand the repeal, or the ignoring, of the medieval laws that now enable such men as Anthony Comstock to hold up and hold back the car of human progress by making it dangerous for all who would tell the truth, the whole truth, about the "marital relations," the conventional, the "sacramental" marriage system, now enforced in all lands called Christian.

Much more I would like to say in comment upon these noble utterances of Bernard Shaw, but for lack of space will close by saying that the last few lines quoted from him deserve special attention and consideration. Whose fault is it that Mr. Shaw cannot have a "jury of public-spirited women" to decide the question as to whether his plays should be enacted before a mixed audience of women, men and children?

Is it not the fault of women themselves?

If women should do as men have done, not wait to have somebody to grant them political or civil rights, but proceed to take them —if they would say to their husbands, fathers, brothers and sons,

"No more children!—no more 'marital rights,' till woman's political and civil equality with man is recognized and practicalized" —if women in general, or if only a respectable minority of women were seriously to take this stand, how long, think you, would Bernard Shaw be compelled to plead in vain for a "jury of women" to decide upon the morality or immorality of his plays? M. HARMAN.

Marriage is the only legal contract which abrogates as between the parties all the laws that safeguard the particular relation to which it refers.—G. B. Shaw.

DESPOTISM MADE POSSIBLE THROUGH "FRAUD ORDER."

Very few people in the country are aware of the fact that on September 19, 1890, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled enacted a law (under pretense of revising certain statutes relating to lotteries) which makes it possible for the postmaster general to deprive any person of his or her right to the use of the United States mails, regardless of the fact that they have in no way been guilty of fraud or other violation of the law, and that they have complied with all known postal regulations.

Those who do know of the existence of this law are not all offenders against it, as might generally be supposed. There are many instances known to the writer where letters of a purely personal nature have been withheld from the person to whom they were addressed, simply because that person had been accused of fraudulent use of the mails, although the accusation was not substantiated by the facts in the case, and the person accused was not in prison or even "out on bail."

In the case of Helen Wilmans-Post, of Seabreeze, Florida, the postoffice authorities withheld her mail from her for more than two years while they vainly tried to find any of her patients—whom she had treated according to the methods of mental scientists—who would testify that they had been in any way defrauded by her. Had they found such a patient, one who would have offered such testimony, the United States government would have used it against Mrs. Post, but at the same time they refused to permit her to introduce the testimony of any one of the thousands of patients whom she had benefitted by her advice and treatment, although any number of them volunteered to give their testimony in her defense.

Such injustice and such outrage upon the rights of any individual should have brought forth a vigorous protest from every fair-minded person in the country. That it did not do so may be attributed to the fact that the daily papers and the magazines, either through indifference or ignorance of the real facts in the case, maintained absolute silence, and the general public were therefore uninformed.

The writer of this article was ignorant of the significance and far-reaching power of the law above referred to until in July, 1903, having occasion to address a personal letter to Mrs. Post, editor of "Freedom," Seabreeze, Fla., she was surprised a few days later to have her letter returned to her marked "Fraudulent," and further inscribed "Return to writer."

Knowing that my letter was not fraudulent in itself, and did not relate in any way to any fraudulent business, and also that I had complied with all postal regulations, I enclosed the letter to Mrs. Post in another envelope addressed to the postmaster at Seabreeze, Fla., with a written demand for its delivery to the person to whom it was addressed. It was again returned to me with the statement that the P. M. was acting under instructions from Washington and could consider no others. I then addressed a letter to President Roosevelt stating all the facts in the case, and one also to the postmaster general, asking by what authority my rights as a citizen of this country were so interfered with. The answer came back that the postmaster general acted in accordance with the power conferred upon him by the United States congress.

I then sent for a copy of the law which conferred such extraordinary power upon the head of the postal department, and while the text of it is too long to give in its entirety I will quote one section from it in order that readers of LUCIFER may know that so long as that law remains upon the statute books we may expect nothing but injustice and abuse from the postal officials either at Washington or elsewhere. If any one desires the full text of this bill they can receive the same by sending a request for a copy to C. H. Robb, assistant attorney general for the Postoffice Department at Washington.

The bill is entitled "United States statutes having reference to the transmission through the mails of matter relating to lotteries, schemes to defraud, and schemes or devices for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises."

"An Act to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to lotteries, and for other purposes. (Act of September 19, 1890.)

"SEC. 2. That section thirty-nine hundred and twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3929. The postmaster general may upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money or of any real or personal property by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, or that any person or company is conducting any other scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, instruct postmasters at any postoffice at which registered letters arrive directed to any such person or company, or to the agent or representative of any such person or company, whether such agent or representative is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, to return all such registered letters to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed, with the word "Fraudulent" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the writers thereof, under such regulations as the postmaster general may prescribe. But nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself.

The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme, or device, that remittances for the same may be made by registered letters to any other person, firm, bank, corporation or association named therein shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of such agency by all the parties named therein; but the postmaster general shall not be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way satisfactory to himself."

There are two things which cannot fail to impress the thinking mind as the full significance of this law is comprehended. The first, is the unlimited authority it places at the disposal of the postmaster general, and the second is the omission of any clause relating to the reimbursement of the people for the money paid in postage, accepted by the government for the delivery of mail matter which it afterwards refuses to deliver to the person to whom it is addressed. It is surely a strange omission that some such provision was not made, since by not doing so, our legislators have placed the United States government in the peculiar position of "obtaining money under false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises."

It is worse even than that, for whatever may be said of the individuals who offer inducements to simple minded people to voluntarily part with their money for gold bricks, lottery tickets, real estate, mining stock, masses for the dead or any other scheme of that nature, what shall we say when our government engages in the "hold-up" business in the manner we have described, for even if the postoffice authorities return our letters, they have performed an act that can only be likened to the 'hold-up" man who returns our pocketbook after relieving us of the money there was in it.

Meeting with so little serious objection or protest from the people in the pursuit of this game, what could we expect but that they would go still further and confiscate and destroy the property of citizens as they have confiscated and destroyed so many editions of LUCIFER that the subscribers have paid for, and the editor has prepaid postage upon? Do we ask for redress? There is "no provision" for such, so I am informed by the assistant attorney general of whom I made inquiry.

Well, it is LUCIFER now, but what paper or magazine will be the next to come under the ban remains to be seen. That this despotic law will be used to cripple and destroy others than LUCIFER is not to be doubted for an instant, and we cannot help propounding the question,—Will it be easier to have this atrocious law repealed now in its infancy, or later, after it has become such a power in the hands of despotic officials that it can crush the life out of any paper or magazine whose principles are not in accord with the LACK OF PRINCIPLE in the minds of these same officials?

These are the things we are now to consider seriously, and if the editors of all papers would unite and make LUCIFER'S cause the cause of all, the fight for the freedom of the press would be won in America for all time.

Let us all work to this end.

THE SOCIAL COMRADESHIP OF MEN AND WOMEN.

The social side of the interdependence of men and women, the mutual help and comfort, is placed last in the church statement of the aims to be attained. But, without any unnecessary discussion of relative importance, it is natural to consider first this social activity of sex because it precedes the others in the lives of all. Beginning with conscious social life, it lasts the whole length of it, and is noticeable in the lives of all the higher animals, in some of whom it is more conspicuous than in man. The high principle of love of our kind is always involved in the best friendships; and where the social ideal is felt as higher than the purely sexual ideal, the love is more intense, and the poet stated a deep truth when he said, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honour more." For the happiness of each as well as all, we must have moral principles—that is, laws of each as well as all, we must have moral principles—that is, social principles—to which friendship is subservient, however hard Comstock and all his may work to keep from us the knowledge which is the only true ground-work of morality, and to thrust us back into the moral chaos from which society has already suffered so much.

In healthy lives, personal attractions and comradeships come early in youth, and should lay a good foundation in the character for the best love alliances of later life. They seem deep rooted in social instinct, and may be observed even in such comparatively little social animals as cats, among whom the young male especially links himself with an older male companion, and doubtless benefits by association in hunting and in cat proficiency generally.

The pair friendships of youth certainly have a sexual element in them, intensifying as they do at puberty; and, as Emerson says of the attraction of opposite and complementary natures, "sex is not local but universal." These friendships have a refining influence; and only the perversity and vulgarity of puritan minds attribute injurious and coarse expression to these intimacies.

The same beneficent impulse is vaguely recognized in the word chivalry. This is usually referred only to the kindness of men towards women, whereas it is more often exercised in everyday life by women towards men, in whom it seems to blend with maternal feeling. The chivalry of women towards men is perhaps less frequently noticed because it is more usual.

Social comradeship is the main factor in the success of any permanent sexual partnership, and it has often served to shield the failures in other respects of marriage. It is deplorable, however, that often the best conditions of this friendship are neglected when the irrevocable alliance is being contemplated. A difference between the religious or philosophic beliefs of the pair is actually supposed to be a trifling matter. Yet to those who know what a strong bond of feeling mutual aspirations and beliefs held in common may be, divergence of opinion on large subjects seems a great drawback in any friendship.

And where friendship fails within marriage, it is scarcely to be found outside of it, in puritan society; for the married usually give up all old friendships besides, and their mating is a game of chance to win one friendship or none.

There is a belief still prevalent that any social enjoyment is somewhat wrong for a woman. This was shown in a recent discussion on race "suicide," when an English bishop contributed the suggestion that the selfishness of women in indulging in cycling, horseback riding and hockey was a cause of decrease in the birth rate,—without, of course, adducing any evidence that these physical exercises have actually proved detrimental to maternity. "It is selfishness on her part," he said. "She has a stupid notion that she must be her husband's chum. She cannot be in the sense that she can go in for the same exercise." The bishop's remarks are an example of the lack of wisdom that always accompanies lack of sympathy.

In past ages, it was certainly advantageous to society that the women should be kept strictly to their duty of that time to bear as many children as possible, while the men had to be ready for the violent exercises of hunting and warfare; and men of the savage period no doubt took advantage of the situation to make women do nearly all the rest of the labor. But modern developments have changed all this in advanced countries. In rational lives of love and labor, of both men and women, companionship in moderate muscular exercise, whether in work or play, presents no difficulty, and need only be modified for a few brief periods in the lives of women.

The social rule that there should be no social intimacy between the sexes unless marriage is contemplated is one of the most obvious ways in which the marriage system lowers the moral tone of society. Those who in any way set aside the rule are liable to have their motives misunderstood in a most annoying way; and a young man may even be estrapped by a mercenary parent suddenly demanding "What are your intentions?" The result is that the more refined and honorable often submit to social isolation from the opposite sex.

The greatest of all drawbacks to the happy comradeship of men and women has been the difference in their intellectual and moral education. This unfortunate system of different upbringing is, we may hope, passing away; and a happier generation—and why should it not be the next generation?—of men and women will be taught that next to their duty to society generally as faithful citizens comes the duty of each sex to minister to the highest happiness of the other.

FIDEI DEFENSOR.

HAS AMERICA THE BEST MARRIAGE LAWS?

In No. 1051 W. H. Breese says: "I admit there is plenty to improve in our present legal marriage code, still it is the best the race has so far developed." What constitutes a good marriage code, if such a thing there be, is a matter of opinion, but Mr. Breese approves of "women's equality and freedom," so I presume he would test a marriage code by that standard. Let us apply his test to the facts.

The following is from Kent's "Commentaries on American Law," edition of 1884, Vol. 2, page 181: "As the husband is the guardian of the wife, and bound to protect and maintain her, the law has given him a reasonable superiority and control over her person, and he may even put gentle restraints upon her liberty, if her conduct be such as to require it. * * * If he shifts his domicile, the wife is bound to follow him wherever he chooses to go." I believe there is no doubt that this passage states the law as it stands today in almost, if not quite, every state of the union.

In England a wife can go and live wherever she likes, and the husband has no say in the matter; neither has he the smallest control over her movements. In the case of the Queen versus Jackson, 1891, Lord Escher, who was then considered the ablest judge on the English bench, said: "Under the law of England a man has no more rights over the personal liberty of his wife than over that of any other woman." There is still some doubt as to whether a man has any rights over his wife while she remains voluntarily under his roof, but there is not the slightest doubt that by walking out of the door she can deprive him of all claim to interfere with her.

In some American states the law on the guardianship of children is very advanced, but these are chiefly in the far west. In many of the more populous states the law on this subject is still medieval. From a recent newspaper report I understand that even now a New York woman whose husband is dead has no right to her children if the husband has appointed some other guardian by will. In France for many years a widow has had an absolute right to the custody and control of her children, and all that the husband can do is to appoint an adviser to act with her. In England a similar law has lately been passed.

The paragraph occupying this space in the first edition of this number was declared by the postal censorship to be unmailable.

There is one sure way in which any one with a talent for languages can make a fortune. Let him travel over Europe lecturing on the marriage laws of the United States. He would have to be quick, however, for so many people would die of laughing that laws would everywhere be passed to prohibit further allusion to the subject.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

CITIZEN OR SUBJECT—WHICH?

Two articles have been written for this issue of LUCIFER by special request of the editor. To these two articles the careful attention of everyone claiming to be an American citizen, or hoping to become such, is hereby earnestly called.

The first and longer of these articles, that of Hulda L. Potter-Loomis, is written by one who has given more attention than most readers have done, to the comparatively recent encroachments upon the rights of the citizen under the specious plea of protecting the weak and easily-imposed-upon, from the wiles of "confidence" swindlers, lottery-ticket venders, etc., etc.

In other words, the article was written to show how the postal department of the United States government is now being used to discriminate against and crush the business of those who happen to fall under the displeasure of powerful "vested" interests, such as the "medical" monopoly. The case of Mrs. Wilmans-Post is cited as an example, chiefly because Mrs. Loomis happens to be in possession of some of the facts relating to this outrage, not because there is anything particularly outrageous connected with it. Many other instances involving much greater hardship and suffering than the Wilmans case could be cited showing the working of this the latest, perhaps, of the federal enactments whose purpose seems to be to deprive the citizen of the right to manage his own business in his own way so long as he does not invade the equal right of his neighbor.

The other article to which attention is specially called is one that more nearly concerns the life and work of the publication called LUCIFER—"Son of the Morning." For some weeks, if not months, a number of our friends, notably members of the Free Speech League, have insisted that an action at law should be entered at once to compel the postmaster at Chicago to admit the current editions of LUCIFER to its equitable share of the United States mail service; also to restrain the postal department at Washington, D. C., from confiscating and destroying such editions of the paper as may fall under the condemnation of the censors.

Having consulted three very reputable legal firms of this city and having received substantially the same answer from all, in regard to what could and what could not be done, I asked Mr. Soelke to write out the opinion of his firm and give it to me for publication. Here is his answer:

STEDMAN & SOELKE, COUNSELLORS AT LAW, 94 LA SALLE STREET,
CHICAGO, NOV. 18, 1905.

MOSES HARMAN, Esq., 500 Fulton Street, City.

DEAR SIR: In the administration by the Postoffice Department of the postal law relating to so-called "obscene" matter, the said Department claims and exercises the right of determining what is and what is not "obscene" and to act directly against such matter by denying it the use of the mails, and, in some instances, by its confiscation and destruction without notice or a hearing before such order is issued.

This law, you claim, is unconstitutional for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it deprives the citizen of his property and liberty without due process of law.

2. Because it abridges the freedom of the press, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

3. Because it confers judicial power on the officials of the post department.

4. Because by the action of that officer, the citizen would be deprived of his property without due process of law.

The Supreme Court of the United States has answered these contentions in the negative.

I am requested by you now to make a terse statement of the reasons advanced by the Supreme Court in support of their decisions. They are as follows, as I understand:

The power conferred on the Postoffice Department by the statute in question is not judicial in its strict sense, but merely involves the exercise of discretion and judgment and where the law authorizes an officer to exercise judgment and discretion, the courts will not entertain an appeal from the decision of such officer, nor revise his judgment in any such case. Nor can it my mandamus act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in matters committed to his care in the discharge of his official duties.

The principal reason urged for this by said court is that under any other rule government would be administered not by the great departments ordained by the Constitution and laws guided by the modes therein described, but by the uncertain and perhaps contradictory action of the courts in the enforcement of their views of private interests. Hence, the court says, the only acts to which the power of the courts by mandamus extends are such as are purely ministerial and with regard to which nothing like judgment and discretion is the performance of his duties is left to the officer, but whenever the right of judgment or discretion exists in him, it is he and not the courts who can regulate its exercise. And with respect to the exercise of this discretion by the head of an executive department, it has even been held that he cannot be held liable to a civil suit for damages on account of his official acts in respect to matters within his authority by reason of any personal or even malicious motive that might be alleged to have prompted him; that it would seriously cripple the proper and effective administration of public affairs as intrusted to the executive branch of the government if he were subjected to any such restraint.

The only relief, then, for the abuse of this discretion, appears to be impeachment or indictment for malfeasance and, on conviction, removal from office of the offender.

In one case that I recall, the court said substantially that a citizen of the United States has no absolute constitutional right that his mail shall be carried by the United States at all, that whatever rights he may have in this respect exist in the discretion of the legislature and are entirely different from those fundamental rights to life, liberty and property which are secured by the Constitution, and that since then Congress may or may not, in its discretion, provide a postal system for public convenience, it is difficult to say what condition it may not impose to its use and enjoyment. Of course, Congress, in the exercise of its discretionary powers, cannot discriminate between persons or classes of persons, but the court holds that persons and property can be subjected to all kinds of restraint and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, and the right of every citizen to the benefit of the discretionary legislation of Congress must, therefore, be subject to the necessity of public health, morals and order and the general welfare, and the efficient execution of the powers expressly conferred by the constitution. The discretionary power conferred by law upon the postoffice department does not, according to said court, make this action tantamount to a trial, and penal judgment against the party affected by it; its effect is not to punish but to preserve the mails from misuse. Very truly yours,

CHAS. H. SOELKE.

Instead of giving my own views now upon the several points presented in this carefully prepared legal opinion I prefer to wait a fortnight, meantime asking every one who believes in the legend known as "equal rights for all and special privileges for none," to read and re-read, consider and reconsider the words of Mr. Soelke. Especially do I ask all who happen to possess matured opinions upon the question as to what the word citizenship in the United States really means, to write out, as briefly, as clearly, as possible her or his opinion—either for publication in LUCIFER or in some other paper, or simply for comparison of ideas—and send the same to this office. But few of such articles can be published in LUCIFER, but the preparation of the same will be worth all it costs in time and trouble.

Whether the opinion of Mr. Soelke is to be reprinted or not it will be well for each reader who feels interested in the question of citizenship on the one hand and serfdom on the other to keep this copy of LUCIFER for reference.

M. HARMAN.

OUR BRITISH EXCHANGES.

Among the foreign exchanges that come to Lucifer's office none deserve more grateful and more appreciative mention than does "The Truth Seeker," published at Bradford, England. While not always in full accord with the methods of its editor, I regard him as one of the most valiant champions of freedom of speech and of press now living. At the head of his title page stands the words "Prosecuted for Blasphemy," from which legend we understand that he has himself been the victim of the unholy alliance known as church and state. For the past year the Bradford "Truth Seeker" has been published quarterly only, but it is now announced that, commencing January, 1906, it will be published monthly. It is offered at the very low price of one shilling six pence per annum, post paid to any address. Prominent among the articles in this current number is "The Mission of Spiritualism," by Mrs. L. A. Griffin; "Balmy Believers," by Ernest Pack; "The Bible Against Itself," by J. D. Shaw; "Egos Vivisected While You Wait," by Malfew Seklew. Under the head of "Books Received" we find notices of two pamphlets published at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, as follows:

"Social Freedom, by Hulda L. Potter Loomis. The author states that she sends forth her message into the great sad world like 'the dove' sent from 'the ark,' bearing its 'olive branch' of Peace and Love, hoping that when 'the great flood' of strife, hatred and turmoil, engendered in the heart of humanity by ages of false teaching, has subsided a little it may find a resting place, and be the means of helping to create a better understanding of our human relations in the minds of men and women.

The sentence occupying this space in the first edition of this number was declared by the postal censorship to be unmailable.

The book is published by Moses Harman, price 1-6, and sold by Truth Seeker Co., 2 Union street, Bradford.

"Sex Radicalism: As Seen by an Emancipated Woman of the New Time. By Dora Forster. The mistake of Christendom, above all other mistakes, is its failure to give a rational education to children in regard to sex. And growing out of this fundamental mistake the crime of Christendom, above all its other crimes, is its treatment of womanhood and motherhood in the sex-relation. Out of this mistake of mistakes, out of this crime of crimes, more than from any other cause or causes, have grown up the inequalities, the despotisms, the slaveries that now curse all the nations of the world calling themselves Christians. It is with the hope of adding a little to the fund of knowledge of sex—which 'lies at the root of life'—that the book, Sex Radicalism, has been written."—From the preface.]

"The sale of this book has been stopped in America, and our old and esteemed friend Moses Harman has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment for sending it through the mails. He is appealing to a higher court, and at the second trial it is hoped he will receive the common justice which has been denied him at the first trial. The boasted freedom of America seems to have evolved into all boast and no freedom. Anyway, we recommend the book, and we sell it, the price is 2-6 post free. Orders to J. W. Gott, 10 St. James' Hall, Manchester."

A word of explanation just here: Brother Gott is quite correct in saying that Lucifer's editor is now under sentence of one year in state prison, and that he is "appealing to a higher court," but the alleged cause of the prosecution and sentence is not the publication of the booklet called "Sex Radicalism." A chapter of that booklet was pointed out by the prosecuter as one of the causes of complaint, but when the said editor was put upon trial in the Federal court in Chicago, the Forster article seems to have been withdrawn and another, called "The Fatherhood Question," substituted in its place.

For more than a year past the Bradford "Truth Seeker" has been supplied from this office to our readers at 5 cents per copy or yearly at 25 cents. We have now a good stock on hand of the closing number for this current year, also of two earlier issues, which will be sent on application while the supply lasts.

Another of our British exchanges is the London "Freethinker," edited by G. W. Foote. The Freethinker is a sixteen page weekly magazine, price two pence each number, or ten shillings six pence per annum. It is very ably edited; now in its twenty-sixth volume; well printed on superior paper. The leading editorial in the number for October 8 is entitled "Voltaire and the Venus of Milo." Mr. Foote attended the late "International Congress of Freethinkers" at Paris, hence it was natural that he should want to visit the house in which Voltaire—that grand old pioneer of modern Freethought—passed away, on the thirtieth of May, 1778, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Alluding to Voltaire's great age, Mr. Foote has this to say:

"That he lived so long is a disproof of all the pious stories about his profligate life. He was so delicate in childhood that he was not expected to live to be a man. His lasting for more than four-fifths of a century shows how carefully he must have preserved his strength. And this reflection is strengthened by the knowledge we possess of his laborious and indefatigable career. He was one of those who might wear out but never rust out. He was ever a worker. Probably he filled more pages than any other writer in the world, yet every page is valuable, and is always more or less illuminated by his sleepless wit. How could such a man have dissipated his energy in disorderly living? Everyone with a grain of sense and candor will know how to answer this question."

Speaking of the statue known as the "Venus of Milo," the pride of the Louvre—one of the greatest of all collections of art treasures, the editor adds:

"Hundreds of years before the Christian era some unknown great artist chiseled that wonderful figure. Our Lady of Beauty, the goddess of the best and highest as well as the deepest in man, still stands there as Heine saw her, in nude perfection. Ravishing loveliness rounds every limb and each delightful breast, and quivers on the tender lips and exquisite chin; but divine chastity sits upon the noble brows, and subdues desire into reverence. Here is the eternal feminine that, as Goethe said, has led man on. And this beautiful and splendid dream in marble gladdened men's eyes, and thrilled men's hearts, and inspired men's minds, hundreds of years before Christ, a thousand years before the advent of the Madonna."

Judging from Editor Foote's description of "The Venus of Milo," there would be little chance, if transferred to New York city, that it would be allowed an undraped public exhibition.

Other British exchanges will perhaps receive brief notice in the near future.

LETTERS TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

A few more of the many samples of letters sent by our subscribers to the head servant of the people of the United States:

Theo. Roosevelt, President U. S. A.—Dear Sir: I subscribe for a paper named LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, published at Chicago, Ill. In the last six months I have missed five papers, stopped by the postmaster at Chicago. I pay for the paper in advance. When it is deposited in the postoffice and the postage paid it becomes my property. Now, I would like to know what right the postmaster has to confiscate my property. Your attention to the above would greatly oblige,

Yours, S. ROSEN, Maysville, Ky.

Theodore Roosevelt.—Fellow Citizen: Owing to the fact that the old king-power was vested in the presidential chair to a large extent when our political government was formed, during the famous "secret session," when Uncle Sam was born of the unholy union of Johnny Bull and the spirit of the Spanish Inquisition (the orthodox church), I, a disfranchised citizen, who under a just government would have equal rights of franchise with the masculine powers, am asked to add my voice to a chorus of voices in prayer to you not to imprison Moses Harman, an old gentleman, philanthropist and scientist, of 500 Fulton street, Chicago, for certain work along a scientific line in which I am deeply interested.

This man has been one of the finest assistants to me in the study of divinity, or the love-life, which will rule society when science is relieved from persecution by CRAFTS (the unholy twins before named). I do not wish him again imprisoned for teaching the science that I am going to teach the rest of my life, to men, women and children, and—all lovers of health, life and happiness.

Under separate cover I am sending to you another personal letter, called "Aunt Helen's Love Letter to Deviltry."

Neither the letter nor this can rightly be called a prayer. In both I simply WARN you that if you wish to insure the breaking of the lines of deviltry IN A HURRY, why, take no note of these various appeals to interfere in the case of Moses Harman.

Woman has prayed while man has preyed, quite long enough. She sees now how she can be in a position to COMMAND.

I close with a repetition of the warning: Let the proceedings go on, and you will HASTEN THE FEMININE REBELLION.

Yours very truly, HELEN HOWARD PHILBRICK,
Forsythe, Montana.

Dear President Roosevelt: I must direct your attention to the flagrant absurdity, not to speak of the unconstitutionality of the action of the postoffice authorities, in holding up copies of LUCIFER, a paper issued by Mr. Moses Harman, of Chicago. Mr. Harman himself has been indicted for publishing "obscene" matter. The legal adviser to the postoffice has laid down that all discussion of the relations of the sexes is "obscene." In that case your own letters and utterances respecting "race suicide" are "obscene."

I may remind you that the first amendment to the constitution of the United States enacts that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." By what legal right, then, is Mr. Harman prosecuted? and why are copies of his paper suppressed? Is this not a revival of the "star chamber" in America? Are you as president of this Republic and as an American citizen going to let this pass without rebuke? I hope not. Yours respectfully,

D. W. HARRIMAN,
St. Louis, Mo., General Delivery.

Theodore Roosevelt.—DEAR SIR: Being a subscriber of LUCIFER, a fortnightly paper published by Moses Harman at 509 Fulton street, Chicago, and having during the last few months failed to receive several of the numbers, for which I have paid, on account of certain irregular and high handed actions of the postal authorities, I wish to call your attention to said irregularities. These actions of the postal authorities may be legal, and if they are, it is evident that certain laws must be amended or abolished, but it is certain that they are in opposition to the progress and civilization of our age and against the best of American traditions. When you shall know that Mr. Harman and all the subscribers of LUCIFER have been deprived of their property without such forms and processes as are ordinarily thrown round the rights of our citizens in order to safeguard them against malevolent or arbitrary interference by officials or others, then I am sure you will feel as indignant over it as I do.

Hoping that it is only necessary to call your attention to this matter to get the depredations on our mail stopped and an adequate restitution made to Mr. Harman financially and otherwise, I am,
Very sincerely yours,

A. E. ELLIS,
Mechanical and Electrical Engineer, Boston, Mass.

[First printed in the "Demonstrator," Lake Bay, Wash.]

No. 711 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal., Monday, October 23, 1905.—To the President—SIR: I protest against the holdup of LUCIFER of October 12, 1905. This makes the fifth practical confiscation of my paper in five months. I cannot believe that your censor has stopped this last issue on account of the sensible articles on the all-important sex question. Surely the censor, if this was the reason, must think that we are still in the nursery; if he takes this view the nursery, with its pap, etc., is undoubtedly the right place for him. This issue has probably been suppressed, as far as you can, because of its exposure of the postoffice department, the "graft" of the rent of mail cars, etc. This mail-car business, and not the female question, is my solution of this Russianism. You are traveling the old Roman road at a great pace.

Bernard Shaw's letter in this issue, perhaps, also hurt the pride of Comstock. Shaw is so matter of fact as to the kind of freedom that is screeched by the American eagle—same governmental symbol as the Roman and Russian—a bird of prey.

J. A. KINGSBORN JONES,
The father of ten very live children.

LUCIFER'S HELPERS.

In this list are included the names of those who send money or stamps to pay for LUCIFER or its pamphlets to be sent to friends who are not now subscribers; also the names of those who contribute to the fund for legal defense in the courts, and to keep LUCIFER'S flag afloat while prosecuted for alleged "obscenity." If any names have been omitted that should have been included in this list, or, if included, incorrectly credited, the error will be gladly corrected when our attention is called thereto.

Some have sent money direct to the treasurer of the Free Speech League, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, from whom we have not yet had a full report. Others have sent a few stamps, five or ten cents at a time, of which no account is taken in these public credits.

BERNARR M'FADDEN ARRESTED.

"Physical Culture" for November contains this notice of the arrest of its editor:

"Mr. Anthony Comstock, prize prude of the country, secured a warrant for the arrest of the editor of this magazine because of the latter's connection with the putting out of posters advertising the recent Physical Culture Exhibition. Two magistrates to whom Comstock applied for a warrant absolutely refused to listen to him, and it was only after the third attempt that he was successful.

"We have watched Mr. Comstock's work in numerous instances, and though in some rare cases he might have been commended, yet on the majority of occasions he was seriously or ludicrously at fault.

"His attitude toward the human body shows very clearly the condition of his mind. To him a beautiful statue of marble or a perfectly formed body of flesh—the crowning effort of the Creator—has all the vulgar and nasty attributes that the human mind can possibly conceive. We sincerely pity him for his unhappy perversion of taste and instinct. From the standpoint of the physical culturist he is a monstrosity and has no place in an era when the beauty and nobility and holiness of the human body are beginning to be recognized by the world at large.

"The arrest of the editor of this magazine occurred just as we were going to press, but our next issue will contain full details of the outrage.

"In the meantime, we would suggest to Mr. Comstock that he secure a Supreme Court injunction against the Almighty to prevent the latter from permitting children to be born without clothing."

Brother McFadden is learning by dear experience that no man can safely be trusted with powers such as Anthony Comstock exercises over his fellow human beings. The "cases" in which Comstock "might have been commended" only serve to show how easily such powers could be perverted to improper uses. Now that McFadden himself is the victim he will probably be prepared to join with others in the demand that the office of censor of press, of mails, of literature and of art, be entirely abolished, as survivals of the "Middle Ages" Inquisition, that tortured, imprisoned, hanged and burned those who differed in opinion from the officers of that Inquisition.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

PAUL ROBIN (Editor "Regeneration"), Paris, France.—Friends and myself beg to send to you one dollar and a few stamps we have left—too small a contribution—for your defense against Comstockian hypocrisy. We send also a few cents to the fund for Voltarine de Cleyre, martyr of madness and stupidity.

A. L. S., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—I received the sample copy of LUCIFER which you sent me and like it very much. I feel sure there was never anything in your paper that the postal authorities need to concern themselves about. I inclose 20 cents for more copies.

J. E. WITMAN, Hazleton, Pa.—Words fail me when I try to express my indignation at the manner in which the postal authorities are using you, yet better things are hardly to be expected under existing conditions. My protest goes to President Roosevelt today. With best wishes. Enclosed is $5 for books, subscription and defense fund.

S. GELUB, No. Andover, Mass.—Am sorry to learn that the postal inquisitors are continuing their work of selecting what the citizens of the United States can read and what they cannot. I want to receive LUCIFER even though the postal censors do not intend to allow me to do so, and would gladly pay two dollars a year as long as necessary, instead of one, as at present.

D. WEBSTER GROH, Hagerstown, Md.—Because the corrupt politicians who run our government or state abuse their power, of which they already have too much, I heartily oppose such unlimited increase thereof as socialism proposes, by politician ownership (government ownership) of everything, which would indeed make us the veriest slaves to the politicians that the world ever saw. The more government owns the less there is left for individuals to own, and we would be poor indeed under socialism. "What is everybody's business is nobody's business" is a very true saying and applies equally to property. Soon neither the states nor we would have any property, as no man would care to produce what he could not own or receive an equivalent for. Every man should be responsible for his own acts—his own children—their food, clothing, shelter and education; and to shift his responsibilities in these matters on those who are not responsible therefor is unjust and immoral, and the law is right in so far as it fixes this responsibility, and wrong in so far as it fails to do so. Yours for equal rights,

J. S. STRAKER (Capt., Crepping Hall, Wakes' Corner, Essex, England.—I sent ten shillings ($2.40) to you towards the cost of the proposed appeal. As an English lawyer I hope the case will be dealt with suitably, and as a student of some of the subjects most directly affecting the welfare of races and individuals I hope a ruling will be obtained that will be fair to the individual and beneficial to the state.

RYAN WALKER, New York City.—Your letter, forwarded to me from Baltimore, received. I am heartily in sympathy with you, and deplore this Russian tyranny of officials in this country. The censorship of LUCIFER and the suppression of "Mrs. Warren's Profession" here only gives us an idea of what is coming, unless we battle for the rights of all and not of a few. I will send you a contribution next week.

A. J. KRAFT, Grantfork, Ill.—Received your sample copy of LUCIFER and enjoyed reading it very much; and coming to the conclusion that LUCIFER should be sustained, I herewith send you a dollar for one year's subscription. Keep the torch of reason as high as possible, that it may enlighten humanity and brave the storms, and victory is bound to be the outcome. Hoping and wishing that you may live a long and happy life, I remain, Yours truly.

J. W. DAUGHERTY, Hitchcock, S. D.—I enclose $1 to apply on my subscription to LUCIFER. I feel that the principles of law and justice have been violated by the postal authorities that are persecuting you. But they have to make a pretense of earning their salaries. My rights as well as yours are invaded when they stop a paper I have paid for. Fight it to the end. History tells us that the greatest results of martyrs' lives come after their deaths.

MRS. S. H., Beaver Falls, Pa.—Please send me one copy of "Thoughts of a Fool," for enclosed $1. I am very indignant at the treatment you are receiving for standing up and fighting for my downtrodden sex, although I luckily don't happen to be one of the oppressed in the general sense of the word, but I am not blind to the conditions of others less luckily situated. I wish I had the means to express my sympathy in at least a monetary way.

DR. S. A. WEST, Rock Port, Mo.—My beloved Brother: Your letter of the 3rd has been with me since that time. Yes, I received the medallion in good order. It is splendid work and I have given it a good place in my study. The idea of writing President Roosevelt is, I think, a good one. If ALL would take the hint, it would draw like a magnet! Your word on the manner of approaching the president is good, too. I put you on the back for thus speaking out boldly. Only good can possibly come out of all this fight!

L. H. ANDERSON, Chicago.—Your favor saying copies of "Hilda's Home" had been sent to addresses sent you received. The absurd objections which the postoffice departments raise would be laughable were it not so serious a matter. I really think the most objectionable feature to them is "Moses Harman" and their inability to crush him. "Right is Might." "Truth is mighty and will prevail." I hope that you can soon reap the fruits of your earnest toil. * * * Enclosed find $ .00, for which you will please send, at your earliest convenience, one copy of "Hilda's Home," in cloth, to each of the following addresses.

MRS. F. M. B. MORSE, Berkeley, Cal.—I believe there are lots of people that believe as you do, but who, for reasons of their own, keep still about it. (The sentences occupying this space in the first edition of this number were declared by the postal censorship to be unmailable.) It seems to me that if a letter could be written by some one and sent around in each community where LUCIFER circulates, protesting to President Roosevelt, every one that believed in the paper would sign it. Many persons would sign the letter that would not write. I would gladly do so. Inclosed is $1 to help the cause.

JON THOUNSON, Healdsburg, Cal.—I subscribe to many papers and am doing what I can along many lines of reform, so you see I am not in a position to do much for any particular cause. I firmly believe, though, that you are at the basic principle on which depends the future weal or woe of the race, and how any sane man or woman can offer such opposition to so rational a theory is more than I can understand. I object to the word theory—having used it inadvertently—for it is no more a theory than is the law of gravitation, nor is certain in its general results, though individual cases may diverge from the regular course taken by the majority.

KATE A. UNTHANK, Lawrence, Kas.—I think Comrade Oliver A. Verity and C. L. James, in LUCIFER of November 9, have struck the key note for action. Whether the first suit could be won or not, possibly the second or third might be, and they would have the effect of holding up this hypocritical government as the laughingstock of the world—not excluding Russia, now that she is granted free speech and press. Such a showing would result in much good. I, for one, would be proud of the honor of assisting to the amount of a few dollars, and more if possible, if the right parties could be prosecuted. Inclosed find $1 for your defense fund and 50 cents for a book. Hoping for and believing in the better outcome for yourself and the cause, I am most sincerely yours for truth and freedom.

GEO. E. LAURY, St. Louis, Mo.—Please send me: One Thoughts of a Fool," $1; one year's subscription to LUCIFER, $1; one year's subscription to "Truth Seeker" (Bradford, Eng.), $1; one "Creative Life," 25 cents; one "Strike of a Sex," 25 cents; one "Origin of the Family, Private Property and the States," 60 cents; one "Bible Temperance," 40 cents; one "Right Generation," 50 cents. * * * Enclosed please find $5. With best wishes.

[The price of the Bradford Truthseeker is 35 cents per year, monthly—not $1. "Bible Temperance" is 20 cents each, not 40 cents.—M. H.]

W. L. LIGHTHOWN, Washington, D. C.—I have recently seen your paper, LUCIFER, and I want to tell you that it is just what I like and admire. I have always been interested in the subjects you treat of and fully appreciate their value, and I am doing some propaganda work in a small way along those lines. I shall be glad to have your paper, so am enclosing $2 for myself and another whom I persuaded to subscribe for it. I wish I could give you some material help besides in your battle for a free press. I take an advanced position on the subject of marriage and relations of the sexes, and particularly as to the rights of children to be well born. Can you assist me in becoming acquainted with others who hold like views? I feel that we should get together to accomplish the most good.

W. W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I enclose herewith a copy of a letter that I sent to President Roosevelt, and the reply received therefrom. I did my best to make a presentable letter so that he might take notice of it, but do you think for one moment that President Roosevelt ever saw that letter? I don't. I don't believe the politicians ever permitted that letter to reach his sight. You see what the reply says: "That my letter was referred to the Postal Department. Now, isn't that a sensible thing to do? The very department complained of is allowed to make its own investigation. Is it to be supposed for one minute that that department is going to find any of its members guilty? Not by a —— sight. Now the question that one of your correspondents wrote, viz., "What can be done?" continually forces itself into my mind, and I echo, What can be done? What can be done? Doesn't it seem awful to think that the sensible class must submit to the injustice heaped upon them by a lot of fanatics? I don't see how you are able to hold out against your persecution; you are a wonder. I feel in my heart an admiration I can't express for those who revolt against the tyranny of their oppressors.

BANKE DIHAR, Lucknow, India.—Your latest pamphlet contains much sensible advice. Such a book, however, seems incomplete without a chapter on the limitation of the number of offspring. Perhaps such a discussion is tabooed in the United States. But you do not mention anything even about the practice of "Zugassant's Discovery." Do you consider it objectionable, and hence have not given it a place in your book? I cannot help laughing at the curious pronunciamento of the law as given in LUCIFER, that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and so unmailable." I do not believe that the laws of the United States would be so opposed to the ordinary rules of justice, equity and good conscience as to admit of this interpretation.

[We advertise and sell "Zugassent's Discovery." It is part of the book called "Strike of a Sex," written by Geo. N. Miller. It has had a very wide circulation in this country and in Europe. The statement that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and unmailable" is now denied by the official to whom it was attributed, but the rulings against the six condemned editions of LUCIFER leave one in doubt as to what will be held to be mailable by the postal department and what unmailable.—M. H.]

Albina L. Washburn, "Cooperative Exchange," San Diego, Calif.—If I have time will write a short letter to President Roosevelt, but would rather write a loving letter to your post office man at Chicago, if I knew his specific address. . . . . You are always asking for advice—a thing I cannot do, for no one knows for us! I have such confidence in your own judgment if you would only use it fearlessly—as the inner voice—that I cannot but regret your want of courage in that respect. . . . . After all you are depending on dollars to right and justify your course. They never will! . . . . If you were Mr. Jones, I would say: "Mr. Jones, please go on with what you were doing—teaching the people how to live. Quit scolding about what the other fellows are doing. Have too much pride, dignity and self-respect to intimate that it makes any difference to you. Be optimistic, humorous if you can, but never seriously admit that LUCIFER'S cause or work can be hurt by mud-slinging, nor even by robbery. . . . . Mr. Jones, you might even give LUCIFER and yourself a cheerful vacation for awhile, until the matter "blows over." Concentrate on something else as foreign to it as possible; then come back with calm nerves and better health."

Mr. Jones might tell me contemptuously: "You do not know it all yet," which would be as "thrue a wurrud as iver was shpoke."

As to a letter to Mr. Roosevelt, while I think he is developing rapidly to be an independent people's president, how about the "one man power" we have always decried? And where is the consistency, dignity or justice in addressing him personally in behalf of a publication which in a recent issue says editorially, under the head, "Don't Indict the Corporations": "When Theodore Roosevelt demands that the corporation be indicted and that the officials go free, is it not because he knows that he himself is at the head of the most criminal of all the corporations, the United States government itself?—and that if its officials were indicted for their crimes against the common citizen he himself would have to meet criminal charges more numerous than any other man, perhaps, now living on the American continent?"

[The only comment I have to make upon the kindly meant criticism of our old-time friend and helper is that if Theodore Roosevelt is developing rapidly to be an independent people's president he will welcome all candidly expressed opinions, whether favorable or unfavorable to himself. Only cowardly despots are offended by plainly worded criticisms. If he is not a despot he will at once investigate the many charges made against his subordinates in the post office and other departments of the national government, and if he finds these charges to be true he will lose no time in correcting the abuses and in doing what he can to recompense the innocent sufferers from these abuses. M. H.]

A SUGGESTION.

Publisher of LUCIFER: Now that the "ball is open" in way of letter writing to the president, let me suggest that subscribers write to their representatives in congress, asking for the repeal or modification of what is known as the Comstock law. Let Mr. Harman give the proper name and number of this law, so it can be referred to by writers understandingly. Yours for truth and freedom. SUBSCRIBER.

THE FENCE OR THE AMBULANCE.

'Twas a dangerous cliff, as they freely confessed,
Though to walk near its crest was so pleasant;
But over its terrible edge there had slipped
A duke and full many a peasant.
So the people said something would have to be done,
But their projects did not at all tally.
Some, "Put a fence around the edge of the cliff,"
Some, "An ambulance down in the valley."

But the cry for the ambulance carried the day,
And it spread through the neighboring city;
A fence may be useful or not, it is true,
But much heart became brimful of pity
For those who slipped over that dangerous cliff,
And the dwellers in highway and alley
Gave pounds or gave pence, not to put up a fence,
But an ambulance down in the valley.

Then an old sage remarked: "It's a marvel to me
That people give far more attention
To repairing results than to stopping the cause,
When they'd better aim at prevention.
Let us stop at its source all this mischief," cried he,
"Come neighbors and friends, let us rally;
If the cliff we will fence, we might almost dispense
With the ambulance down in the valley.

"Oh, he's a fanatic," the others rejoined;
"Dispense with the ambulance? Never!
He'd dispense with all charities, too; if he could.
No, no, we'll support them forever!
Aren't we picking up folks just as fast as they fall?
And shall this man dictate to us? Shall he?
Why should people of sense stop to put up a fence,
While the ambulance works in the valley?"

—JOSEPH MALINS.

Better generate well than reclaim them when sick—
For the gist of this matter is seeing
That to rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To hinder such people from being.
Better close up the source that generates crime
Than deliver from dungeon or galley;
Better put a stout fence round the edge of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley.

BERNARD SHAW IN SELF-DEFENSE.

For two months or more, and to an extent almost if not quite unprecedented, the great metropolitan dailies of two hemispheres have given publicity to a controversy over the books and plays of George Bernard Shaw, the distinguishing feature of which books and plays seems to be that they depict human life in the great cities as it is really lived.

The fame of another London playwright, one William Shakespeare, rests chiefly on the fact that he painted human life so well that his stage characters seem even more real to us than the women and men of flesh and blood we meet every day.

Is not this the true explanation of the extraordinary prominence lately given to Bernard Shaw, his "Superman" and his "Mrs. Warren's Profession"?

Out of the great mass of "interviews" and "criticisms" given to the sensation-hunting public, in regard to this matter, within the past few weeks I select two articles, one from the Chicago "Record-Herald," and one from the New York "Sun." Lack of space prevents "display" of head-lines to correspond with the original presentation in these dailies, but the essential points of these head-lines are given herewith as printed in the metropolitan dailies:

SHAW IN MARTYR ROLE.

English Playwright Airs Indignation at Suppression of His Drama. Rails at "Comstockery."

Author of "Mrs. Warren" Threatens to Shock New York Censor Out of His Wits.

[Special Cable Dispatch to the Chicago Record-Herald.]

[Copyright, 1905, by New York Herald Company.]

London, Nov. 6.—The Morning Leader will publish tomorrow an article by Bernard Shaw in defense of his play, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," in the course of which he says:

"There is no side issue in 'Mrs. Warren's Profession.' There is the direct and inevitable consequence of the relations between parties, which is not shirked, and which, if it were shirked, would leave the play open to the charge of being an advertisement of the advantages of a disreputable life. In the play Mrs. Warren is pictured as sober, greedy, hard working and pursuing her trade with plenty of business ability and consequent commercial success.

HIT OR MISTORY GIVES.

The interference of American police has an instructive history. Some time ago an unfortunate editor published an article in America in which the marital relations were broadly handled. For this offense against decency he suffered the prompt confiscation of his paper and a severe sentence of imprisonment, and his case was a by no means isolated one.

"He appealed to me to help him draw attention to the infamy of his treatment. I of course could do nothing, but I bided my time, and when the terror established by Anthony Comstock, secretary of vice, but it is a society of persons who call public attention to their own purity and to other people's impurity—when this terror frightened the Manhattan public libraries into placing a restriction on the distribution of my book, I succeeded in compelling them to withdraw the restriction by mentioning the case I have described and adding that Mr. Comstock was making America ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

PUTS BLAME ON COMSTOCK.

"I used the term 'Comstockery' to describe the white terror, and the word struck the fancy of New York. It laughed, and Comstock was furious, declaring that my works were immoral; that he would set the law in motion against me; that he had never heard of me nor read my works, but would now do so in search of something to prosecute me for.

"He has certainly been as good as his word. With the municipal elections at hand and Tammany eager for suffrages of the pure, he has had no difficulty in persuading the commissioner of police to raise the white flag by prosecuting not 'Mrs. Warren' and 'Sir George Crofts,' but my attempt to throw some light into the dark places whence they draw their profits.

"The public has nothing to do with the attack. It supports Comstock generally, because he has destroyed ninety-three tons of post cards in his lifetime as indecent, and it believes that most of the publications he suppresses are noxious rubbish and no good to anyone, but when it comes to imprisoning and ruining men for trying to protect women from reckless conjugal behavior and setting up a censorship of literature, by a private official of obviously limited literary intelligence, whose life has been spent in hunting out obscenities, I have protested, and Comstock has declared his intention of suppressing me. He had better, for if he does not, I am afraid I shall end by shocking him out of his wits."

SHAW PROUD OF HIS PLAY.

Police Not Protecting Public Morality in Suppressing "Mrs. Warren," He Says.

[Special Cable Dispatch to The Sun.]

London, Oct. 21.—The correspondent of The Sun today interviewed George Bernard Shaw in reference to the suppression by the New York police of his play "Mrs. Warren's Profession." Mr. Shaw said:

"If Police Commissioner McAdoo has earned by his public services the confidence of the American people as a man of higher character and deeper insight into social needs, moral problems and greater concern for the good of the community than I, it is not for me to question his qualifications or to incite Mr. Daly to resist his authority. I have a certain reputation in the world, which will not be altered by Mr. McAdoo's conviction that I am a blackguard. The New York police have a certain reputation in the world, and that also will not be altered by my conviction. I know my own business better than they do.

"In the opinion of the police prostitution is a permissible subject on the stage only when it is made agreeable. In my opinion the numerous plays in which it is made agreeable should be counterbalanced by plays in which its sordid cause is exposed.

"I am extremely proud of having written the play. It has made me more friends than any other work of mine, especially among serious women. It will make me friends of the same stamp in America, and these friends will keep steadily pressing the two questions: Are the facts exposed in 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' denied? If not, in whose interests are they suppressed?

"It will be seen more and more clearly that the police, doubtless with the best intentions, are protecting not public morality but the interests of the most dangerous class, namely, the employers who pay women less than subsistence wages and overwork them mercilessly to grind profits for themselves out of the pith of the nation. Naturally they raise the clamor of immorality and disgusting dialogue, but in the end the public conscience of America, at present a hasty, unintelligent and easily duped force, will get educated and go over them like a steam roller, with an effective factory code stated by the way.

"Mr. Daly offered to abide by the verdict of the New York press. If this is true, he must have forgotten that the New York press does not go to the theatre. It only sends critics. Let the editors come and the verdict proposed by Mr. Daly will be possible, but if social and moral questions are left to the critics they will not improve on Mr. McAdoo, who probably knows the real world much better than they. For my own part, I would prefer a jury of public spirited women with experience in rescue work and slum life to any other jury whatever. They know how society makes vice by refusing to pay virtue decently."

From these clippings it would appear that Mr. Shaw's offense is substantially the same as that of LUCIFER'S editor—for which offense said editor is now a prisoner under sentence of one year at hard labor in the Illinois penitentiary. This offense is neither more nor less than TELLING TOO MUCH TRUTH to suit the ears and the eyes of the censors of morals in this country and in England. Hence it is not strange that Bernard Shaw should express a sympathetic interest, a fraternal interest, in the case of an "unfortunate editor who published an article in America in which the marital relations were broadly handled," and for which offense "he suffered the prompt confiscation of his paper and a severe sentence of imprisonment." While it is not quite correct, by the way, to say that I "appealed" to Mr. Shaw to "help call attention to the infamy of the treatment" I was, and still am, receiving, it is true that one or more of LUCIFER'S friends on this side the Atlantic did call Mr. Shaw's attention to this outrage and asked him to lend the power of his pen to help get the facts of this Chicago persecution before liberty-lovers everywhere who read and speak the English language.

LUCIFER'S friends and helpers, as well as its editor, owe a debt of gratitude to Bernard Shaw for what he has done and is doing to help onward the work of creating a public sentiment, a public conscience, that will soon demand the repeal, or the ignoring, of the medieval laws that now enable such men as Anthony Comstock to hold up and hold back the car of human progress by making it dangerous for all who would tell the truth, the whole truth, about the "marital relations," the conventional, the "sacramental" marriage system, now enforced in all lands called Christian.

Much more I would like to say in comment upon these noble utterances of Bernard Shaw, but for lack of space will close by saying that the last few lines quoted from him deserve special attention and consideration. Whose fault is it that Mr. Shaw cannot have a "jury of public-spirited women" to decide the question as to whether his plays should be enacted before a mixed audience of women, men and children?

Is it not the fault of women themselves?

If women should do as men have done, not wait to have somebody to grant them political or civil rights, but proceed to take them —if they would say to their husbands, fathers, brothers and sons,

"No more children!—no more 'marital rights,' till woman's political and civil equality with man is recognized and practicalized" —if women in general, or if only a respectable minority of women were seriously to take this stand, how long, think you, would Bernard Shaw be compelled to plead in vain for a "jury of women" to decide upon the morality or immorality of his plays? M. HARMAN.

Marriage is the only legal contract which abrogates as between the parties all the laws that safeguard the particular relation to which it refers.—G. B. Shaw.

DESPOTISM MADE POSSIBLE THROUGH "FRAUD ORDER."

Very few people in the country are aware of the fact that on September 19, 1890, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled enacted a law (under pretense of revising certain statutes relating to lotteries) which makes it possible for the postmaster general to deprive any person of his or her right to the use of the United States mails, regardless of the fact that they have in no way been guilty of fraud or other violation of the law, and that they have complied with all known postal regulations.

Those who do know of the existence of this law are not all offenders against it, as might generally be supposed. There are many instances known to the writer where letters of a purely personal nature have been withheld from the person to whom they were addressed, simply because that person had been accused of fraudulent use of the mails, although the accusation was not substantiated by the facts in the case, and the person accused was not in prison or even "out on bail."

In the case of Helen Wilmans-Post, of Seabreeze, Florida, the postoffice authorities withheld her mail from her for more than two years while they vainly tried to find any of her patients—whom she had treated according to the methods of mental scientists—who would testify that they had been in any way defrauded by her. Had they found such a patient, one who would have offered such testimony, the United States government would have used it against Mrs. Post, but at the same time they refused to permit her to introduce the testimony of any one of the thousands of patients whom she had benefitted by her advice and treatment, although any number of them volunteered to give their testimony in her defense.

Such injustice and such outrage upon the rights of any individual should have brought forth a vigorous protest from every fair-minded person in the country. That it did not do so may be attributed to the fact that the daily papers and the magazines, either through indifference or ignorance of the real facts in the case, maintained absolute silence, and the general public were therefore uninformed.

The writer of this article was ignorant of the significance and far-reaching power of the law above referred to until in July, 1903, having occasion to address a personal letter to Mrs. Post, editor of "Freedom," Seabreeze, Fla., she was surprised a few days later to have her letter returned to her marked "Fraudulent," and further inscribed "Return to writer."

Knowing that my letter was not fraudulent in itself, and did not relate in any way to any fraudulent business, and also that I had complied with all postal regulations, I enclosed the letter to Mrs. Post in another envelope addressed to the postmaster at Seabreeze, Fla., with a written demand for its delivery to the person to whom it was addressed. It was again returned to me with the statement that the P. M. was acting under instructions from Washington and could consider no others. I then addressed a letter to President Roosevelt stating all the facts in the case, and one also to the postmaster general, asking by what authority my rights as a citizen of this country were so interfered with. The answer came back that the postmaster general acted in accordance with the power conferred upon him by the United States congress.

I then sent for a copy of the law which conferred such extraordinary power upon the head of the postal department, and while the text of it is too long to give in its entirety I will quote one section from it in order that readers of LUCIFER may know that so long as that law remains upon the statute books we may expect nothing but injustice and abuse from the postal officials either at Washington or elsewhere. If any one desires the full text of this bill they can receive the same by sending a request for a copy to C. H. Robb, assistant attorney general for the Postoffice Department at Washington.

The bill is entitled "United States statutes having reference to the transmission through the mails of matter relating to lotteries, schemes to defraud, and schemes or devices for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises."

"An Act to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to lotteries, and for other purposes. (Act of September 19, 1890.)

"Sec. 2. That section thirty-nine hundred and twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3929. The postmaster general may upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money or of any real or personal property by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, or that any person or company is conducting any other scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, instruct postmasters at any postoffice at which registered letters arrive directed to any such person or company, or to the agent or representative of any such person or company, whether such agent or representative is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, to return all such registered letters to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed, with the word "Fraudulent" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the writers thereof, under such regulations as the postmaster general may prescribe. But nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself.

The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme, or device, that remittances for the same may be made by registered letters to any other person, firm, bank, corporation or association named therein shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of such agency by all the parties named therein; but the postmaster general shall not be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way satisfactory to himself."

There are two things which cannot fail to impress the thinking mind as the full significance of this law is comprehended. The first, is the unlimited authority it places at the disposal of the postmaster general, and the second is the omission of any clause relating to the reimbursement of the people for the money paid in postage, accepted by the government for the delivery of mail matter which it afterwards refuses to deliver to the person to whom it is addressed. It is surely a strange omission that some such provision was not made, since by not doing so, our legislators have placed the United States government in the peculiar position of "obtaining money under false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises."

It is worse even than that, for whatever may be said of the individuals who offer inducements to simple minded people to voluntarily part with their money for gold bricks, lottery tickets, real estate, mining stock, masses for the dead or any other scheme of that nature, what shall we say when our government engages in the "hold-up" business in the manner we have described, for even if the postoffice authorities return our letters, they have performed an act that can only be likened to the "hold-up" man who returns our pocketbook after relieving us of the money there was in it.

Meeting with so little serious objection or protest from the people in the pursuit of this game, what could we expect but that they would go still further and confiscate and destroy the property of citizens as they have confiscated and destroyed so many editions of LUCIFER that the subscribers have paid for, and the editor has prepaid postage upon? Do we ask for redress? There is "no provision" for such, so I am informed by the assistant attorney general of whom I made inquiry.

Well, it is LUCIFER now, but what paper or magazine will be the next to come under the ban remains to be seen. That this despotic law will be used to cripple and destroy others than LUCIFER is not to be doubted for an instant, and we cannot help propounding the question,—Will it be easier to have this atrocious law repealed now in its infancy, or later, after it has become such a power in the hands of despotic officials that it can crush the life out of any paper or magazine whose principles are not in accord with the LACK OF PRINCIPLE in the minds of these same officials?

These are the things we are now to consider seriously, and if the editors of all papers would unite and make LUCIFER'S cause the cause of all, the fight for the freedom of the press would be won in America for all time.

Let us all work to this end.

THE SOCIAL COMRADESHIP OF MEN AND WOMEN.

The social side of the interdependence of men and women, the mutual help and comfort, is placed last in the church statement of what it aims to be attained. But, without any unnecessary discussion of relative importance, it is natural to consider first this social activity of sex because it precedes the others in the lives of all. Beginning with conscious social life, it lasts the whole length of it, and is noticeable in the lives of all the higher animals, in some of whom it is more conspicuous than in man. The high principle of love of our kind is always involved in the best friendships; and where the social ideal is felt as higher than the purely sexual ideal, the love is more intense, and the poet stated a deep truth when he said, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honour more." For the happiness of each as well as all, we must have moral principles—that is, social principles—to which friendship is subservient, however hard Comstock and all his may work to keep from us the knowledge which is the only true ground-work of morality, and to thrust us back into the moral chaos from which society has already suffered so much.

In healthy lives, personal attractions and comradeships come early in youth, and should lay a good foundation in the character for the best love alliances of later life. They seem deep rooted in social instinct, and may be observed even in such comparatively little social animals as cats, among whom the young male especially links himself with an older male companion, and doubtless benefits by association in hunting and in cat proficiency generally.

The pair friendships of youth certainly have a sexual element in them, intensifying as they do at puberty; and, as Emerson says of the attraction of opposite and complementary natures, "sex is not local but universal." These friendships have a refining influence; and only the perversity and vulgarity of puritan minds attribute injurious and coarse expression to these intimacies.

The same beneficent impulse is vaguely recognized in the word chivalry. This is usually referred only to the kindness of men towards women, whereas it is more often exercised in everyday life by women towards men, in whom it seems to blend with maternal feeling. The chivalry of women towards men is perhaps less frequently noticed because it is more usual.

Social comradeship is the main factor in the success of any permanent sexual partnership, and it has often served to shield the failures in other respects of marriage. It is deplorable, however, that often the best conditions of this friendship are neglected when the irrevocable alliance is being contemplated. A difference between the religious or philosophic beliefs of the pair is actually supposed to be a trifling matter. Yet to those who know what a strong bond of feeling mutual aspirations and beliefs hold in common may be, divergence of opinion on large subjects seems a great drawback in any friendship.

And where friendship fails within marriage, it is scarcely to be found outside of it, in puritan society; for the married usually give up all old friendships besides, and their mating is a game of chance to win one friendship or none.

There is a belief still prevalent that any social enjoyment is somewhat wrong for a woman. This was shown in a recent discussion on race "suicide," when an English bishop contributed the suggestion that the selfishness of women in indulging in cycling, horseback riding and hockey was a cause of decrease in the birth rate,—without, of course, adducing any evidence that these physical exercises have actually proved detrimental to maternity. "It is selfishness on her part," he said. "She has a stupid notion that she must be her husband's chum. She cannot be in the sense that she can go in for the same exercise." The bishop's remarks are an example of the lack of wisdom that always accompanies lack of sympathy.

In past ages, it was certainly advantageous to society that the women should be kept strictly to their duty of that time to bear as many children as possible, while the men had to be ready for the violent exercises of hunting and warfare; and men of the savage period no doubt took advantage of the situation to make women do nearly all the rest of the labor. But modern developments have changed all this in advanced countries. In rational lives of love and labor, of both men and women, companionship in moderate muscular exercise, whether in work or play, presents no difficulty, and need only be modified for a few brief periods in the lives of women.

The social rule that there should be no social intimacy between the sexes unless marriage is contemplated is one of the most obvious ways in which the marriage system lowers the moral tone of society. Those who in any way set aside the rule are liable to have their motives misunderstood in a most annoying way; and a young man may even be entrapped by a mercenary parent suddenly demanding "What are your intentions?" The result is that the more refined and honorable often submit to social isolation from the opposite sex.

The greatest of all drawbacks to the happy comradeship of men and women has been the difference in their intellectual and moral education. This unfortunate system of different upbringing is, we may hope, passing away; and a happier generation—and why should it not be the next generation?—of men and women will be taught that next to their duty to society generally as faithful citizens comes the duty of each sex to minister to the highest happiness of the other.

FIDEI DEFENSOR.

HAS AMERICA THE BEST MARRIAGE LAWS?

In No. 1051 W. H. Breese says: "I admit there is plenty to improve in our present legal marriage code, still it is the best the race has so far developed." What constitutes a good marriage code, if such a thing there be, is a matter of opinion, but Mr. Breese approves of "women's equality and freedom," so I presume he would test a marriage code by that standard. Let us apply his test to the facts.

The following is from Kent's "Commentaries on American Law," edition of 1884, Vol. 2, page 181: "As the husband is the guardian of the wife, and bound to protect and maintain her, the law has given him a reasonable superiority and control over her person, and he may even put gentle restraints upon her liberty, if her conduct be such as to require it. * * * If he shifts his domicile, the wife is bound to follow him wherever he chooses to go." I believe there is no doubt that this passage states the law as it stands today in almost, if not quite, every state of the union.

In England a wife can go and live wherever she likes, and the husband has no say in the matter; neither has he the smallest control over her movements. In the case of the Queen versus Jackson, 1891, Lord Esher, who was then considered the ablest judge on the English bench, said: "Under the law of England a man has no more rights over the personal liberty of his wife than over that of any other woman." There is still some doubt as to whether a man has any rights over his wife while she remains voluntarily under his roof, but there is not the slightest doubt that by walking out of the door she can deprive him of all claim to interfere with her.

In some American states the law on the guardianship of children is very advanced, but these are chiefly in the far west. In many of the more populous states the law on this subject is still medieval. From a recent newspaper report I understand that even now a New York woman whose husband is dead has no right to her children if the husband has appointed some other guardian by will. In France for many years a widow has had an absolute right to the custody and control of her children, and all that the husband can do is to appoint an adviser to act with her. In England a similar law has lately been passed.

In almost every state of the union fornication and adultery are crimes. So they were once in England, but that law was repealed by act of Parliament two hundred and forty-five years ago. Today in England a man, married or single, can live in open cohabitation with a hundred women, and a woman, married or single, can live in open cohabitation with a hundred men, and no person can lay a finger on them.

There is one sure way in which any one with a talent for languages can make a fortune. Let him travel over Europe lecturing on the marriage laws of the United States. He would have to be quick, however, for so many people would die of laughing that laws would everywhere be passed to prohibit further allusion to the subject.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

CITIZEN OR SUBJECT—WHICH?

Two articles have been written for this issue of LUCIFER by special request of the editor. To these two articles the careful attention of everyone claiming to be an American citizen, or hoping to become such, is hereby earnestly called.

The first and longer of these articles, that of Hulda L. Potter-Loomis, is written by one who has given more attention than most readers have done, to the comparatively recent encroachments upon the rights of the citizen under the specious plea of protecting the weak and easily-imposed-upon, from the wiles of "confidence" swindlers, lottery-ticket vendors, etc., etc.

In other words, the article was written to show how the postal department of the United States government is now being used to discriminate against and crush the business of those who happen to fall under the displeasure of powerful "vested" interests, such as the "medical" monopoly. The case of Mrs. Wilmans-Post is cited as an example, chiefly because Mrs. Loomis happens to be in possession of some of the facts relating to this outrage, not because there is anything particularly outrageous connected with it. Many other instances involving much greater hardship and suffering than the Wilmans case could be cited showing the working of this the latest, perhaps, of the federal enactments whose purpose seems to be to deprive the citizen of the right to manage his own business in his own way so long as he does not invade the equal right of his neighbor.

The other article to which attention is specially called is one that more nearly concerns the life and work of the publication called LUCIFER—"Son of the Morning." For some weeks, if not months, a number of our friends, notably members of the Free Speech League, have insisted that an action at law should be entered at once, to compel the postmaster at Chicago to admit the current editions of LUCIFER to its equitable share of the United States mail service; also to restrain the postal department at Washington, D. C., from confiscating and destroying such editions of the paper as may fall under the condemnation of the censors.

Having consulted three very reputable legal firms of this city and having received substantially the same answer from all, in regard to what could and what could not be done, I asked Mr. Soelke to write out the opinion of his firm and give it to me for publication. Here is his answer:

STEDMAN & SOELKE, COUNSELLORS AT LAW, 94 LA SALLE STREET.
CHICAGO, Nov. 18, 1905.

MOSES HARMAN, Esq., 500 Fulton Street, City.

DEAR SIR: In the administration by the Postoffice Department of the postal law relating to so-called "obscene" matter, the said Department claims and exercises the right of determining what is and what is not "obscene" and to act directly against such matter by denying it the use of the mails, and, in some instances, by its confiscation and destruction without notice or a hearing before such order is issued.

This law, you claim, is unconstitutional for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it deprives the citizen of his property and liberty without due process of law.

2. Because it abridges the freedom of the press, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

3. Because it confers judicial power on the officials of the post department.

4. Because by the action of that officer, the citizen would be deprived of his property without due process of law.

The Supreme Court of the United States has answered these contentions in the negative.

I am requested by you now to make a terse statement of the reasons advanced by the Supreme Court in support of their decisions. They are as follows, as I understand:

The power conferred on the Postoffice Department by the statute in question is not judicial in its strict sense, but merely involves the exercise of discretion and judgment and where the law authorizes an officer to exercise judgment and discretion, the courts will not entertain an appeal from the decision of such officer, nor revise his judgment in any such case. Nor can it by mandamus act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in matters committed to his care in the discharge of his official duties.

The principal reason urged for this by said court is that under any other rule government would be administered not by the great departments ordained by the Constitution and laws guided by the modes therein described, but by the uncertain and perhaps contradictory action of the courts in the enforcement of their views of private interests. Hence, the court says, the only acts to which the power of the courts by mandamus extends are such as are purely ministerial and with regard to which nothing like judgment and discretion in the performance of his duties is left to the officer, but whenever the right of judgment or discretion exists in him, it is he and not the courts who can regulate its exercise. And with respect to the exercise of this discretion by the head of an executive department, it has even been held that he cannot be held liable to a civil suit for damages on account of his official acts in respect to matters within his authority by reason of any personal or even malicious motive that might be alleged to have prompted him; that it would seriously cripple the proper and effective administration of public affairs as intrusted to the executive branch of the government if he were subjected to any such restraint.

The only relief, then, for the abuse of this discretion, appears to be impeachment or indictment for malfeasance and, on conviction, removal from office of the offender.

In one case that I recall, the court said substantially that a citizen of the United States has no absolute constitutional right that his mail shall be carried by the United States at all, that whatever rights he may have in this respect exist in the discretion of the legislature and are entirely different from those fundamental rights to life, liberty and property which are secured by the Constitution, and that since then Congress may or may not, in its discretion, provide a postal system for public convenience, it is difficult to say what condition it may not impose to its use and enjoyment. Of course, Congress, in the exercise of its discretionary powers, cannot discriminate between persons or classes of persons, but the court holds that persons and property can be subjected to all kinds of restraint and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, and the right of every citizen to the benefit of the discretionary legislation of Congress must, therefore, be subject to the necessity of public health, morals and order and the general welfare, and the efficient execution of the powers expressly conferred by the constitution. The discretionary power conferred by law upon the postoffice department does not, according to said court, make this action tantamount to a trial, and penal judgment against the party affected by it; its effect is not to punish but to preserve the mails from misuse. Very truly yours,

CHAS. H. SOELKE.

Instead of giving my own views now upon the several points presented in this carefully prepared legal opinion I prefer to wait a fortnight, meantime asking every one who believes in the legend known as "equal rights for all and special privileges for none," to read and re-read, consider and reconsider the words of Mr. Soelke. Especially do I ask all who happen to possess matured opinions upon the question as to what the word citizenship in the United States really means, to write out, as briefly, as clearly, as possible her or his opinion—either for publication in LUCIFER or in some other paper, or simply for comparison of ideas—and send the same to this office. But few of such articles can be published in LUCIFER, but the preparation of the same will be worth all it costs in time and trouble.

Whether the opinion of Mr. Soelke is to be reprinted or not it will be well for each reader who feels interested in the question of citizenship on the one hand and serfdom on the other to keep this copy of LUCIFER for reference.

OUR BRITISH EXCHANGES.

Among the foreign exchanges that come to Lucifer's office none deserve more grateful and more appreciative mention than does "The Truth Seeker," published at Bradford, England. While not always in full accord with the methods of its editor, I regard him as one of the most valiant champions of freedom of speech and of press now living. At the head of his title page stands the words "Prosecuted for Blasphemy," from which legend we understand that he has himself been the victim of the unholy alliance known as church and state. For the past year the Bradford "Truth Seeker" has been published quarterly only, but it is now announced that, commencing January, 1906, it will be published monthly. It is offered at the very low price of one shilling six pence per annum, post paid to any address. Prominent among the articles in this current number is "The Mission of Spiritualism," by Mrs. L. A. Griffin; "Balmy Believers," by Ernest Park; "The Bible Against Itself," by J. D. Shaw; "Egos Vivisected While You Wait," by Malfew Seklew. Under the head of "Books Received" we find notices of two pamphlets published at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, as follows:

"Social Freedom, by Hubba L. Potter Loomis. The author states that she sends forth her message into the great sad world like 'the dove' sent from 'the ark,' bearing its 'olive branch' of Peace and Love, hoping that when 'the great flood' of strife, hatred and turmoil, engendered in the heart of humanity by ages of false teaching, has subsided a little it may find a resting place, and be the means of helping to create a better understanding of our human relations in the minds of men and women. Also of the fact that the sex organs are wisely intended for use other than merely to propagate the species, and above all, that it may help to demonstrate this truth, that no one has any right of control over the sex organs of another, and that each and everyone has the absolute right to select their sex mate, and enjoy the same without condemnation, just as they select the kinds of food they enjoy, and which they know does them the most good. The book is published by Moses Harman, price 1-6, and sold by Truth Seeker Co., 2 Union street, Bradford.

"Sex Radicalism: As Seen by an Emancipated Woman of the New Time. By Dora Forster. The mistake of Christendom, above all other mistakes, is its failure to give a rational education to children in regard to sex. And growing out of this fundamental mistake the crime of Christendom, above all its other crimes, is its treatment of womanhood and motherhood in the sex-relation. Out of this mistake of mistakes, out of this crime of crimes, more than from any other cause or causes, have grown up the inequalities, the despotisms, the slaveries that now curse all the nations of the world calling themselves Christians. It is with the hope of adding a little to the fund of knowledge of sex—which 'lies at the root of life'—that the book, Sex Radicalism, has been written."—From the preface.]

"The sale of this book has been stopped in America, and our old and esteemed friend Moses Harman has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment for sending it through the mails. He is appealing to a higher court, and at the second trial it is hoped he will receive the common justice which has been denied him at the first trial. The boasted freedom of America seems to have evolved into all boast and no freedom. Anyway, we recommend the book, and we sell it, the price is 2-6 post free. Orders to J. W. Gott, 10 St. James' Hall, Manchester."

A word of explanation just here: Brother Gott is quite correct in saying that Lucifer's editor is now under sentence of one year in state prison, and that he is "appealing to a higher court," but the alleged cause of the prosecution and sentence is not the publication of the booklet called "Sex Radicalism." A chapter of that booklet was pointed out by the prosecutor as one of the causes of complaint, but when the said editor was put upon trial in the Federal court in Chicago, the Forster article seems to have been withdrawn and another, called "The Fatherhood Question," substituted in its place.

For more than a year past the Bradford "Truth Seeker" has been supplied from this office to our readers at 3 cents per copy or yearly at 35 cents. We have now a good stock on hand of the closing number for this current year, also of two earlier issues, which will be sent on application while the supply lasts.

Another of our British exchanges is the London "Freethinker," edited by G. W. Foote. The Freethinker is a sixteen page weekly magazine, price two pence each number, or ten shillings six pence per annum. It is very ably edited; now in its twenty-sixth volume; well printed on superior paper. The leading editorial in the number for October 8 is entitled "Voltaire and the Venus of Milo." Mr. Foote attended the late "International Congress of Freethinkers" at Paris, hence it was natural that he should want to visit the house in which Voltaire—that grand old pioneer of modern Freethought—passed away, on the thirtieth of May, 1778, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Alluding to Voltaire's great age, Mr. Foote has this to say:

"That he lived so long is a disproof of all the pious stories about his profligate life. He was so delicate in childhood that he was not expected to live to be a man. His lasting for more than four-fifths of a century shows how carefully he must have preserved his strength. And this reflection is strengthened by the knowledge we possess of his laborious and indefatigable career. He was one of those who might wear out but never rust out. He was ever a worker. Probably he filled more pages than any other writer in the world, yet every page is valuable, and is always more or less illuminated by his sleepless wit. How could such a man have dissipated his energy in disorderly living? Everyone with a grain of sense and candor will know how to answer this question."

Speaking of the statue known as the "Venus of Milo," the pride of the Louvre—one of the greatest of all collections of art treasures, the editor adds:

"Hundreds of years before the Christian era some unknown great artist chiseled that wonderful figure. Our Lady of Beauty, the goddess of the best and highest as well as the deepest in man, still stands there as Heine saw her, in nude perfection. Ravishing loveliness rounds every limb and each delightful breast, and quivers on the tender lips and exquisite chin; but divine chastity sits upon the noble brows, and subdues desire into reverence. Here is the eternal feminine that, as Goethe said, has led man on. And this beautiful and splendid dream in marble gladdened men's eyes, and thrilled men's hearts, and inspired men's minds, hundreds of years before Christ, a thousand years before the advent of the Madonna."

Judging from Editor Foote's description of "The Venus of Milo," there would be little chance, if transferred to New York city, that it would be allowed an undraped public exhibition.

Other British exchanges will perhaps receive brief notice in the near future.

LETTERS TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

A few more of the many samples of letters sent by our subscribers to the head servant of the people of the United States:

Theo. Roosevelt, President U. S. A.—Dear Sir: I subscribe for a paper named LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, published at Chicago, Ill. In the last six months I have missed five papers, stopped by the postmaster at Chicago. I pay for the paper in advance. When it is deposited in the postoffice and the postage paid it becomes my property. Now, I would like to know what right the postmaster has to confiscate my property. Your attention to the above would greatly oblige,

Yours, S. ROSEN, Maysville, Ky.

Theodore Roosevelt.—Fellow Citizen: Owing to the fact that the old king-power was vested in the presidential chair to a large extent when our political government was formed, during the famous "secret session," when Uncle Sam was born of the unholy union of Johnny Bull and the spirit of the Spanish Inquisition (the orthodox church), I, a disfranchised citizen, who under a just government would have equal rights of franchise with the masculine powers, am asked to add my voice to a chorus of voices in prayer to you not to imprison Moses Harman, an old gentleman, philanthropist and scientist, of 500 Fulton street, Chicago, for certain work along a scientific line in which I am deeply interested.

This man has been one of the finest assistants to me in the study of divinity, or the love-life, which will rule society when science is relieved from persecution by CRAPTS (the unholy twins before named). I do not wish him again imprisoned for teaching the science that I am going to teach the rest of my life, to men, women and children, and—all lovers of health, life and happiness.

Under separate cover I am sending to you another personal letter, called "Aunt Helen's Love Letter to Devilry."

Neither the letter nor this can rightly be called a prayer. In both I simply WARN you that if you wish to insure the breaking of the lines of devilry IN A HURRY, why, take no note of these various appeals to interfere in the case of Moses Harman.

Woman has prayed while man has preyed, quite long enough. She sees now how she can be in a position to COMMAND.

I close with a repetition of the warning: Let the proceedings go on, and you will HASTEN THE FEMININE REBELLION.

Yours very truly, HELEN HOWARD PHILBRICK.
Forsythe, Montana.

Dear President Roosevelt: I must direct your attention to the flagrant absurdity, not to speak of the unconstitutionality of the action of the postoffice authorities, in holding up copies of LUCIFER, a paper issued by Mr. Moses Harman, of Chicago. Mr. Harman himself has been indicted for publishing "obscene" matter. The legal adviser to the postoffice has laid down that all discussion of the relations of the sexes is "obscene." In that case your own letters and utterances respecting "race suicide" are "obscene."

I may remind you that the first amendment to the constitution of the United States enacts that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." By what legal right, then, is Mr. Harman prosecuted? and why are copies of his paper suppressed? Is this not a revival of the "star chamber" in America? Are you as president of this Republic and as an American citizen going to let this pass without rebuke? I hope not. Yours respectfully,

D. W. HARRIGAN,
St. Louis, Mo., General Delivery.

Theodore Roosevelt.—Dear Sir: Being a subscriber of LUCIFER, a fortnightly paper published by Moses Harman at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, and having during the last few months failed to receive several of the numbers, for which I have paid, on account of certain irregular and high handed actions of the postal authorities, I wish to call your attention to said irregularities. These actions of the postal authorities may be legal, and if they are, it is evident that certain laws must be amended or abolished, but it is certain that they are in opposition to the progress and civilization of our age and against the best of American traditions. When you shall know that Mr. Harman and all the subscribers of LUCIFER have been deprived of their property without such forms and processes as are ordinarily thrown round the rights of our citizens in order to safeguard them against malevolent or arbitrary interference by officials or others, then I am sure you will feel as indignant over it as I do.

Hoping that it is only necessary to call your attention to this matter to get the depredations on our mail stopped and an adequate restitution made to Mr. Harman financially and otherwise, I am,
Very sincerely yours,

A. E. ELLIS,
Mechanical and Electrical Engineer, Boston, Mass.

[First printed in the "Demonstrator," Lake Bay, Wash.]

No. 711 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal., Monday, October 23, 1905.—To the President—Sir: I protest against the holdup of LUCIFER of October 12, 1905. This makes the fifth practical confiscation of my paper in five months. I cannot believe that your censor has stopped this last issue on account of the sensible articles on the all-important sex question. Surely the censor, if this was the reason, must think that we are still in the nursery; if he takes this view the nursery, with its pap, etc., is undoubtedly the right place for him. This issue has probably been suppressed, as far as you can, because of its exposure of the postoffice department, the "graft" of the rent of mail cars, etc. This mail-car business, and not the female question, is my solution of this Russianism. You are traveling the old Roman road at a great pace.

Bernard Shaw's letter in this issue, perhaps, also hurt the pride of Comstock. Shaw is so matter of fact as to the kind of freedom that is screeched by the American eagle—same governmental symbol as the Roman and Russian—a bird of prey.

J. A. KINGHORN JONES,
The father of ten very live children.

LUCIFER'S HELPERS.

In this list are included the names of those who send money or stamps to pay for LUCIFER or its pamphlets to be sent to friends who are not now subscribers; also the names of those who contribute to the fund for legal defense in the courts, and to keep LUCIFER'S flag afloat while prosecuted for alleged "obscenity." If any names have been omitted that should have been included in this list, or, if included, incorrectly credited, the error will be gladly corrected when our attention is called thereto.

Some have sent money direct to the treasurer of the Free Speech League, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, from whom we have not yet had a full report. Others have sent a few stamps, five or ten cents at a time, of which no account is taken in these public credits.

BERNARR M'FADDEN ARRESTED.

"Physical Culture" for November contains this notice of the arrest of its editor:

"Mr. Anthony Comstock, prize prude of the country, secured a warrant for the arrest of the editor of this magazine because of the latter's connection with the putting out of posters advertising the recent Physical Culture Exhibition. Two magistrates to whom Comstock applied for a warrant absolutely refused to listen to him, and it was only after the third attempt that he was successful.

"We have watched Mr. Comstock's work in numerous instances, and though in some rare cases he might have been commended, yet on the majority of occasions he was seriously or ludicrously at fault.

"His attitude toward the human body shows very clearly the condition of his mind. To him a beautiful statue of marble or a perfectly formed body of flesh—the crowning effort of the Creator—has all the vulgar and nasty attributes that the human mind can possibly conceive. We sincerely pity him for his unhappy perversion of taste and instinct. From the standpoint of the physical culturist he is a monstrosity and has no place in an era when the beauty and nobility and holiness of the human body are beginning to be recognized by the world at large.

"The arrest of the editor of this magazine occurred just as we were going to press, but our next issue will contain full details of the outrage.

"In the meantime, we would suggest to Mr. Comstock that he secure a Supreme Court injunction against the Almighty to prevent the latter from permitting children to be born without clothing."

Brother McFadden is learning by dear experience that no man can safely be trusted with powers such as Anthony Comstock exercises over his fellow human beings. The "cases" in which Comstock "might have been commended" only serve to show how easily such powers could be perverted to improper uses. Now that McFadden himself is the victim he will probably be prepared to join with others in the demand that the office of censor of press, of mails, of literature and of art, be entirely abolished, as survivals of the "Middle Ages" Inquisition, that tortured, imprisoned, hanged and burned those who differed in opinion from the officers of that Inquisition.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Tuesdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

PAUL ROBIN (Editor "Regeneration"), Paris, France.—Friends and myself beg to send to you one dollar and a few stamps we have left—too small a contribution—for your defense against Comstockian hypocrisy. We send also a few cents to the fund for Voltarine de Cleyre, martyr of madness and stupidity.

A. L. S., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—I received the sample copy of LUCIFER which you sent me and like it very much. I feel sure there was never anything in your paper that the postal authorities need to concern themselves about. I inclose 20 cents for more copies.

J. E. WITMAN, Hazleton, Pa.—Words fail me when I try to express my indignation at the manner in which the postal authorities are using you, yet better things are hardly to be expected under existing conditions. My protest goes to President Roosevelt today. With best wishes. Enclosed is $5 for books, subscription and defense fund.

S. GELUS, No. Andover, Mass.—Am sorry to learn that the postal inquisitors are continuing their work of selecting what the citizens of the United States can read and what they cannot. I want to receive LUCIFER even though the postal censors do not intend to allow me to do so, and would gladly pay two dollars a year as long as necessary, instead of one, as at present.

D. WEBSTER GROH, Hagerstown, Md.—Because the corrupt politicians who run our government or state abuse their power, of which they already have too much, I heartily oppose such unlimited increase thereof as socialism proposes, by politician ownership (government ownership) of everything, which would indeed make us the veriest slaves to the politicians that the world ever saw. The more government owns the less there is left for individuals to own, and we would be poor indeed under socialism. "What is everybody's business is nobody's business" is a very true saying and applies equally to property. Soon neither the states nor we would have any property, as no man would care to produce what he could not own or receive an equivalent for. Every man should be responsible for his own acts—his own children—their food, clothing, shelter and educations; and to shift his responsibilities in these matters on those who are not responsible therefor is unjust and immoral, and the law is right in so far as it fixes this responsibility, and wrong in so far as it fails to do so. Yours for equal rights.

J. S. STRAKER (Capt., Crepping Hall, Wakes' Corner, Essex, England.—I sent ten shillings ($2.40) to you towards the cost of the proposed appeal. As an English lawyer I hope the case will be dealt with suitably, and as a student of some of the subjects most directly affecting the welfare of races and individuals I hope a ruling will be obtained that will be fair to the individual and beneficial to the state.

RYAN WALKER, New York City.—Your letter, forwarded to me from Baltimore, received. I am heartily in sympathy with you, and deplore this Russian tyranny of officials in this country. The censorship of LUCIFER and the suppression of "Mrs. Warren's Profession" here only gives us an idea of what is coming, unless we battle for the rights of all and not of a few. I will send you a contribution next week.

A. J. KRAFT, Grantfork, Ill.—Received your sample copy of LUCIFER and enjoyed reading it very much; and coming to the conclusion that LUCIFER should be sustained, I herewith send you a dollar for one year's subscription. Keep the torch of reason as high as possible, that it may enlighten humanity and brave the storms, and victory is bound to be the outcome. Hoping and wishing that you may live a long and happy life, I remain, Yours truly.

J. W. DAUGHERTY, Hitchcock, S. D.—I enclose $1 to apply on my subscription to LUCIFER. I feel that the principles of law and justice have been violated by the postal authorities that are persecuting you. But they have to make a pretense of earning their salaries. My rights as well as yours are invaded when they stop a paper I have paid for. Fight it to the end. History tells us that the greatest results of martyrs' lives come after their deaths.

MRS. S. H., Beaver Falls, Pa.—Please send me one copy of "Thoughts of a Fool," for enclosed $1. I am very indignant at the treatment you are receiving for standing up and fighting for my downtrodden sex, although I luckily don't happen to be one of the oppressed in the general sense of the word, but I am not blind to the conditions of others less luckily situated. I wish I had the means to express my sympathy in at least a monetary way.

DR. S. A. WEST, Rock Port, Mo.—My beloved Brother: Your letter of the 3rd has been with me since that time. Yes, I received the medallion in good order. It is splendid work and I have given it a good place in my study. The idea of writing President Roosevelt is, I think, a good one. If ALL would take the hint, it would draw like a magnet! Your word on the manner of approaching the president is good, too. I pat you on the back for thus speaking out boldly. Only good can possibly come out of all this fight!

L. H. ANDERSON, Chicago.—Your favor saying copies of "Hilda's Home" had been sent to addresses sent you received. The absurd objections which the postoffice departments raise would be laughable were it not so serious a matter. I really think the most objectionable feature to them is "Moses Harman" and their inability to crush him. "Right is Might." "Truth is mighty and will prevail." I hope that you can soon reap the fruits of your earnest toil. * * * Enclosed find $ .00, for which you will please send, at your earliest convenience, one copy of "Hilda's Home," in cloth, to each of the following addresses.

MRS. F. M. B. MORSE, Berkeley, Cal.—I believe there are lots of people that believe as you do, but who, for reasons of their own, keep still about it. I believe and know that the worst kind of prostitution is being carried on in the most respected families, legally. I am disgusted with it. It seems to me that if a letter could be written by some one and sent around in each community where LUCIFER circulates, protesting to President Roosevelt, every one that believed in the paper would sign it. Many persons would sign the letter that would not write. I would gladly do so. Inclosed is $1 to help the cause.

JOE TROUDSON, Healdsburg, Cal.—I subscribe to many papers and am doing what I can along many lines of reform, so you see I am not in a position to do much for any particular cause. I firmly believe, though, that you are at the basic principle on which depends the future weal or woe of the race, and how any sane man or woman can offer such opposition to so rational a theory is more than I can understand. I object to the word theory—having used it inadvertently—for it is no more a theory than is the law of gravitation, nor less certain in its general results, though individual cases may diverge from the regular course taken by the majority.

KATE A. UNTHANK, Lawrence, Kas.—I think Comrade Oliver A. Verity and C. L. James, in LUCIFER of November 9, have struck the key note for action. Whether the first suit could be won or not, possibly the second or third might be, and they would have the effect of holding up this hypocritical government as the laughing-stock of the world—not excluding Russia, now that she is granted free speech and press. Such a showing would result in much good. I, for one, would be proud of the honor of assisting to the amount of a few dollars, and more if possible, if the right parties could be prosecuted. Inclosed find $1 for your defense fund and 50 cents for a book. Hoping for and believing in the better outcome for yourself and the cause, I am most sincerely yours for truth and freedom.

GEO. E. LOCHT, St. Louis, Mo.—Please send me: One Thoughts of a Fool," $1; one year's subscription to LUCIFER, $1; one year's subscription to "Truth Seeker" (Bradford, Eng.), $1; one "Creative Life," 25 cents; one "Strike of a Sex," 25 cents; one "Origin of the Family, Private Property and the States," 60 cents; one "Bible Temperance," 40 cents; one "Right Generation," 50 cents. * * * Enclosed please find $5. With best wishes.

[The price of the Bradford Truthseeker is 35 cents per year, monthly—not $1. "Bible Temperance" is 20 cents each, not 40 cents.—M. H.]

W. L. LIGHTBOURN, Washington, D. C.—I have recently seen your paper, LUCIFER, and I want to tell you that it is just what I like and admire. I have always been interested in the subjects you treat of and fully appreciate their value, and I am doing some propaganda work in a small way along those lines. I shall be glad to have your paper, so am enclosing $2 for myself and another whom I persuaded to subscribe for it. I wish I could give you some material help besides in your battle for a free press. I take an advanced position on the subject of marriage and relations of the sexes, and particularly as to the rights of children to be well born, and would like to become acquainted with others who hold like views? I feel that we should get together to accomplish the most good.

W. W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I enclose herewith a copy of a letter that I sent to President Roosevelt, and the reply received therefrom. I did my best to make a presentable letter so that he might take notice of it, but do you think for one moment that President Roosevelt ever saw that letter? I don't. I don't believe the politicians ever permitted that letter to reach his sight. You see what the reply says: "That my letter was referred to the Postal Department. Now, isn't that a sensible thing to do? The very department its members guilty? Not by a —— sight. Now the question that one of your correspondents wrote, viz., "What can be done?" continually forces itself into my mind, and I echo, What can be done? What can be done? Doesn't it seem awful to think that the sensible class must submit to the injustice heaped upon them by a lot of fannies? I don't see how you are able to hold out against your persecutions; you are a wonder. I feel in my heart an admiration I can't express for those who revolt against the tyranny of their oppressors.

RANJI DHAR, Lucknow, India.—Your latest pamphlet contains much sensible advice. Such a book, however, seems incomplete without a chapter on the limitation of the number of offspring. Perhaps such a discussion is tabooed in the United States. But you do not mention anything even about the practice of "Zugassant's Discovery." Do you consider it objectionable, and hence have not given it a place in your book? I cannot help laughing at the curious pronunciamento of the law as given in LUCIFER, that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and so unmailable." I do not believe that the laws of the United States would be so opposed to the ordinary rules of justice, equity and good conscience as to admit of this interpretation.

[We advertise and sell "Zugassent's Discovery." It is part of the book called "Strike of a Sex," written by Geo. N. Miller. It has had a very wide circulation in this country and in Europe. The statement that "any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and unmailable" is now denied by the official to whom it was attributed, but the rulings against the six condemned editions of LUCIFER leave one in doubt as to what will be held to be mailable by the postal department and what unmailable.—M. H.]

Albina L. Washburn, "Coöperative Exchange," San Diego, Calif.—If I have time will write a short letter to President Roosevelt, but would rather write a loving letter to your post office man at Chicago, if I knew his specific address. . . . . You are always asking for advice—a thing I cannot do, for no one knows what is? I have such confidence in your own judgment if you would only use it fearlessly—as the inner voice—that I cannot but regret your want of courage in that respect. . . . . After all you are depending on dollars to right and justify your course. They never will! . . . . If you were Mr. Jones, I would say: "Mr. Jones, please go on with what you were doing—teaching the people how to live. Quit scolding about what the other fellows are doing. Have too much pride, dignity and self-respect to intimate that it makes any difference to you. Be optimistic, humorous if you can, but never seriously admit that LUCIFER'S cause or work can be hurt by mud-slinging, nor even by robbery. . . . . Mr. Jones, you might even give LUCIFER and yourself a cheerful vacation for awhile, until the matter "blows over." Concentrate on something else as foreign to it as possible; then come back with calm nerves and better health."

Mr. Jones might tell me contemptuously: "You do not know it all yet," which would be as "thrue a warrud as iver was shpoke."

As to a letter to Mr. Roosevelt, while I think he is developing rapidly to be an independent people's president, how about the "one man power" we have always decried? And where is the consistency, dignity or justice in addressing him personally in behalf of a publication which in a recent issue says editorially, under the head, "Don't Indict the Corporations": "When Theodore Roosevelt demands that the corporation be indicted and that the officials go free, is it not because he knows that he himself is at the head of the most criminal of all the corporations, the United States government itself?—and that if its officials were indicted for their crimes against the common citizen he himself would have to meet criminal charges more numerous than any other man, perhaps, now living on the American continent?"

[The only comment I have to make upon the kindly meant criticism of our old-time friend and helper is that if Theodore Roosevelt is developing rapidly to be an independent people's president he will welcome all candidly expressed opinions, whether favorable or unfavorable to himself. Only cowardly despots are offended by plainly worded criticisms. If he is not a despot he will at once investigate the many charges made against his subordinates in the post office and other departments of the national government, and if he finds these charges to be true he will lose no time in correcting the abuses and in doing what he can to recompense the innocent sufferers from these abuses. M. H.]

A SUGGESTION.

Publisher of LUCIFER: Now that the "hall is open" is way of letter writing to the president, let me suggest that subscribers write to their representatives in congress, asking for the repeal or modification of what is known as the Comstock law. Let Mr. Harman give the proper name and number of this law, so it can be referred to by writers understandingly. Yours for truth and freedom. SUBSCRIBER.

SHALL SPEECH BE FREE?

A lawyer of New York City, well known as a writer and speaker on sociologic questions, but who for reasons of his own prefers not to have his name quoted, sends to LUCIFER'S office the following paragraphs as part of the accumulated wisdom of the ages bearing upon the attempt to murder free speech in the United States by using the postal system as a public executioner:

"Men in earnest have no time to waste in patching fig leaves for the naked truth."—Lowell.

"Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."—Thos. Jefferson.

"He that will not reason is a bigot; he that cannot reason is a fool; he that dares not reason is a slave."—Sir Wm. Drummond.

"All truth is safe, and nothing else is safe; and he who keeps back the truth or withholds it from men, from motives of expediency, is either a coward or a criminal, or both."—Max Muller.

"Better a thousand fold abuse of free speech than denial of free speech. The abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race."—Bradlaugh.

"Surely the individual who devotes his time to fearless and unrestricted inquiry into the grand questions arising out of our moral nature ought rather to receive the patronage than encounter the vengeance of an enlightened legislation."—Percy B. Shelley.

"I believe rather in drawing men toward good than shutting them out from bad."—Zola.

"Let the history of our practice of book-burning serve to help us to keep our minds open with regard to anomalies which may still exist among us, descended from as suspicious an origin, and as little supported by reason."—Farrer.

"They who menace our freedom of thought and of speech are tampering with something more powerful than gun-powder.—Moncure Conway.

"To argue against any breach of Liberty from the ill use that may be made of it is to argue against liberty itself, since all is capable of being abused."—Lord Littleton.

"For my part I am certain that God hath given us reason to discover between truth and falsehood, and he that makes not this use of it, but believes things he knows not why, I say it is chance that he believes the truth and not by choice, and I cannot but fear that God will not accept this sacrifice of fools."—Chillingsworth.

"It is an evil when the guardianship of virtue devolves upon well-meaning dullness, which makes it ridiculous."—Parton's Voltaire.

"As to the evil which results from a censorship, it is impossible to measure it, because it is impossible to tell where it ends."—Jeremy Bentham.

"It is well to consider a little whether in our zeal to suppress one form of immorality we may not be forging chains which in time be fastened upon the neck of some great but unpopular truth."—Loring Moody.

Hypocrites and bigots have cunningly devised the crime of obscenity and caused it to be entered upon the statute books of the country, by which they are able to imprison, annoy and disgrace independent thinkers."—Bennett.

"Personally I feel that it is an extremely foolish law, and if I had been a legislator I never would have voted for it."—Judge John R. Brady, on Comstock postal law.

"Bishop Burnett said he had long looked on liberty of conscience as one of the rights of human nature antecedent to society which Hist. Own Time, p. 216.

"Dissent, after having long been an unquestionable crime, has ended by becoming almost a cornerstone of the glory of our civilization. * * *"—Patterson.

WHAT WOULD BECOME OF THE CHILDREN?

We are often asked what would become of the children if marriage were abolished. This question can best be answered by asking another: What does become of the children in places where marriage is already in great part abolished?

Of every thousand children born in Vienna 449 are illegitimate. Of every thousand born in Munich and Prague 439 are illegitimate. Of every thousand born in Stockholm 396 are illegitimate. And so on. Of every thousand born in Stockholm 396 are illegitimate. And so on.

What becomes of the children of Vienna, Munich, Prague and Stockholm? If anything dreadful happens to them why do not our opponents bring forward the facts? I have lived in Munich, but I never heard that the children there had harder luck than the children of any other place.

There is one pretty good test. Wherever children are neglected there will be heavy infant mortality, and therefore a high death rate. Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics, 1898, gives the rate of illegitimacy in many cities. Vienna heads the list with 449 per thousand, and Rotterdam foots it with 70 per thousand. Yet in Rotterdam the death rate is 21.4 per thousand according to the same authority, while in Vienna it is only 20.4. The most illegitimate of cities has a better bill of health than the most legitimate.

Under present economic conditions children will not be very well cared for, whether they are legitimate or illegitimate. But the unmarried mothers of Vienna have some advantages over the married ones of New York and Chicago. They do not run the risk of being forcibly violated by a husband, or of being sent to jail for stealing their own children from a drunken father. If any one can show any advantage that marriage gives the New York or Chicago woman over the Vienna one I hope he will not neglect so good an opportunity.

R. B. KERR.

THE LOVE PASSION.

"Some take their love laughing and some crying. I always take it laughing myself. Either way, you're happier for it. * * * Where they are so wrong nowadays is in taking their love commercially; in other words, they do not love, they simply acquire all rights in a cheap housekeeper or an expensive table ornament."—Barry Pain.

It may certainly be questioned whether the most serious form of love is not really the happiest. Many a one regrets the departure of "les beaux jours quand j'etais si malheureux."

Yet sex love begins in fun. It is nature's "true word spoken in jest," her comedy of Beatrice and Benedict sparring till the drama ends in the sober reality of "Benedict the married man." As to this first and original form of activity a Luciferite aptly quotes Froebel's dictum that the play instinct is the creative instinct. It is spontaneous and unconscious and begins far outside the sway of morals. And the healthier sex love probably always retains some of its first joyous wanton ways, the merry give and take of youth.

I refer to the passion of the emotions. But if the passion of the senses instead were under analysis—the form of sex activity on which minds of the Comstockian type delight to dwell—not a word need be changed. The emotional and the sensual are so uniformly correlated and to be found at their strongest either actual or potential in the same individual as to justify an assumption that they are interchangeable, and that puritan suppression where it has checked the emotions has favored sensuality.

That great old puritan, Tolstoi, condemns the emotional and the sensual alike. "Men and women must be trained both by their parents and by public opinion to look on falling in love and the accompanying sexual desire—whether before or after marriage—not as the poetic and elevated state is now considered to be, but as an animal state degrading to a human being. * * * We must cease to consider sex love as something especially elevated." ("An Afterword," Tolstoi, Essays and Letters.) It is surprising that one who has had so much experience, early and often, should pronounce thus upon this subject, and that we must rank Tolstoi as little better in this than those coarse puritans who refer to sex expression as "mere momentary pleasure," evidently because they themselves have never attained to anything better.

Spiritual love is in reality a great antidote to a craving for pleasure. He who has never felt the exaltation of a lover has but a poor broken-off footrule with which to measure the breadth and height of human life. Poor Lorenzo is rich in comparisons, though he may lose his sleep in thinking about Isabella, "and with sick longing all the night outwear to hear her morning footstep on the stair." A capacity for exalted love is the first glory of grown-up life, and a sign of elevated character. The young lover of "Candida is described true to life; he rises highest where one in whom the senses rule would have fallen lowest.

Exalted love was perhaps best understood by the Greeks. What were the ideals of "platonic love"—a name often used and often misused—is well treated of in LUCIFER No. 922.

Marriage in its modern development, among people capable of ideals, represents a real aspiration to combine the fulfilments of the needs both of body and soul. It fails, not because these cannot be combined, but because the conditions and requirements of conventional marriage are very unfavorable to the adequate fulfilment of both sets of needs.

Yet even the married state might be made a better environment for complete and healthy sex lives if its probabilities were foreseen instead of being deliberately falsified by the hypocrisy of society, and if those about to marry were not deceived by fictions and silence. Especially is the woman deceived. One of our friends, in his book of a few years ago, courageously points out how seldom a mother can speak truly and wisely to a daughter whose marriage is in prospect. Instead of some appreciative and cheerful words on the beauty and charm of the fulfilments of love, she can only pass on her own vulgar views, and perhaps add, by way of reassurance, that "It won't seem so bad after a little while." The same author rightly shows how various are the kinds of coöperation which are now included in marriage. Free yourselves from superstition, he says, and then treat each one of the coöperations separately. "Let us understand that we expect every man and every woman to be faithful and true in these partnerships, the same as we expect it of every honorable person today in any business agreement. The 'spontaneous desire of the moment' is not to be considered a sufficient reason for breaking up a household, for forsaking a family, or for betraying the trust of a friend and comrade." (E. P. B.)

The great error of our society has been to regard sex as a dark and unclean mystery instead of a department of nature which all should study patiently in order to be guided by its laws. We are cruel to assume and try to enforce total ignorance of sex in children. The education manuals of the future will include this necessary part of psychology, that errors at the outset may be avoided. Instructed teachers will be able to show how unwise our government of children has been. In particular is the usual nursery practice of corporal punishment wholly bad; it not only contradicts every law of the mental training of reasoning beings, but it has a peculiarly unwholesome effect on the imaginative faculties, causing the least desirable kinds of excitement and stimulating imitative dramatic play in the childish mind. A rational life of well-balanced emotions must begin in childhood, and also the habit of just judgment, the lack of which is so conspicuous in the various sex tyrannies.

It seems difficult to combat the superstitious fear of knowledge, but it must and will be overcome like all other superstitions by ever promoting more light. The conservative defenders of ignorance, the vice societies, who are really, whether they know it or not, supporters of those whose money interest it is to maintain darkness, have recently resorted to such low and reptile-like methods that we ought easily to perceive their real character. FIDEI DEFENSOR.

AN APPEAL TO PRESS WRITERS.

Ascnt "thought censorship" by a few political and irresponsible government officials the thing to do is to let the people of the country have the full actual facts without exaggeration, expletives, etc.—just the facts themselves. That is all that is needed.

Congress fastened Comstockery in the statutes by indirection and by administrative process a press censorship is now being built up, as fully explained in a late comprehensive series of articles by Louis F. Post of "The Public," Chicago. Congress only can stop this new-fangled system of press censorship.

The newspapers superficially assume this new departure is none of their funeral. In that they are mistaken. Any attack on any of our fundamental civic rights is serious. The only efficient method to bring thought censorship—press censorship—before the public is by means of voluntary letter writing to the editors. All papers that amount to anything have now an open column set apart for letters from their readers and voluntary press writers. These writers now have a national organization, of which Mr. Lorin T. Jones, Baltimore, Md., 202 West Barre street, is general secretary. (Does 50 cents a year.) If a sufficient number of letters appear in the editorial office that proves a public interest in "press censorship" to that editor, even though he does not publish the letters. He soon will take it up, and don't you forget it.

How easy it is to address a few million readers through these open columns at an expenditure of say 10, 15 or 25 cents in stamps only we members of the U. S. P. W. L. realize.

If your readers wish to know more about this cheap and efficient method of bringing an issue into public discussion, such as thought censorship by the postal department, to directly influence public opinion and bring about results in congress, let them address with no man could give up, because it was not in his power."—Burnett's stamp Mr. Jones, or if in Illinois, myself.

Letters to the editor should be short, calm, impersonal and devoid of unnecessary words, especially devoid of abusive adjectives. Just let the writers reason their propositions, copy the letter a dozen times and mail to twelve papers for a quarter. Let them repeat this as they have postage to spare.

Let us say one hundred men, who do not believe in censorship, write twelve letters each—one thousand two hundred letters. Let us say the average circulation of each paper is only 10,000. This means 1,210,000 readers for that letter at least; practically many more.

Thus can this matter, or one topic, be brought to public notice through the vitally interested press quickly and efficiently.

No need of going into further details in this cramped space, except to state that this league system of press writing will shortly assume a national importance as the only convenient, cheap means of interchanging opinions among the newspaper readers, opinions which are "tabooed" in the other parts of the paper, such as single tax and political economic topics in general. Trust the people to do the right thing every time. It's up to the people, you know.

WOMEN AS WAGE-EARNERS.

The following note from an esteemed Boston correspondent is self-explanatory:

"Dear Mr. Harman:—The enclosed is worthy of perusal. I would like you to quote, some time, the paragraph I have marked, which contains the 'nut,' and invite R. B. Kerr or E. C. Walker—by far your ablest writers, in my opinion—to discuss the question thereby raised, viz.:

"How can women ever become economically free without injuring herself as a producer of children?"

"Yours truly,
"PHILIP G. PEABODY."

The following is the paragraph referred to, taken from a column article in the "Boston Evening Transcript," written by C. W. Salesby, M. D., for the "London Chronicle":

"If woman is to continue to discharge those anabolic functions, consisting in the accumulation of potential energy for her unborn children, or the provision of their nutriment after birth, upon which the continuance of the race depends, there is a definite and necessary limit set to her sexual activities—to that output of kinetic energy which depends upon what the physiologist calls katabolism. She cannot both eat her cake and have it; cannot both accumulate energy for the racial life and expend it for her individual life. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that man and woman have each one hundred units of energy to utilize. Man, who does not bear the brunt of the reproductive function, can afford to spend his energy on external activities. Woman may spend all her energy similarly, and may successfully compete with man, as an economic unit; but, if she does so, she will have no energy left for the supremely important function which she, and none other, can discharge. If woman is to continue to be woman, she cannot compete on equal terms with man, so far as external activities are concerned. If she attempts to become man and woman, too, she is apt to end by failing to be either. But if woman does not continue to be woman, there is an end of human history—the resources of science notwithstanding."

The editorial introduction to the article in the "Transcript" reads thus:

"Physiology once again called in to prove that woman has not the strength to do a man's work as well as the man himself can. Higher education is woman a positive benefit to the race, but the dangers that may ensue if she leaves her post in the home."

The motion made by Brother Peabody is hereby cordially seconded by the occupant of LUCIFER'S tripod. M. H.

ANOTHER POSTAL OUTRAGE.

At the rate the people are registering their "kicks" at the peculiar and significant methods of the United States postal authorities it would appear that whatever our (mis)representatives at Washington may otherwise be engaged in, they are not neglecting the interests of the express companies, as evidenced by the facts outlined in the following letter to the "Chicago Daily News" of November 24.

It is entitled "Getting Mail by Express," and is given as the plaintive wail of a "parcel post package" in this wise:

"I am simply a 'parcel post' package, weighing twenty-eight ounces, and bearing Natal postage to the extent of three shillings (seventy-five cents).

"When my kind mistress intrusted me to the rigid rules of the postal union she plastered me up with stamps 50 per cent in excess of the regular rates. The postal authorities at Natal, South Africa, marked me O. K., and one month later I arrived in New York and came into the hands of my Uncle Sam. I was thrown out of the postoffice into an American Express Company wagon and landed at 48 (or some number) Broadway, where they attached a tag saying '25 cents, sample,' and another '25 cents, inspected.' Total, 50 cents. I arrived in Chicago in due time. My new master was delighted to receive me, but swore out a new declaration of independence when he was compelled to pay the 50 cents tribute. He laid me on a nearby table while he entered the telephone booth to call up the postoffice.

"After numerous hitches he was connected with the foreign department. If I am not greatly mistaken he asked why he was compelled to pay expressage on a package that was strictly postal union mail matter full prepaid. They told him that they really could not enlighten him on the subject, and that if the United States postal authorities at New York handed over the package to an express company it certainly must be proper, as they must have known their business. As a parting shot they told him to call up the foreign department of the American Express Company, where he might get a few points concerning the zig-zag transaction. He got the express company and was informed that the affair was a regular occurrence; that 25 cents was for sampling and the other 25 cents was for inspecting the contents of the package. When interrogated as to the right of a corporation to collect this money on bona fide mail matter the express official claimed that the government collected the money, the express company transmitting the matter gratis, or words to that effect. What relation is Uncle Sam to the American Express Company? Circumstances alter cases, and had the United States Express Company done the business my master would not have murmured, as he told me confidentially that Tom Platt is a full-fledged first cousin of Uncle Sam.

(Signed) "PARCEL POST."

It might be of interest to the people of this country if they could be informed as to how long this quiet little arrangement between our Washington officials and the express companies has been going on, also just what the text of the congressional measure is that makes this thing possible.

It is surely not a matter of economy for our postal authorities to turn over to express companies the business of "sampling," "inspecting" and delivering either foreign or domestic mail matter, and as to the express companies transmitting such matter "gratis," every one knows better. The express companies are not in business for their health, neither are they employing men and running express teams all over the country to save money for the government or accommodate the dear people.

This is "graft" pure and simple, just another case of "hold up" deliberately arranged between Washington government officials and the private corporations, which it would be wise for the people to demand an investigation of as in the case of insurance companies, and then having exposed the colored gentleman in the proverbial "woodpile," not to be satisfied with merely recounting another story of corruption in the newspapers, but take away from the guilty ones their power to continue in their unrighteous work.

As an anarchist I cannot advocate the punishment of such men, but we can consistently demand the expulsion of bribed officials from our places of government and the repeal of unjust measures which make such corruption possible. The pendulum has commenced to swing in that direction and every one who can talk or write should put forth their best effort to give greater impetus to this movement.

HULDAH L. POTTER-LOOMIS.

GOVERNMENTAL USURPATION!

In 1845 a reduction in the rates of postage was forced upon Congress by private mail companies. Hale & Kimball, also Lysander Spooner, established private mail routes, carrying letters far and near for six cents, while the government was charging, according to distance, six and a quarter cents, ten cents, twelve and a half cents, eighteen and three-quarters cents and twenty-five cents, for conveying a letter.

While Spooner's company was handling mail between Boston and Baltimore, other companies were extending routes as far west as Cincinnati.

When the government discovered that private companies were securing the transportation of the greater part of the mail, the politicians in Congress decided to prosecute the private companies and drive them out of business, but Spooner met them with the unanswerable argument that the constitution did not prohibit the carrying of mail by private individuals. Congress then abandoned the prosecution of the companies and reduced the postage on a letter to five cents for three hundred miles and to ten cents for a greater distance. Even this rate did not destroy the private companies and Congress was forced at its next session to reduce the rates of postage still lower.

About the year 1882 a private mail company in New York engaged in the business of carrying letters at two cents, while the government was still charging three cents. These men were promptly arrested and suppressed, but the government immediately reduced postage to two cents per letter.

Anent the postoffice situation may be mentioned the fact that it is now unlawful for a private postoffice to be established. The president declared this about a year ago when he refused to allow the white people in a town down south to open, at their own expense, a branch postoffice rather than take their mail from a "nigger" postmaster whom Roosevelt had appointed.

[The authorship of the above article is not recalled at this writing, but the facts stated (if truly stated) and the arguments based thereon, speak for themselves.—M. H.]

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If we could afford to write a personal letter to each of Lucifer's subscribers and helpers we should like to say many things that are neglected from week to week and month to month. Among these things would be suggestions like these:

Can you use brief histories of the American Postal Inquisition to advantage? If so, how many at 5 cents each, 25 cents per dozen or $1 per hundred?

How many back volumes of Lucifer can you use for missionary work at $1 per volume, unbound, or $1.25 bound in cloth? The price could be reduced still lower if orders enough were received to justify employing extra help to put these volumes in shape for the trade.

We do not need to say that now is the time, of all times of year, in which to reach the eye, the ear and the conscience of the great mass of readers. It is the season of longest nights and of greatest leisure. It is the season of lectures, when radical literature can be most profitably distributed. How many of the Free Speech League circulars, and how many of the "Literature of Protest," spoken of in recent editions of Lucifer, can you use to good advantage?

Again: This is the best time of year to get subscribers for Lucifer. Some of our friends are doing very well in this department of the work. Can we look to you for help in this way?

Once more only: While many of our subscribers are paid ahead, even several years ahead, others are in arrears; of others the time paid for is about to expire. As the close of the year approaches we wish, if possible, to pay all bills and start the new year with a clean record. Can you help us in this?—either on your own subscription, on subscriptions for others, or by orders for books for yourself or as holiday presents for friends, or for free propaganda work?

M. Harman.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

An old time worker for Freedom and Justice, in times past, one of the most efficient and earnest of Lucifer's helpers, now writes us as follows:

"I strongly advise you to drop all discussion of the sex question and devote your whole time, space and energy to the question of personal liberty and constitutional rights which your persecution thrusts so obtrusively forward today."

With all due respect to our good friend and brother—younger brother, though not a young man—I would say:

Yes: I wish to devote, most heartily and earnestly, my "whole time and space and energy to the question of personal liberty"—including, of course, the personal liberty of every human being as well as my own—"and constitutional rights."

Yes, certainly, if we are to use the word "constitution" in the sense in which Emerson used it when he said:

"Good and bad are but names transferable to that or this; the only right is what is after my constitution, the only wrong what is against it.?"—Essay on Self-Reliance.

By his constitution Emerson very evidently meant his own manhood, his essential humanity, his personal human nature. But if by constitutional rights our kind adviser refers to the written document called the Constitution of the United States I very respectfully would enter a mild "demurrer"—as he himself, a lawyer by profession—would say. A word of explanation just here:

I honor and respect the manhood of the men who met in secret session in the Philadelphia "convention" one hundred and eighteen years ago, but have very little feeling of respect or honor for the political document they concocted during the long secret sessions of that convention, because they put so little of their manhood into that document, and so much of their political trickery.

My private opinion, often before expressed, of the legal instrument called the Constitution of the United States, is that it is a cunningly devised automaton, a sort of "jumping jack," an elastic manikin or puppet, very convenient and handy for the use of those who wish to aggrandize themselves and serve their own personal interests at the expense of the interests of their fellow citizens.

We have placed the first amendment to the national constitution at Lucifer's mast-head, so to speak, not because we really hope for any protection therefrom, well knowing that it has long since lost its virtue, its vitality—if it ever had any virtue or vitality—but rather to show the glaring inconsistency, not to say the treachery, the perjury, of the men who enacted the Comstock postal laws and the men who now enforce those laws—all of whom took a solemn oath, a religious oath, to maintain and enforce the Constitution of the United States.

The fact itself that the "compromise agreement," as it was called by George Washington and others, the fact that the constitution as first agreed upon should need such an amendment as that prohibiting the abridgment of freedom of speech and of press, is perhaps the most serious indictment that could be brought against the compromise constitution itself, the constitution fathered by James Madison and Alexander Hamilton, both open and declared believers in the principle of monarchy and aristocracy and opposed to a republic of equal rights for all.

As I see it, and as many others see it the only national constitution ever needed is substantially embodied in the "first amendment," the Jeffersonian amendment to the Hamiltonian constitution, and might be fairly stated in words like these:

"The national congress (whenever such congress shall be needed, which under equal liberty for all must be very seldom) shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of peaceable assemblage."

If in addition to these provisions there had been inserted a prohibition against all attempts to establish a national code of morality there would have been little more needed in the matter of a national constitution; all else being left to the various states or self-governing communities to settle for themselves through free and untrammeled speech, free and untrammeled press and free public assemblage, as occasion might arise, from time to time.

This would have been in accord with the principles of personal liberty and equality enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, under which principles the battles of the colonial revolution had been fought and won.

I do not need to tell our "legal" friend that the "convention" of '87 abandoned, betrayed, nullified, crucified, the principles of the Declaration of Independence. I do not need to tell him that under the working of their political constitution all the outrages on liberty and justice that have since disgraced the national congress, the national courts and the national executive officers, have followed as things of course.

When government of man by man is inaugurated; when two distinct classes are provided for, a ruling class, a governing class, on the one hand and a ruled class, a subject class, on the other—as is so clearly and unmistakably done in and by the Constitution of the United States, then the words of Burke in the British Parliament, more than a century ago, become pertinent:

"Tell me not of the abuses of artificial government—the thing, the thing itself, is the abuse."

"Constitutional rights," then, in my honest opinion, mean the rights and privileges of the "elect" few; the rights and privileges of the men who run the governing machine, also the rights and privileges of men whose money secures the election or appointment of the rulers. Some of the leading spirits in the convention of '87 openly declared that "property" is the object of organized society, hence the men who hold the most property should have most to say in the election or appointment of the officials who make the laws and who administer the government.

Such being the true history of the formation of what is called constitutional government in this country, as I have learned it, our friend with the "legal" training should not wonder that I have no faith in "constitutional rights" for the masses of the people. "Personal liberty" we must have, if life is to be worth living. Patrick Henry was sane and rational when he said, "Give me liberty or give me death," but if we wait for liberty till we get it through such guarantees as those of the political "compromise" of 1787-9 we may wait forever!

"What then?" I shall doubtless be asked. "If you do not expect to gain liberty by demanding your constitutional rights, why do you employ lawyers to carry your case to a higher court?"

For two reasons: First, because most of the readers and supporters of Lucifer prefer that such appeal should be made; because my friends are not willing to see me go to prison without a legal effort to prevent it.

Second, because of the publicity that attends legal proceedings. To my thinking the only real ground of hope for human liberty is an educational one, and the education of the masses, the education of the public conscience, can only come through publicity.

These two reasons are sufficient as I think, but still another might be mentioned, namely, to avoid the implication, the inference, that seems to exist in the minds of many well-meaning people that I insanely covet the honors of martyrdom. This opinion was voiced by Judge Landis when he said to my lawyer:

"Your client, Mr. Stedman, seems to have formed the eccentric habit of getting himself into prison?"

I do not need to say here, as I said to the judge who sentenced me to a year in the Joliet penitentiary, that this charge, this assumption, is utterly untrue and unfounded.

Naturally I shrink from conflict of all kinds. Naturally I prefer peaceful methods. By nature and by early training I am almost a typical Quaker in my aversion to war of all kinds. But when my human sympathy for suffering is aroused I do not count the cost of defending my oppressed and enslaved sisters and brothers—whether that cost be fines, imprisonment or death itself. When vitally important principles are at stake, considerations of personal safety are ignored, are relegated to the rear, are told to "Get thee behind me, Satan!" I hope this will not be considered a boastful statement. I believe it to be simple truth.

And now to close this long article I wish to ask how many more of Lucifer's helpers think it best to "stop all discussion of the sex question and devote our whole time, space and energy to questions of personal liberty," etc.?

Just one question: If all who are working for radical reform on this and other lines were to adopt the above advice; if all reformers were to stop speaking of their particular reform and simply utter and print platitudes in favor of personal liberty, how long would it take to reform the abuses and abolish the slaveries that now afflict the human race?

M. Harman.

METHODS OF THE OPPOSITION.

"Louis F. Post, henchman of Mayor Dunne and apostle of the I. M. O., T. P. Q., O. K. B. B. propaganda, took up his sword of eloquence in defense of Editor Harman of Lucifer, the Lightbearer, a Chicago publication suppressed in January, 1904, for violating the postal laws against impure literature, in a speech before the Jefferson Club last night.

"Mr. Post declared that when the sex question was discussed from a serious point of view there should be no objection to the dissemination of literature pertaining to it.

LIKENS CENSORSHIP TO RUSSIA.

"'There is more autocracy, despotism and secrecy in the suppression of publications in this country than there is in Russia,' declared the I. M. O., T. P. Q., O. K. B. B. man. 'Perhaps it would be a good plan to send a committee to learn Russian methods of censorship. A committee should be appointed to bring the present methods of censorship to the attention of congress.

"'The Russian censor blots out objectionable paragraphs and sends the paper to its destination. In this country the whole edition is held up.'

"Post read some extracts from the 'free love' paper which he said he represented by asterisks when he used them in the "Public." He quoted from a government agricultural report in an effort to prove that its reading matter contained more phrases that might be construed as objectionable than did Lucifer. He said that Lucifer was 'plain,' but not salacious. He also said that he did not personally agree with the ideas of the editor of that sheet, but he appeared to have great sympathy for him.

MAY PRINT SPEECH.

"In a discussion that followed Post's speech it was suggested that it be printed in pamphlet form, including the material that Post omitted in printing the matter in the "Public," and that it be circulated outside the mails for the purpose of calling attention to the alleged autocratic methods used by the postmaster general in discriminating against newspapers. It also was suggested that a committee be appointed to take steps which might lead to congressional action. The questions were referred to the legislative committee of the club."

The above paragraphs are taken from the "Chicago Inter-Ocean" of Sunday, November 26. The article was distinguished by a triple head, intended, it would seem, to create a sensation and arouse prejudice not only against Lucifer and its author, but also against Mr. Post and Mayor Dunne.

The tactics of the opposition to sexual and to economic reform today seem very similar to those adopted by the supporters of chattel slavery in the days of Wendell Phillips and of Garrison the elder, and for much the same reason. Then "vested rights" were at stake. Then many millions of money were invested in human flesh, blood and bones. Black men, black women and even black babies—or those having as much as a sixteenth infusion of the blood of the African race—could be sold by the public crier, just as horses, mules, cows or bales of cotton could be sold by the public crier.

In much the same way vested interests are at stake now. Wives are considered to have a money value, as shown by the civil suits by husbands for the recovery of marital rights, and by the fact that the husband is justified by public opinion, in many sections of the country, in taking the life of the man who happens to be more attractive to his wife sexually than is the husband himself.

The suggestion that Mr. Post's speech should be printed and "circulated outside the mails" recalls the fact that it was not always a crime for the people to organize their own postal system. Read the article reproduced elsewhere in this issue that tells of what was accomplished in this way by Lysander Spooner and others before Russian Bureaucracy took possession of the United States government.

HOW TO MAKE THE MOVEMENT A SUCCESS.

It must often have struck persons in the sex movement that we do not make as good a showing as might be expected from our numbers. Sex is an interesting subject to everybody, and a vast number of people know and feel the evils of the present system. The popular excitement over Bernard Shaw's plays and such novels as "The Woman Who Did" shows that there is plenty of material for a strong sex movement. Yet public officials find our movement easier to persecute than any other.

The reason is that we are wholly unorganized. There is no fact of history more certain than the enormous power of organization. Look at the Roman Catholic Church. It is far from having a majority of the church people of the United States, but it is stronger than all the churches together, because of its tremendous organization. Look at the Order of Jesuits. Throughout most of its history it has been hated by almost everybody, yet it has again and again ruled nations, and today after much persecution it is as strong as ever. Look at Tammany Hall. I do not suppose there has ever been a time when the majority of New York voters wanted Tammany to govern them; yet it nearly always does govern them because of its organization.

Even small and unpopular organizations can often impose their will on an inert majority. The temperance people are nearly everywhere disliked, but they have won victory after victory all the same. The woman suffrage organization is a very small affair, and it is doubtful if it ever had the sympathy of a majority of men or women in any community. Yet in one place after another woman suffrage has been won by the pertinacity of a few.

It is time to organize the sex movement. Let a convention be called in Chicago or some other central place, and let a national organization be formed, with local organizations in all the centers of population. Let these organizations show their representatives in congress and the state legislatures that they are alive. Then it will not be long before Superintendent Hull takes off his hat every time he meets the editor of Lucifer.

MORE GOVERNMENT "OBSCENITY."

The pruriest postal Pecksniffs who have decided that any discussion of the relations of the sexes is immoral are having some difficulty in keeping United States government officials from violating the very rulings which are relied upon to exclude LUCIFER from transmission through the postoffice.

It will be remembered that a recent issue of LUCIFER was confiscated and was not allowed to go through the mails because Paul Hull, superintendent of second-class mail in the Chicago postoffice, decided that a passage from a report of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, which was reprinted in that issue of LUCIFER, was obscene.

But now comes the Rev. Thomas B. Wood with a vehement charge that the United States government is assailing the sanctity of legal marriage by shipping several hundred women from the island of Martinique to Panama as "companions" for the workmen engaged to construct the Panama canal.

When Henry Burnett, who is in charge of the United States Department of Labor and Quarters on the Isthmus, was asked what excuse there was for bringing the three hundred women to Panama, he frankly replied:

"No excuse. It was the only thing we could do to keep our laborers here. Any one who has had any experience with the West Indian negroes knows they won't work at any place without their women. What has been done is always done by all employers of such labor on great works. We were losing fully a third of our men, and had to stop it. The men said if their wives were brought over they would be more contented. There was great need of servants by American families and in the commission hotels. The Martinique women are cleaner in their habits, and make better servants, than those from Jamaica. So we decided, as we had about two thousand Martinique men here, and will have more, we would begin by bringing over their women. An agent was sent to tell those who had men on the isthmus, and those who did not have, but who wanted work, that they would be brought here free and given food and quarters until they were settled. Three hundred have come. We have an agent in Jamaica now who will allow every sixth laborer to bring his wife with him. Every third foreman is granted the same privilege. It's the only way we can get them."

"Don't you consider their relations immoral, and don't you know that the people of the United States may object to the continuance of such relations on its soil under the sanction and by the act of its government?" Mr. Burnett was asked.

"I can't see why they should," was the reply. "We are down here to build this canal. What have the morals of a lot of West Indian negroes got to do with it? I assert that they are not immoral in preferring to live with a woman without a marriage ceremony. They may be unmoral—that is, without morals as we understand morality—but they are ofttimes truer to the woman they select than our people, who have a ceremony performed. Not one in a thousand or five thousand of the natives of those islands or in Central or South America gets married. They can't afford it. Marriage to them means a great and expensive ceremony, complete wardrobe and a well furnished house. They won't marry without all this. We ask them to come over here to work for us, and they ask us to send for their wives. It is decided to do so. All I require as the acting head of the Branch of Labor and Quarters is that a woman says such a man is her husband. It isn't for me to ask for a marriage certificate."

Commenting on this matter "Town Topics," a New York paper, which by the way was not excluded from the mails for discussing the subject, pertinently remarked:

"Softly, softly! The clerical cranks, on and off the Isthmus, who are trying to kick up a hullabaloo because the workmen on the Panama canal have been supplied with wives, sacrilegiously forget that the system was originated in the Garden of Eden, and its wisdom has never before been disputed."

JONATHAN MAYO CRANE.

GARRISON THE NON-RESISTANT.

The greatest apostle of abolition, William Lloyd Garrison, was born in Newburyport, Mass., December 10, 1805. The centenary of his birth is suitably marked by the publication of Ernest Crosby's notable book, "Garrison the Non-Resistant."

It is a sympathetic sketch of Garrison's career which considers slavery and the Civil War from an entirely original point of view. In the opinion of the author President Lincoln made a radical mistake in undertaking to coerce the seceding States, and the enthusiasm for the "Union" of sections which hated each other he regards as immoral in itself and the source of prolific subsequent evils, including the growth of the sentiments of imperialism and militarism, together with the foundation of the trusts and the aggravation of the labor problem. That the war failed to settle the race question is obvious. If the "erring sisters" had been allowed to go, slavery would, he thinks, have died a natural death, and the States would have reunited, the race question having been peacefully and genuinely solved.

Even those who fail to accept this view of history will find it interesting and full of suggestion, and the account of Garrison's life and the record of the personal observations of the author in the South of today are both vivid and entertaining.

Published by the Public Publishing Company, First National Bank Building, Chicago, 16mo, 144 pages, with photogravure portrait of Garrison, 50 cents net. For sale at this office.

PURITANISM ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

In a valley among the hills of Radnorshire (writes the Hon. Stephen Coleridge in the "Westminster Gazette") lies the little sleepy town of Presteigne. The pendulum of life has swung slowly and dreamily there for centuries. It might be cited as a place that had never known one day to differ from another save by the changes of the seasons and the process of the calendar.

But in the early days of this century it was, in fact, the scene of such a pitiful tragedy as cannot easily be surpassed in the annals of suffering humanity.

Mary Morgan was sweet and comely when she came into Radnorshire, a child of sixteen, and within a year she was hanged by the neck at the four cross-roads, outside the town, and buried in a place apart as a mark of ignominy.

At her feet they reared a black slate, barring her, as it were, from the East and its hopes, and on the slate they wrote these words:

"To the Memory of Mary Morgan, who, young and beautiful, endowed with a good understanding and disposition, but unenlightened by the sacred truths of Christianity,
became the victim of sin and shame,
and was condemned to an ignominious death on the 11th of April, 1805, for the murder of her child.

"Roused to a fine sense of guilt and remorse by the eloquent and humane exertions of her benevolent judge, Mr. Justice Hardinge, she underwent the sentence of the law the following Thursday with unfeigned repentance and a fervent hope of forgiveness through the merits of a redeeming Intercessor.

"This stone is erected not merely to perpetuate the remembrance of a departed penitent, but to remind the living of the frailty of human nature when unsupported by religion."

* * * * * * *

Thus did Mary Morgan dream that love was divine and a foretaste of heaven, and awake to find it the road to perdition and the gateway of death.

The benevolence of her judge and the humanity of his exertion may be fitly measured by the fact that he refrained from exercising his power to delay the execution beyond the then customary period of forty-eight hours from the sentence, and thereby rendered the obtaining of a reprieve almost an impossibility.

And where was the man that brought this poor child to the bar of man's condemnation and God's anger, that betrayed her for his pleasure and abandoned her for his convenience, that prompted her to destroy the evidence of what she had believed was love, but what proved to be insult?

Was he standing near to share, as far as the law would allow, her agony and punishment? or was he at home on his knees bowed down with self-condemnation and remorse?

No! Not there; but upon the bench, in the panoply of the office of high-sheriff of his county—an office enforcing upon him the awful duty of carrying the execution into effect. Upon the judge's right hand sat the father of Mary Morgan's child!

The jurymen were marvelously good men! Never a one would risk his soul to save poor Mary Morgan's life, and so for conscience sake they resisted the prickings of pity.

But though his honest name has not come down to us, there was one gallant gentleman whose manhood bade him take horse to London, 160 miles and back, to seek and obtain a reprieve. He got it, indeed, but only after precious hours lost; and though we may be sure that as he galloped through the night under the stars what man and beast could do was done, yet, alas! for Mary Morgan! love and death were the same to her when he reached the four cross-roads.

He could do no more for her living, but I think it must have been he that put the little headstone to her grave with no more upon it than this:

In Memory of Mary Morgan, who suffered April 13th, 1805.
"He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her."

The big black slate at her feet records the verdict of religion; but the little stone at her head proclaims the judgment of Christ. A hundred years are passing away since she was taken from prison to judgment, and from judgment to execution, and from execution to the grave. There under the grass she lies, her broken heart long commingled with the dust, and if she be not forgiven there is no mercy in the sweet heavens!

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. M. CRANE, Chicago.—I am always glad to do anything I can to aid the cause for which you are battling so nobly. I feel sure the battle will result eventually in victory for honest common sense and the betterment of humanity. I am, as ever, in fullest sympathy with your work.

L. E. HUGGINS, Omaha, Neb.—I hear nothing definite as to what the U. S. P. O. Department is doing with you. I am sure, however, that whatever they do on Comstockism lines will only sink them deeper into the muck of inconsistency and persecution. You have some splendid associates, Shaw and McFadden for instance, and Post as well. You have my sympathy.

M. C. POWERS, Paskenta, Calif.—Have written to the President as requested by the Free Speech League. Hope every reader will do the same. It is time that we awake and stand for our rights, and never give up until we get them. We are fast being chained with shackles such as no black chattel ever wore. Enclosed find one dollar to be added to the expense account, also P. O. stamps for extra postage on LUCIFER.

J. B. PHINNEY, Springfield, Mo.—Disgusted as I am with my recent experience with law and courts you may place my name on the list for $1 per month till all costs are paid in support of Comrade Verity's idea. The only fault that I can find with your latest pamphlet is that it is not unconventional enough; not radical enough to wake the mossbacks up to a just sense of their moral duty to themselves and their children. Yours for truth, justice and morality.

IRVING LLEWELLYN, Oyster Point, Va.—Kindly apply the small amount yet due me to the cause of the revered editor. My Virginian blood boils with indignation as I read of the illegal and unconstitutional methods pursued by the postoffice department in its attempts to suppress LUCIFER. I directed a letter of remonstrance to the powers that be in Washington with the result that I, an obscure fourth-class postmaster, am threatened with dismissal from office, which action, I may add, I shall greatly welcome.

MRS. L. M. A., Ohio.—I wish to renew my subscriptions to LUCIFER and will also promise $1 to help circulate the paper. Please discontinue the extra copy your have been sending to me for another lady. She has returned to her home and her husband will not allow her to receive LUCIFER. She was educated in a convent and although no longer a Catholic she still holds their views concerning divorce. Her husband has money, but he is not fit for any decent woman to live with. And still your paper shocks him so terribly that he will not allow her to receive it while she bears his name.

WALTER HUEY, Cincinnati, Ohio.—"The Right to Be Born Well" is not only an important, but an invaluable, addition to the none too abundant literature of eugenics. Its strong and commandning quality must commend it to all real thinkers, while the absence of any suggestion of pedantry should make it a most effective agent in popularizing a subject of paramount human interest, concerning which there is yet an amazing ignorance on the part of general society. Dignity and good taste characterize the work throughout. The dedication is altogether admirable; it especially appeals to me with directness and force.

A. F. HILL, Boston, Mass.—Today, Dec. 1, 1905, I received a copy of LUCIFER, Nov. 23, 1905. I have no copy of any number between the above date and that of Oct. 12, 1905. I received a letter from California telling me about an item in LUCIFER that I had not received. We are in hard lines for a free press, and at times a gag on free speech is tried. I hope no terrible scenes are to be enacted to regain liberties lost by inaction of dead-minded Americans. I hope you have copies to send me of the missing numbers.

[Will gladly supply all missing numbers as far as possible.—M. H.]

J. F. P., Austin, Ill.—Why is it that the truth is so hard for people to grasp? It seems man is only interested in the carnal—the people to grasp? It seems man is only interested in the carnal—the higher evolution is out of the question. Coming home the other night after my day's work I met a leader in the "Holiness" church, who referred in his conversation to this very point, but could not understand the right of the child to be well born nor the evil in the birth of unwelcome children. Having a large family himself he yet could not see his responsibility, claiming that he followed a course of nature that could not be otherwise. In regard to your request I shall make a strong effort and hope I may succeed in getting subscribers for your much needed paper.

EMMA WARDLAW BEST, Ile Moyenne, Seychelles, Indian Ocean.—I hope you are getting on without a too dreadful time. When I think you are the only "friend" to woman who sees all and "sees it whole" I know why you are hated. I could never get subscribers here. The people speak French and may be said to be apathetic to everything except how to get or steal a rupee and buy a filthy drink, which makes them ill. The women who are black get on all right. The others try to imagine themselves superior, but are treated in the most degrading fashion. These are tiny islands and yet two girls, mostly white, have committed suicide since my being here for the old reason. I daresay a good many more, but these I knew of. They are so slavish that nothing rouses them. I send you an appalling story of Comstockism of exactly one hundred years ago. Please print it in full if possible. The writer is the son of Lord Coleridge, once our chief judge, now dead. Last mail I sent you accounts of Lord Roberts' procesez.

EDWIN P. LUDWIG, Washington, D. C.—Have you gotten out Nos. 1047 (Aug. 31) and 1048 (Sept. 7) as yet? I have not received either of these and presume it may be another case of holdup. It is outrageous the way the postoffice department is treating you, and I do trust you may be able to get the best of them in the fight. The truth is bound to triumph in the long run, but it is very hard for some of its earlier prophets to make much headway; but cheer up and be of good courage, for the right is on your side.

[Yes, we published Nos. 1047, 1048 and also 1049, and now are getting out 1050. Our friends should always let us know promptly whenever they miss a number.]

SAM COHEN, New York.—I do not see what I can do in co-operation with the Free Speech League as most of my acquaintances are Russian Jews who do not understand English. I think some circulars at least—though the want of literature on the subject of sex reform generally is very great—ought to be printed in the Jewish language. Then not only I could use them but many others could do much more. Such people as Dr. Cohen of Brooklyn, M. Kats, and Emma Goldman could do worlds of good with them. I will undertake to contribute 25 cents a month, while able, to help defray the expense of circulating LUCIFER during the period of its attempted suppression.

[The suggestion contained in the foregoing seems worth consideration. What say our Jewish friends?]

A. B. C., Montreal, Canada.—Thanks for reminding me that my subscription is due. I enclose $1.50, which I much regret is all I can manage to send you in these troublous times for LUCIFER and yourself. I do not write a protest to President Roosevelt, for you see I am not a subject of King Theodore but one of the "effete monarchy" of King Edward, hence a kick from me would hardly look well, as I presume I have no legal standing in the matter of loss of my papers. But American citizens ought to kick and kick hard and stop the silly petitioning business as you well say. This smacks too much of the days of serfdom in the dark and dismal past, but "superstitions die hard." I do wish I could quit this old city and live in some place where there were a few more radicals. I am practically isolated here since Capt. Adams' death. Do you know of any radical and progressive persons in the New England states or Eastern Canada who would care to correspond with a thoroughly "emancipated" radical like myself? To know even one or two such would help to make life worth living to me. If you can be of any service to me in this respect I shall be deeply thankful. I hope your health remains fairly good and that you will be enabled to carry on your good work.

HENRY E. ALLEN, Benton Harbor, Mich.—The letter in your last issue by D. Webster Groh, it seems to me, is even worse in some respects than the Russian censorship under which LUCIFER is now suffering. It is worse because it misrepresents the position of more than ten million who are now struggling, first, that every worker shall have the right to work; and, second, that every worker shall have the social product of his toil; third, that every one shall be held responsible for his acts.

If socialism would in any manner countenance the despotism we have in government today I would be as much opposed to it as Mr. Groh can possibly be.

A government administered by plutocrats should in no way be confounded with socialism. It is safe to say that 99 socialists out of every 100 are as much opposed to Comstockism as Mr. Groh. The intolerance of any postal censorship appeals to every intelligent socialist in such a manner that he is willing if necessary to shoulder a gun in the defense of the first amendment to the United States Constitution.

Mr. Groh need not borrow any trouble on account of the despotism of socialism, for in all probability long before we secure socialism it will be necessary for every socialist, as well as every lover of liberty, to come to the front in defense of free speech and free press.

It will probably be only a short time before socialist papers will be treated as LUCIFER is now being treated. So we should all stand together.

FRANK D. BLUE, editor "Vaccination," Kokomo, Ind.—Social Freedom, by Hulda L. Potter-Loomis, published by M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago. Price 20 cents. This pamphlet deals with the unpopular subject of sex, which, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. Some one has said it is never safe to guess unless you know. I now confess I do not know, but it will be my guess that notwithstanding its present unpopularity the subject as well as experiments along the line of sex relationships will go on until a basis satisfactory to the vast majority will be reached. What that basis will be I have not the temerity to think. I know of one thing I am fully convinced: Women will settle it to suit themselves and all man made laws and customs to the contrary will have to "go way back and sit down." The pamphlet is epigramatic in style and selections cannot do it justice. The author's contentions are radical, but lose none of their interest from that fact. It is necessary to shock people to get them to think, yet they must be awakened for progress to come. It is always well to know what the other fellow thinks, and this book will inform you.

JOHN GUMTZ, Antigo, Wis.—I have the greatest respect for you, and will do anything for you in my means, which just now don't amount to anything, but will never ask anything of President Roosevelt till he retracts his statement about Thomas Paine. That is to say, there is no one more ready to kneel at the feet of the poor mothers and fathers, of the sincere and true of those who love and sympathize with their fellows, but never will I cringe at the feet of a tyrant; better a hundred times that I'd starve or perish.

I think the International Freethought Congress made a terrible mistake in sending Mr. Roosevelt their thanks. Had the war continued many more on both sides might have perished, but the wholesale massacre of the Jews would hardly have occurred. For one, I am so much opposed to the President that I do not care to talk about him much less to write him.

WHAT HURTS 'EM.

A number of correspondents write us in derision of any protest against the sternly virtuous attitude of most of the New York dramatic critics in regard to a well-known play written by the chief British vegetarian.

Presumably some of those virtuous critics can read. Presumably they had read the play in question long before it was produced in this town. Yet they treated it, even in a version Bowdlerized for their benefit, as some new and appalling gospel of social immorality. They pumped up moral indignation. They withered and blasted the play and its wicked author. The Sarceys of West Hurley or Hohokus couldn't have shown a more edifying disposition or a more impressive intellectual equipment.

Faithful warders of the walls of Manhattan-Podunk. Much they can stand and have stood, but not intelligence. That hurts 'em.—N. Y. "Sun."

LOVE'S WAY TO PERFECT HUMANHOOD.
By Agnes Benham.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 74, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia. Orders may be sent through this office.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book. "Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

CENSORED BY THE POSTAL AUTHORITIES BEFORE DELIVERY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, ILL., DEC. 21, E. M. 305 [E. C. 1905]. WHOLE NO. 1065

THE LICENSE OF THE PUBLIC PRESS.

The fathers of this republic demanded freedom of speech and press. License and privilege are not liberty. The press of today is not free, its freedom is abridged by public opinion, conventionalism, taste, propriety, narrowness, and last, but not least, by the postal censorship. With the exception of the last these have always limited the freedom of the public press, sometimes for the better and at other times for the worse.

Public opinion is becoming more and more tolerant, while the regard for conventionalities diminishes day by day. Still, in the South, an editor hardly dares to speak against the lynching of negroes, for fear of being mobbed and of losing many of his subscribers.

Taste and propriety are becoming more and more prominent until today vulgarity and indecency can only be found in those periodicals which cater to the saloons, barber shops and subway taverns.

The postal censorship is endeavoring to exterminate indecency and immorality, but it has judged erroneously, and so far has only attacked the pure and decent. Comstock has taken for his foundation rock the idea that the nude is the impure. He believes that mankind is totally depraved, and that such unveiling is very immoral.

There is only one method by which every questionable case can be judged correctly and with justice to its author and his work, which is to ask him to read the same aloud to his mother, sisters, children and the public without experiencing the least of shame. The obscene will thereby be condemned by its own author, whereas the nude, the pure, the true and the worthy will survive the test and be the lovelier and the purer for it.

Comstockism is depriving us of the roses of life, whereas it has either lacked the courage to tackle the thorns and briars or it has entirely overlooked them. The American people should protest against his absurd methods, and require him to judge his victims by the above-mentioned test, or leave the matter entirely to individual mothers and fathers.

The habit that some reporters and interviewers have of gleaning bits of family affairs, heart secrets, et cetera, from the unwary and making the same common property tends to break up the peace of home and friendship generally. Nothing breathes so much of the confessional and nothing can be more distasteful to the pure-minded.

Jealousy is frequently found among the smaller newspapers. If these papers would know how suicidal such envy is, they would entertain more friendship for their rivals, who probably have won greater success by more intelligent methods. Nothing is so apparent, and nothing so abhorrent to newspaper readers, as this loathsome worm gnawing upon the soul of a paper and slowly poisoning it to death with its venom.

JOHN GUMTZ.

PROFIT BY INIQUITY.

[James H. Barry, editor of the "Star," San Francisco, Cal., is certainly doing a great work in holding up the mirror—of "publicity"—to enable the editors of the great city dailies to see themselves as others see them. In a recent issue, under the above heading, he has something to say in regard to certain gambling advertisements found in the daily papers of his own city, and, in passing, raises the pertinent inquiry why the postal censorship should discriminate in favor of the large and wealthy publications and against the small and comparatively poor journals, such as "Our Dumb Animals" and LUCIFER.]

The San Francisco daily press is always ready to aid and abet any form of swindling, "at regular advertising rates." From lotteries to "crystal-gazing," they advertise them all, and encourage the confiding public to gamble where it is certain to lose.

In every Sunday paper may be found shrieking laudations of certain fakirs who advertise to foretell the future and show the way to wealth and happiness for the small sum of one dollar per gentlemen; ladies, fifty cents.

Now that racing has begun at Oakland, a new horde of swindlers has appeared, all of whom are able to use the daily papers as accomplices in their work of bunkoing the feeble-minded portion of the community. These swindlers advertise that they have tips to sell on the races. They are touts and daggers-in for the harpies who ruin our young men and women by race-track gambling, and every daily paper of San Francisco is acting as tout and dagger-in for them.

The curious part of it all is that these newspapers are able to go through the United States mails; and that the frauds who advertise "tips for sale" are also able to say, "send remittances by registered mail." The "get-rich-quick" companies—some of them—have been put out of business by the fraud orders of the postoffice department. Unless favoritism is to be shown this new crop of frauds should be likewise barred from the use of the mails.

And, in this connection, we may revert to the fact that progressive journals are denied the mails and their editors sometimes prosecuted and sent to prison for no other reason than that they dare to print what they think, and because what they think is not in harmony with the views of the "powers that be."

We have in mind Mr. Angell, the venerable and gentle soul who edits "Our Dumb Animals"—a monthly publication devoted to humanity. Because he roundly criticised President Roosevelt for shooting deer, "just for sport," on his recent hunting trip, his paper was "held up" by the postal authorities. He was more fortunate than Moses Harman, editor of a little paper called LUCIFER, published in Chicago. Mr. Harman, unlike Mr. Angell, has no "influential connections"; therefore, not only has his paper been repeatedly suppressed, but he was once sent to the penitentiary, whither the authorities are now trying to send him again, for the grave offense of defending sacred rights of womanhood, which, under the law as interpreted, is "obscene literature." We have read the articles for which he and his paper were condemned, and have failed to find one word in them that could offend any but a bestial mind. Can as much be said of the advertisements in our daily papers of "massage artists," quack doctors, nostrums for and against "race suicide," etc.?—"Star," San Francisco.

THE KING OF PRUDES.

Bernarr McFadden in his magazine, "Physical Culture," for December, the "Christmas Number," devotes three pages to Anthony Comstock, and an account of his own arrest by that "prince of prudes." The last page of this indictment reads as follows:

The most infernal enemy of the boys and girls of this country, and of all countries where the English language is spoken and read, is Comstock. He is the quintessence of prudery. It is he who has persistently stood for the suppression of truth in reference to the human body. It is he who has fought with insane intensity against the very pure thought that comes to the human mind in reference to the divine mysteries of human life. "Keep your children in ignorance of all sex matters," is his policy. If you fill their minds full of obscene vileness on all subjects of this nature, you will be putting into practice Comstock's theories in the most minute detail.

Comstock stands for all that is impure, salacious and obscene. He is the man who would keep a mother from warning a daughter against evils that she must surely combat at some time in her life. He is the man who would say "Hush!" to the father who informs his son of the physiological truths which are absolutely essential to the latter's protection as he grows to manhood. He stands for mystery, secrecy, ignorance, superstition, and for the most depraved conceptions of all that should be divine and holy.

Although heretofore we have never mentioned Comstock in the pages of this magazine, yet we have nevertheless fought his principles with the utmost intensity almost from the first issue of this publication. We will fight him and his theories on to the bitter end. We believe that his downfall will ultimately come when the truth in regard to him is fully known. We believe that he has looked upon the vile and vulgar so long that his mind has actually become a sewer for mental filth. We believe that his presence and his influence have had a frightfully demoralizing and deteriorating influence upon mankind. In city or country, in the home or in the school, in the office, in the factory, or amid the throngs of people that pass you on the streets of our great cities, you will find that nearly every individual has been affected by the deteriorating influences of Comstockery, or what is perhaps better known as prudery.

He, the King of Prudes, has made a continuous fight for the suppression of that knowledge which would have enabled millions of individuals to avoid evils that are at the root of nearly all their physical defects. There are thousands upon thousands of physical wrecks, poor, miserable sufferers, whose pain-racked bodies have been made possible only because of the habits that they have fallen into for the want of the knowledge that Comstock suppresses.

The great crime of the country at present is prudery. It saps the vitality and blights the life of nearly every individual. Comstock and the policy that he represents are the main cause of it all. That the people may rise in their might and rend the Satanic power represented by Comstock limb from limb and scatter it to the four winds of heaven is the wish of the writer.

(In future issues of this magazine my readers will be given full details of the controversy that Comstock has inaugurated in connection with my arrest for circulating alleged obscene pictures. If any friends desire to help us in this fight, either financially or by lending us their aid in other ways, I would be pleased to hear from them. Legal talent is especially needed and will be welcomed.)

TRANSLATION OF LETTER.

Comrade Moses Harman, Editor of LUCIFER: In reply to your letter concerning the prosecution of LUCIFER please see my declaration on the subject, which you may publish in LUCIFER if you so desire. I send you "L'Ordre Naturel," which I have just published. Will you have the impartiality to insert the following announcement of it among the advertisements in LUCIFER? Thanking you in advance, I am, your well wisher. HENRI ZISLY.

Just published "L'Ordre Natural," an advocate of anti-scientific liberty. Subscription voluntary. Contains articles by Spiros Gay, Emile Gravelle, H. Gilot, H. Beylie, Elisée Reclus, Henri Zisly, Ch. Laurent, etc. Address Comrade Henri Zisly, 14 Rue Jean Robert, Paris, France.

[Here is the Declaration just referred to:]

PARIS, Nov. 14.—Moses Harman, Editor of LUCIFER: Although not approving absolutely the neo-Malthusian theory in every particular (see my notes on this subject in "L'Ordre Natural") I do approve and advocate, to the extent of my ability, that part of it which I believe to be best. But the thing which I unqualifiedly condemn is any attempt of the government against the liberty to write, to think and to act. In the prosecution of LUCIFER the American judges are following the example of their pseudo-puritan colleagues of the Spanish inquisition, who are persecuting "Salud y Fuerza," the organ of the Spanish regenerators. Perhaps it is for the best, for the persecutions inevitably result in giving more impetus to the regenerative propaganda. But let us not deceive ourselves. We have nothing except evil to expect from any government whatsoever. Salvation can come only from the individual initiative.

HENRI ZISLY.

SYMPATHY FROM THE OLD WORLD.

At the congress of the Universal Federation of Human Regeneration, held at Liege, Belgium, last September, Paul Robin, editor of "Regeneration," published in Paris, France, reported to the congress the prosecution and conviction of the editor of LUCIFER. Dr. Luis Bulffi, founder of the Neo-Malthusian League of Spain, sent a letter of regret, in which he said:

"Although recent persecutions have made it impossible for us to send a direct delegate to this congress, these prosecutions have not retarded our work, since we have in Spain a great number of practical neo-Malthusians. The Spanish League, although it is not an organized society, have a publication called "Salud y Fuerza" (suppressed at present), having a circulation of 4,000 copies."

Proof of the acceptation of Malthusian doctrines in Spain is found in the fact that this paper was published through the cooperation of thirty-six local societies and was distributed gratuitously. Another guarantee of the vitality of Malthusianism is that since the suppression of "Salud y Fuerza" the societies of the league have begun the publication of a new paper along the same lines called "El Nuevo Malthusiano."

The congress gave a vote of sympathy to these victims of governmental persecution.

"RACE SUICIDE."

WHEREAS, The President has rebuked the women of the nation because of not bearing more children under conditions which cause half of those born to die before they are five years of age, and,

WHEREAS, We, as a people, are beginning to learn that a knowledge of the laws of creative life from the standpoint of nature, science and human experience is one of the requisites to healthy, happy, long-lived children, and,

WHEREAS, The obscenity law has been perverted from its legitimate use to prevent, as far as is possible, parents from gaining such knowledge, therefore,

We, the undersigned, as mothers of the race, DEMAND of congress the repeal of all laws that tend to hinder the full and free discussion of the relation that brings parentage, not only to secure our own health and happiness, but to disabuse the President's mind of the fear of race suicide:

Name. Address.

COMRADE HARMAN: A few of us are contemplating sending out circulars like the above to see how many of our women are willing to sign such a demand, but would like to hear from the comrades at large before fully deciding on the wisdom of such a course. If a large number of names are thus obtained it will tend to put courage into the hearts of the timid if nothing more, and it is a declaration that women have something to say on this question. If we do take the step we want the help of our brothers in getting such signatures. Let us hear from you, friends. Address L. W. Nichols, or Miss E. Richards, Gibbs, Cal.

PROTEST.

We, the undersigned persons, seriously protest against the arbitrary and unconstitutional method by the government of the United States of North America by means of which a free press is being throttled; of mail matter of private individuals being denied transmission through the mail by the government; of the unwarranted censorship and suppression of literature through other than constitutional judicial procedure, and of the governmental confiscation and destruction of private property without due process of law as based upon the spirit of the national constitution.

The government of the United States is divided into three separate and distinct branches, namely, the legislative, the judicial and the executive.

The office of the legislative branch is the creation of law; the function of the judiciary to pass upon the constitutionality of that law and to render judgment against its violation, while the executive department implies the administration of constitutional law.

It should be borne in mind that constitutionally the legislative branch of government has no judicial or administrative power; the judicial branch, no legislative or administrative power, and the executive branch, no legislative or judicial power.

No legislative body can confer unconstitutional power without making such power a farce.

Each branch of the government should remain within its constitutional orbit.

Legal does not necessarily mean constitutional.

In this broad light we address the following letter to the President of the United States:

Theodore Roosevelt:

As the chief executive of the United States of North America you are under oath to secure to the citizen his constitutional rights. As individuals we demand those rights, for a denial to one endangers the rights of all.

The postal department, which is represented in your official cabinet and which is purely administrative in its nature, is to-day exercising judicial power.

This power is arbitrary and invasive as well as unconstitutional and equivalent to malfeasance in office. It exercises a censorship which is judicial, not administrative. Government officials are tampering with post paid mail which is a criminal offense.

By what authority does the government deliberately destroy the mail and private property of individuals without due process of law? The postal department has no constitutional judicial power.

Among the constitutional rights of the citizen is that of free speech, free press, free assemblage and a jury trial in defense of life and property. The constitutional rights of a government official are neither more nor less than those of a private citizen.

If a disregard of the constitution by a private citizen in your estimation is anarchy then it logically follows that official disregard for the same must be official anarchy. You cannot condemn one and excuse the other. If your conception of anarchy is correct and you really want to stamp it out the postal officials are the ones to attack and now is the time to begin.

If the government has any grievance let it prosecute, not persecute.

The postal department is doing its utmost to destroy the LUCIFER newspaper. No postmaster has the right to burglarize the private mail of an individual any more than individuals have the right to burglarize houses. When the government accepts postage it is constitutionally bound to deliver mailed matter.

The censorship of the press is not an administrative duty, and, therefore, should be taken away from the postal department.

LUCIFER suppression is not by any means the only case which could be cited. The persecution of any paper endangers the freedom of the press through the land. Civilization in a large measure depends upon a free press. The LUCIFER newspaper case puts the government squarely on record as to whether it stands for legal prosecution or illegal persecution; for the protection of life and property according to the constitution, or for the destruction of life and property in defiance of the constitution.

Uncle Sam needs to do a little house-cleaning himself.

The whole motive back of this persecution is to prevent sex education and sex emancipation.

Anthony Comstock, with his thin moral veneer in this persecution, is the chief instigator in seeking the destruction of a free press.

We hold that a free press, free speech and free assemblage are the only safeguards of civil and religious liberty.

We do not want any puritanical inquisitorial censorship of the press, nor any interference with free speech or free assembly.

We want the widest competition in thought and the freedom of conscience.

Under free conditions the best will win out.

Only the weak shun investigation.

Orthodox tyranny has no right to dictate the social conduct of any one.

Respectfully submitted. Signatures.

[The above protest was signed by many citizens in Ohio, then forwarded to Washington, D. C.]

BOOKS, OLD AND NEW.

On the Duty of Civil Disobedience, by Henry D. Thoreau, author of "Walden: or Life in the Woods"; "A Week on the Concord," etc. As mottoes the publisher selects these sentences:

"I think we should be men first and subjects afterward. It is not desirable to cultivate a respect for the law so much as for the right. * * * A few men who serve the state with their consciences also, necessarily resist it for the most part."—Thoreau.

"All our liberties are due to men who, when their conscience has compelled them, have broken the laws of the land."—Dr. Clifford.

Published by J. W. Gott, at the office of the "Truth Seeker," Bradford, England, price 1 shilling. Sent from this office for 30 cents in stamps. Some of the characteristic sayings of this book are these:

"Morality is a matter for the individual soul; you cannot teach it, nor preach it, nor legislate for it. There can be no system of morality; the term is a reductio ad absurdum. Moralists are probably the greatest helpers of vice. By law you can prevent the public exhibition of vice, but you cannot prevent the private inception of it. Morality belongs to the Infinite. It is light, and like Goethe, what all men, and especially all women, want is MORE LIGHT."

Woman's Source of Power, by Lois Waisbrooker.

"I hold it as an axiom that we cannot desire that which the Universal Life does not hold for us, when we know how to take it. Otherwise we should have capacities which the universe could not fill—a manifest absurdity."

In her preface Mrs. Waisbrooker says: "This preface and poem, as used in 'My Century Plant,' is even more suitable here. I am well aware that the demand here made for woman will be accepted by but few as yet, but the number is increasing, and among both sexes. Truth, once born into human consciousness, will finally do its work no matter how received at first. The great world now pays little heed, but the truth involved is woman's freedom is here, and here to stay till the voice of arbitrary authority is no longer heard and woman's love redeems the world."

Published by the "Alliance of the Rockies," Denver, Colo. Price, 25 cents. For sale at LUCIFER's office.

Up to Date Fables, by R. B. Kerr. Published by E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York City. Price, 25 cents. These fables were first published in LUCIFER's columns some years ago, and now for the first time put into booklet form. The author of "Up to Date Fables" needs no word of commendation from us. The readers of LUCIFER have had ample opportunity to form an opinion of such writers as Lois Waisbrooker and R. B. Kerr. For missionary work along radical lines our friends can scarcely do better than to order freely of these three books, "Duty of Civil Disobdience," "Woman's Source of Power," and "Up to Date Fables." Reductions to those who buy for distribution.

C. S. WHITE.

I think my LUCIFER friends (some of whom knew Mr. C. S. White personally, others through his relation to me) will be interested to hear that he passed to the higher life on Dec. 8, 1905. He had been an invalid for five years; bedfast and suffering a great deal of that time, and entirely helpless for the past seven months.

His easy, peaceful death, the expression on his dead face of quiet repose and freedom from pain—an expression his face had not worn for years—seemed to indicate a happy release from earthly pain. He was a free thinker, a spiritualist part of his life and hoped for a continuation of life beyond the grave, meeting death without fear. I do not consider it a reflection on his character (or on mine) as a free thinker that a Methodist minister conducted his funeral services. Knowing our belief he was broad-minded enough to give a very appropriate and touching address. He had read and admired many of Mr. White's poems and read most beautifully an appropriate selection from them over the grave.

Lake Charles La. MRS. LILLIE D. WHITE.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

There is no death;
'Tis but a change
From this old house into a newer,
But a passing from a sham life
Into a truer.

There is no death;
'Tis but a step
That leads up to the higher;
Each setting of the sun doth bring Us one day nigher.

There is no death;
'Tis but a change
Wrought in nature's laboratory,
But passing on from mundane spheres
To higher glory.

There is no death;
'Tis setting free
From clay's incumbering fetters,
Where spirit grows in wisdom's ways
Far better.

There is no death;
'Tis but a law,
A mandate, that no man can sever;
Progression's forward course will be
On, on forever.

—C. S. White, in "Twentieth Century," Sept. 8, 1892.

MONEY.

Editor of LUCIFER: Money is the important subject among us in business in Boston, but the "Dress Suit Case" crime has been a sensation because it was a mystery during several weeks. I sent you some papers published in Boston on this crime. I will try to send more, that you may solve the cause and offer a remedy as you think best. Money was paid by the woman whose body was found in a hand bag and in two dress suit cases floating in the harbor—the head sunk. * * * My opinion of the cause of this crime: It was the marriage laws made by man and endorsed by men and women in Massachusetts. Every child can and ought to be conceived, begot and born legally, legitimately in Boston and in Massachusetts—and let this be the place of Heaven, the Heaven of Heavens.

Yours truly, A. P. HILL.

[The papers were received in due time with articles marked, for all of which Brother Hill will please accept sincere thanks. The papers have been filed and will receive proper attention as soon as the pressure of other work will permit. With Brother Hill's comments on this and but not very uncommon result of conventional marriage morality I am in full accord.—M. H.]

AN OPEN LETTER.

C. L. James, Eauclaire, Wis.—Dear Sir: I read with interest your letter published in LUCIFER of November 9, 1905, and I like the idea therein advanced. My suggestion is that you find an able lawyer who will take the case and set his price. O. A. Verity says his claim for damages is $50.

You publish a call, asking subscribers to assign their claims to you, accompanied by a subscription towards defraying expense of prosecution.

Suppose 100 subscribers assign claims aggregating $5,000 and accompany same with subscriptions aggregating, say, $200. You are then in a position to start the action. And why not make both the Chicago postmaster and postmaster general at Washington defendants?

This procedure may catch these fellows where the hair is short and put a stop to this repeated wanton confiscation of property.

Yours for free speech and the early annulment of that obnoxious Comstock law. FRANK WELLER.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

ORGANIZING SELF-HELP.

Among the comments called out by the suggestions in last LUCIFER looking towards organization for self-help are the following by a prominent officer of the Free Speech League:

"Kerr's organization of sex reformers would be O. K. if they could afford to travel and get together; but they are too poor and scattered, or the country is so big and their wallets so small.

"Same reply to running our own postoffice system. Some one would have to raise a pot o' money for the new business and another to fight off the United States government and its policy of monopoly of postoffice privileges.

"Here's just where Soelke et al make a mistake. They seem content to let courts rule that postoffice use is a privilege rather than a right. This might pass if there were other means, but when United States shuts out all competition and runs the one and only postoffice route the attorneys ought to be able to put up a stiff argument to effect that it is a right of all and every one, etc. Chew on this and put it up to the lawyers that they yield too easily to arbitrary court decisions.

"We might raise funds to fight for our constitutional rights, but it would take a hundred times as much to run an opposition route."

In order that all may see the legal opinion just referred to by our friend the letter of Chas. H. Soelke, first printed in LUCIFER 1053, is herewith reproduced:

STEDMAN & SOELKE, COUNSELLORS AT LAW, 94 LA SALLE STREET.
CHICAGO, NOV. 18, 1905.

MOSES HARMAN, Esq., 500 Fulton Street, City.

DEAR SIR: In the administration by the Postoffice Department of the postal law relating to so-called "obscene" matter, the said Department claims and exercises the right of determining what is and what is not "obscene" and to act directly against such matter by denying it the use of the mails, and, in some instances, by its confiscation and destruction without notice or a hearing before such order is issued.

This law, you claim, is unconstitutional for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it deprives the citizen of his property and liberty without due process of law.

2. Because it abridges the freedom of the press, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

3. Because it confers judicial power on the officials of the post department.

4. Because by the action of that officer, the citizen would be deprived of his property without due process of law.

The Supreme Court of the United States has answered these contentions in the negative.

I am requested by you now to make a terse statement of the reasons advanced by the Supreme Court in support of their decisions. They are as follows, as I understand:

The power conferred on the Postoffice Department by the statute in question is not judicial in its strict sense, but merely involves the exercise of discretion and judgment and where the law authorizes an officer to exercise judgment and discretion, the courts will not entertain an appeal from the decision of such officer, nor revise his judgment in any such case. Nor can it my mandamus act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in matters committed to his care in the discharge of his official duties.

The principal reason urged for this by said court is that under any other rule government would be administered not by the great departments ordained by the Constitution and laws guided by the modes therein described, but by the uncertain and perhaps contradictory action of the courts in the enforcement of their views of private interests. Hence, the court says, the only acts to which the power of the courts by mandamus extends are such as are purely ministerial and with regard to which nothing like judgment and discretion in the performance of his duties is left to the officer, but whenever the right of judgment or discretion exists in him, it is he and not the courts who can regulate its exercise. And with respect to the exercise of this discretion by the head of an executive department, it has even been held that he cannot be held liable to a civil suit for damages on account of his official acts in respect to matters within his authority by reason of any personal or even malicious motive that might be alleged to have prompted him; that it would seriously cripple the proper and effective administration of public affairs as intrusted to the executive branch of the government if he were subjected to any such restraint.

The only relief, then, for the abuse of this discretion, appears to be impeachment or indictment for malfeasance and, on conviction, removal from office of the offender.

In one case that I recall, the court said substantially that a citizen of the United States has no absolute constitutional right that his mail shall be carried by the United States at all, that whatever rights he may have in this respect exist in the discretion of the legislature and are entirely different from those fundamental rights to life, liberty and property which are secured by the Constitution, and that since then Congress may or may not, in its discretion, provide a postal system for public convenience, it is difficult to say what condition it may not impose to its use and enjoyment. Of course, Congress, in the exercise of its discretionary powers, cannot discriminate between persons or classes of persons, but the court holds that persons and property can be subjected to all kinds of restraint and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, and the right of every citizen to the benefit of the discretionary legislation of Congress must, therefore, be subject to the necessity of public health, morals and order and the general welfare, and the efficient execution of the powers expressly conferred by the constitution. The discretionary power conferred by law upon the postoffice department does not, according to said court, make this action tantamount to a trial, and penal judgment against the party affected by it; its effect is not to punish but to preserve the mails from misuse. Very truly yours,

CHAS. H. SOELKE.

"The only relief for the abuse"—of the power to confiscate and destroy private property by the postoffice department—"appears to be impeachment or indictment * * * and, on conviction, removal from office of the offender," says our friend and legal adviser, Chas. H. Soelke, in which opinion all other lawyers consulted by us substantially agree. But when the difficulties that stand in the way of indictment or impeachment of a Federal officer are considered—the expense in money and time, to say nothing of the notorious fact that government officials constitute a class or order, quite distinct from the common citizen, and that the history of Federal impeachments in this country is simply a history of failure to convict, when all these are taken into the account the hope of relief from this source seems very small indeed. The more practicable plan, as it appears to this writer, is to do as "Hale and Kimball, also Lysander Spooner" did in 1845, and as the "private mail company in New York" did as late as 1882, or less than twenty-five years ago. (See article on page 423, entitled, "Government Usurpation.") Make a beginning and show that it is possible for the people to manage their own business without help from a paternal despotism—from a government that is fast abandoning all pretense even of being a "government of, by and for the people."

For lack of space the further consideration of this subject must be deferred till another issue. M. HARMAN.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building.

"DON'T BARK."

Speaking of a pamphlet recently issued from this office, but now declared unmailable by the postoffice department at Washington, Henry Harrison Brown, editor of "Now—A Journal of Affirmation," San Francisco, in his October number has this to say:

"This is the work of an earnest reformer, and one who has suffered persecution for what he thinks is Truth. Personally, we like Mr. Harman, whom I have known for years. The principles he advocates are noble and pure. Since he believes in advocating them in this way, and is willing to suffer for his right to do so, we can only wish him strength to sustain him. The social world would be redeemed would it practice what he preaches. We are very sorry that Mr. Harman is again suffering for his attempts to lead men to social purity. That so many see impurity in his writings is the greatest demonstration of the fact that they are needed. But we think if he had not barked so loudly at the bad, the bad would not have turned on him."

Brother Brown is president of the "National New Thought Association," an organization of earnest reformers along psychic, intellectual and sociologic lines, with many of whom, including their president, I am glad to be able to claim personal acquaintanceship. When a sojourner in San Francisco, two years ago, I had the pleasure of attending several public meetings of the "Now Folk," as the publishing club is called, that issues the magazine with this very expressive and significant name, and also was permitted to share the hospitality of the commune, if I may so call it, then located on Oak street in the "Gate City of the West." For all the kindnesses received at the hands of Brother Brown and of his co-workers I wish once more to return sincerest thanks, not the least of which kindnesses are the words of commendation just quoted. As to whether I have "barked" too "loudly at the bad" I leave to others to judge. Brother Brown and his "cult" believe in affirmation of the "good" rather than in denunciation of the "bad." To my thinking there is no dividing line between the two methods, since every affirmation contains its negation, or opposite declaration, and every denunciation, every negation, contains its affirmation.

In the same issue of "Now" appears the following:

SOCIAL FREEDOM, THE MOST IMPORTANT FACTOR IN HUMAN EVOLUTION. By Hulda L. Potter-Loomis. M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago. Price 20c. A book written from a woman's heart, and probably from a woman's sorrows. With much that is valuable as fact, but with theories at variance with New Thought, these questions are important. They cannot be settled in one generation nor by one theory, and above all we must treat them as carefully as Darwin did his theories, and give to them many years of collecting and collating data, and as many more of deep study as to their cause. The book is pure in thought, and will help the reader to a discussion of the facts of his own life, and to a higher ideal of purity.

"Now" is a monthly magazine of 40 double-column pages each, remarkably well printed on very superior paper and sold at the low price of ten cents each, or one dollar a year. Its motto is an Emersonian one:

"Nerve us with incessant affirmations. Don't bark against the bad but chant the beauties of the good."

But all the same, Emerson did his share of barking against what he conceived to be the bad. His "Essays" are full of negations, full of "Don'ts"! His advice is much like that of the pedagogue who deprecated the use of the adverbial phrase "at all," winding up by saying, "Fact is, boys, we should never use it all!"

And by the way, Brother Brown, this Emersonian maxim, "Don't Bark at the bad," should be a very popular one with the monopolistic trusts, should it not? With Mr. Baer, for instance, to whom "God has given the coal" of Pennsylvania; with Mr. Rockefeller, to whom he has given the earth's supply of coal oil; with the Morgans, the Carnegies et al., to whom has been given the ores from which iron and steel are made.

"Don't bark"! Don't squeal when you're pinched; don't protest when you're robbed of the necessaries of life. Barking is not a pleasant sound to hear, but "Chant the beauties of the good"—the good King Theodore, for instance, who talks much against the trusts, but who is very careful never to do anything, nor to allow anyone else to do anything, against them.

Don't bark against the postoffice officials when they deny you equal rights to the common mail service—when they destroy the property of American citizens without legal process; and be very sure you don't bark against the United States courts when they send men to prison whose only crime is that they protest against marital outrages and demand for helpless children that they should have the right, the equal right, to be born well—if condemned to be born at all. Witness the recent ruling against the booklet, "Right to be Born Well," by the Washington officials.

"Don't bark!" Keep mum!

Make no noise. You might wake the sleepers on "easy street."

"Twelve o'clock and all's well!" softly sings the night watchman who happens not to be himself robbed or murdered.

Don't bark! M. H.

Taking it, then, that Property and Marriage, by destroying Equality and thus hampering sexual selection with irrelevant conditions are hostile to the evolution of the Superman, it is easy to understand why the only generally known modern experiment in breeding the human race [that of the Oneida Communists] took place in a community which discarded both institutions.—G. Bernard Shaw.

"FREE SPEECH."

From South Australia comes a "New Monthly Radical Newspaper devoted to the cause of Right Generation, Health and Progressive Ethics."

As mottoes the following appear on the title page:

A fig for those by law supported,
Liberty's a glorious feast.—Burns.

Men in earnest have no time to waste in patching fig leaves for the naked truth.—Lowell.

Give me the liberty to know, to utter and to argue freely according to conscience, above all other liberties.—Milton.

Its policies are thus outlined by the publishers:

"'Free Speech' will seek to probe every social problem, to sound every superstition, to investigate every institution and to criticise every creed and custom.

"'Free Speech' will speak boldly and to the point.

"'Free Speech' makes no apology for its appearance; it is here because it is needed."

Among the topics treated of in the first number of "Free Speech" are these:

Some Causes of Prostitution. Revolutionary Ideas on Sex Relations. Natural History of Marriage. Sexuality of Children—Children's Crimes. Diet and Sexuality. For Married Men. Are We Polygamists? Race Breeding. Infanticide, etc.

These subjects are treated with a candor and freedom that is in very decided contrast with the temporizing methods of the popular and conventional journals published in England and America.

"Free Speech" is published by the Free Speech and Social Liberty League, 29 Capper St., Adelaide, South Australia, and will be sent to any part of the world at three pence per copy, or three shillings six pence per year. It will be sent from this office at 7 cents per number or 75 cents per year.

To this very promising young journal LUCIFER extends a most hearty welcome, and would earnestly recommend each of our subscribers to send for a sample copy. If they do this they will be pretty sure to want more. M. H.

While we must have prisons, it matters little which of us occupy the cells. The most anxious man in a prison is the governor.—G. B. Shaw.

LUCIFER'S HELPERS.

In this list are included the names of those who send money or stamps to pay for LUCIFER or its pamphlets to be sent to friends who are not now subscribers; also the names of those who contribute to the fund for legal defense in the courts, and to keep LUCIFER'S flag afloat while prosecuted for alleged "obscenity." If any names have been omitted that should have been included in this list, or, if included, incorrectly credited, the error will be gladly corrected when our attention is called thereto.

Some have sent money direct to the treasurer of the Free Speech League, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, from whom we have not yet had a full report. Others have sent a few stamps, five or ten cents at a time, of which no account is taken in these public credits.

"'TIS DONE"—ARE WORDS IDLE NOW?

One of the most unspeakably horrible of the cold-blooded murders of modern times was committed by the people of Vermont the other day upon a helpless woman—Mrs. Rodgers. It is eminently a case concerning which women should be allowed to speak, and therefore the floor is now yielded to a woman subscriber: M. H.

Mrs. Rodgers, the husband-killer, has been hung in Vermont.

She suffered illegally—as she had not been tried by a "jury of her peers."

She had no vote in electing any one to office that was in any way connected with her case.

No student of human nature who has looked at her picture taken with her husband and child can believe that she could have ended life with hemp in a man's hand.

Sheriff Peck, not being a scientist, could not be the responsible party in that judicial murder.

A student of human nature would require some explanation why this woman had united her destiny with such a face as that of Mr. Rodgers, but as she did so, was she not what that husband made her?

There are cases where the husband's life previous to marriage has been such that the wife must lead a life like that of the women with whom he has associated, since the invisible magnetic influences have become part of himself—as much so as are his hands, his feet, or any part of his physical organism. These magnetic influences permeate his whole physical being, so that a wife takes upon herself, when she marries a man, what is beyond her power to control.

Had there been no "life insurance"—as was believed to be the "motive for the murder"—there can be no reasonable doubt that the real cause was as just stated, and acted so powerfully that the money incentive played not even a contributory part.

The world must be made better by knowledge. "Ropes" and "chairs" are not educators, not deterrents. They are part of the old, old barbaric code—to the shame and disgrace of a people claiming to be enlightened.

Many of those who, in Vermont, clamored so persistently for the life of Mrs. Rodgers, will, I predict, in the not distant future, help to arouse public sentiment against "hemp collars" as a cure for murder. Such remedies will be relegated to the unused garrets; and the same of the electric "chair" that has been substituted for the hemp collar in my own New York.

Enclosed please find one dollar to apply on subscription to LUCIFER. MARY E. WALKER, M. D.

THE GREATEST PREACHER.

Science, religion, ethics—all are dwarfed into tame and commonplace subjects, compared to the wonderful achievements of Luther Burbank, the wizard of the plant world, says the Portland Oregonian.

So marvelous are his powers over plant life and nature, so closely has he lived to the bosom of the earth and its products, that he is master of everything that grows, it seems.

Until one has seen his wonderland at Santa Rosa, California, it is impossible to get an adequate idea of his work. There he arms and disarms the cactus, taking off and putting on its spines, as a knight would put off his armor; there he changes God's fixed colors in the blushing rose, upturns all scientific theories of species and evolves a new species of plant as a comman gardener trains a vine to climb a string.

He mingles the vital essence of the plum and apricot and produces a plumcot, a fruit never heard of before, having an entirely new and strange flavor untasted on earth before. He breeds and interbreeds plants until they are changed out of their natural order and created into something new. Color, form, characteristics, perfumes and all the various parts of plant life are as clay in his hand, to fashion and mingle at will, into new and startling discoveries.

And back of it all and through it all is the overshadowing fact that man has lived in ignorance of these simple principles until now. Nature is his plaything and toy, if man understands her. He was given dominion, in the beginning, but he has failed to claim his inheritance and nature has stood aloof, a mysterious, threatening, formidable, awesome thing in the human estimation, all these years, while the truth is, she is a pliable, beautiful, yielding thing, submissive to the intellect and susceptible to immeasurable variation under thoughtful and studious direction.

Burbank is the greatest living preacher. He is nearer to God, by being near to nature, than any other man in the public eye today.—"Star," San Francisco.

Mr. Burbank maintains, so we are told, that wonders as great can be achieved in the human realm by scientific breeding as in the plant world. But in order that similar results be reached in the human world it would seem absolutely necessary that the facts of sex and reproduction be laid bare to the mind of the investigator, as honestly, as fearlessly, as conscientiously, in the one case as in the other.

If Burbank is "nearer to God, by being nearer to nature than any other man," what must be said of Anthony Comstock and the clergy who stand behind him and give him moral support in his war against nature—against the teachings of nature and reason in matters pertaining to sex, through and by which nature brings all living organisms into life? M. H.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

F. W. HEINTZ, Cleveland, O.—Mr. B. got up a good protest against the censorship and sent it to President Roosevelt, and I signed it for one. I hope there will be some way found to knock it [the censorship] out.

BOLTON HALL, New York City.—In reply to your question of Dec. 7 I do not "think it best for you to stop discussion of the sex question." While I have other work that seems to me more fundamental you are doing a good work that no one else does—that few others would dare to do.

SARA CHRIST CAMPBELL, Shawnee, Okla.—I think the discussion of the sex question should be continued by all means, if the paper is to be published at all; but you are the one to decide the matter. I wrote to Roosevelt and received a reply from chief postoffice inspector, saying that the matter would be looked into. I infer that Roosevelt knows nothing whatever of the matter.

J. A. H., Chicago.—I inclose $3. One dollar of this will go on my subscription to LUCIFER. You can use the remainder as you see fit. I shall try to get some subscribers, although most of the people I meet are very narrow on this subject. Many believe in liberty, but for themselves only. You will understand this. I shall try to do the best I can. I trust everything is going nicely. Yours for the truth.

D. F. HANNIGAN, St. Louis, Mo.—Fear not, brave champion of freedom of the press! Your cause will triumph. Milton—who was three centuries in advance of his time—fought for the same principle for which you are fighting. In the United States puritanism—which is only veiled impurity—has long been trying to strangle truth, freedom and justice. The United States needs moral surgery, and that alone can save it from perishing.

A FRIEND.—Inclosed find $3.40 for books and defense fund. How long is this farce to continue? I do not agree with all you seem to think, but I believe that every one should have freedom. That I have not is shown by the fact that I must ask you not to put my name in list I sometimes see of acknowledgments of contributions or have it appear in any way in your paper. I can help more in this way. But what a situation! What would be necessary to nullify Comstock law? And is postal censorship founded entirely on that? If that is the sole cause of trouble we need to know what is necessary to kill it. I do not expect an answer personally to all these questions, but perhaps you can, in some of your articles, indicate just what is needed.

W. S. BEHLEN, East Cleveland, Ohio.—Several days ago I mailed a "Protest" with 106 signatures attached to the President of the United States. I did not take off my hat, not make a bow, nor bend my knee. I herewith send you a copy of the same. Doubt seriously whether all this will do any good. The more despotic government is the more consistent it is. Leniency in government proves it a failure. There is no possibility of harmony between free love and government; we must not expect any. The government is logical in persecuting you and your work, because it fears the truth and freedom. * * * A free press is dangerous to government in any form, just as the freedom of conscience is dangerous to orthodox religion. * * * While government lasts in any form we will have to deal with it, whether we want to or not. * * * An aroused public conscience is the only thing government will listen to and then it must be exceedingly revolutionary. Yours, A RADICAL.

ANNIE LILLIAN SWETT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—After reading the copies of LUCIFER that you sent me I learned that you had been sentenced to a year in the penitentiary because you published some articles on the question of sex. To say that I was indignant would be expressing it mildly. I thought to myself, well, another is added to the long list of martyrs who have suffered for the cause of freedom. There are not enough words in the dictionary to express my opinion of those "nice" people who have made you trouble. The way things are going now it won't be very long before the little Toms, Dicks and Harrys in the postal service will be coming into our homes and telling us what we shall read. I cannot help you much in your fight against oppression, but I send you $1 for a year's subscription to LUCIFER.

I do not agree with you on the marriage question. I believe in legal marriage. I think it is better for men and women in every way. In my opinion the fact that people are married legally is not the cause of the trouble they have. It is other things. But I also believe in free speech. That certainly can be counted among the inalienable rights of the American people. I do not believe in the ordinary conception of marriage though, and I am very glad that you are attacking the marriage system as it is to-day. Women certainly need champions. The idea that the majority of people have of marriage is certainly all wrong. The whole female sex is enslaved to that idea—even little girls are from the time they are born. The idea that a girl must marry and raise children is held up to her from the time she is big enough to toddle. It is with her all the time. It haunts her life. She is given to understand that if she doesn't marry and bear children her life is a failure. And then she is taught that if she doesn't bear children she must marry anway. It doesn't make any difference whether she meets any one she can care for or not, she must marry. After a little she accepts the general theory and after a while she marries. From the moment of her marriage she loses her individuality. I will not say what her life is in the majority of cases, after that. Thinking people all know.

Most women are crowded into marriage by public opinion. The majority do not dare do anything but marry. They are afraid to. Why do men marry? I will leave them to answer that question themselves. It is safe to say that real genuine affection very seldom enters into the question. They do not marry—the majority of them—because they are so anxious for a "home" and "family." If men do not marry for those things why should women? Is it any more woman's duty to marry for those things than it is man's? Isn't it a double standard?

It seems to me that God did not create people just for the purpose of bringing children into the world. That is the idea of a beast. I believe that He created men and women for one another. People were put into the world I think to develop, to grow. Marriage may help them and it may not. I believe that ideal marriage would help every one, but there are very few of those. Some have the idea that unless people are physically fit to have children they should not marry. In some people's opinion a man would be justified in leaving a woman, no matter how noble she might be or how well suited they were to each other, if she could not have children. Such an idea as that if it were common would reduce us to the moral and spiritual level of beasts of the field. Of course that should be the general rule, but there are exceptions to it. I know of a young man who was injured on the railroad. His arm had to be taken off and he was also badly hurt internally. He knew he would never be strong again. He was engaged to be married and his friends sent for his sweetheart. When she came into the room he said:

"Will you go back on me now, Fanny?"

"No," she said, "I've got two good arms." She knew then that she could never have any children if she married him—but she did. I don't think any person who has any heart would have respected her if she hadn't. Of course the majority of people who marry expect to have children. But this idea that raising children is all a woman ought to do in the world is ridiculous. It is certainly just as much of a credit to a woman to care for some of the poor little children that her sisters have brought into the world and are not fit physically, mentally or morally to care for as it is to have children of her own. I think that companionship was the great reason for marriage. Ideal marriage would include, no doubt, physical, mental and spiritual companionship. Most people now do not give the mental and spiritual side of marriage any thought. They consider only the physical side. But it makes no difference what the majority think, it is certainly not the duty of any woman to allow any person to make her life a round of child-bearing. Child-bearing is something that women ought to have absolute control over. Men have a great deal to say about its being woman's duty to stay in the home and bring as many children into the world as they can. They say it because they want to keep up the armies and for other reasons. The majority of men know that if women were not kept down things would be very different from what they are now. A sensible person knows that the way things are now there is no woman in the world who can raise a very large family and do her duty by herself, her children, her husband and the world at large.

Besides working to convince the world that women should have the control of their own bodies in whatever position they are in, there is another reform that I hope you will use your influence to bring about, and that is the financial independence of women in marriage. Most married women have no financial rights. The most ignorant artisan in the world is more independent as regards money than they are. Taking all together I do not think any really broad-minded, cultured, refined woman can keep her self-respect and live the life of the average married woman of to-day. People who belive that men and women ought to understand the subject of sex better as regards human beings ought to work together. "In union there is strength." There are a great many who have the ideas, but they are too cowardly to express them. It is the duty of all people who have ideas about sex and in regard to the attack that has been made on you to come out and say what they think. If all the people who love liberty would come out for freedom the power of such men as Hull, and Comstock, and Assistant Attorney-General Goodwin would be overthrown. I plead with the men and women of the United States and of the world to come out publicly and fearlessly stand up for the right. Hoping that you will soon have your liberty and be enabled to carry on your good work, I am, very sincerely yours.

JOSEPHINE S. TILTON, Epsom-on-the-Hill, N. H.—If my proofreader were near by and my mind active when off duty in the struggle for existence I should like much to give you the thoughts that come surging in upon my brain when working. I assure you I have not slacked my pace or abated my interest in the social life of man and woman or in the labor problems since I dropped out from canvassing for the same. I am not inspired to write Theodore Roosevelt. He would give no attention to what I might write, and worse, pass my letter on to the enemy! I will, however—even though condescending to—make an effort to write to the representative from this district, and if in order the senators of this state. It seems to me it would be more effective, as they, or some of them, would feel bound to give a servant's attention and action to the citizens of their district and state. I like that idea of prosecuting the authority in Chicago postoffice, and believe there must be men and women in your city able to enter complaint and defend their own claims. Don't you see ghost of Heywood all along the line in these days of all manner of ethical and industrial upheavings? I fancy I do. You know a welcome awaits you here any time from spring to autumn should you ever stray off so far east.

MRS. A.—Your request to me to renew subscription received. I am very sorry to say I can't do so; had it not been for my kind friends I should not have had the opportunity to read your noble paper at all. I shall have to ask you to remove my name from your list of subscribers. Alone in the world, with four small children, my limited means allow me to take no papers, and I find it hard to get the necessities of life. I hope you will have help and will have rightful mailing privileges restored at an early date.

[Only one of thousands of similar cases. "What will become of the children" when the father, through unwillingness to accept the natural responsibility of his creative act, or because of misfortune, disease or death, cannot maintain them. Whether married or unmarried the mother finds herself in a heartrending situation when the little faces are turned to her for food and warmth which she is unable to supply. The marriage certificate, which falsely guarantees protection to mother and children, is found to be worth not even the price of a loaf of bread!—L.]

GEO. E. BOWEN, Elgin, Ill.—The last number of LUCIFER—1054—seems to be fire-proof-armed with pointed facts, the wisdom of all the ages, and a fine scorn for snarling superstitions of this sorry thing we call society. * * * You have shown us through fearful though inspiring sacrifice, by every endorsement of nature and the testimonies of all time that sex is supreme. That it cannot be crushed, Comstock-wise or otherwise. Now that you have forged the key to the situation it would be a foolish inconsistency to drop it into the sea of silence. Liberty cries to be unlocked. You are at the right door; you will not desert the cause you have led so long—your triumph crowding out to meet you. * * * Let other sciences of humanity and schemes of salvation speak through their special trumpets—they are all listening to the voice of LUCIFER. LUCIFER'S message is the momentous thing. Organization will follow. After this the spread of sanity. Then the restoration of the race. * * * Sex slavery is the saddest page of human history. You have signed the emancipation proclamation.

T. M. WATSON, Whitewater, Wis.—Force of circumstances has made me rather late in sending the dollar I will now enclose to renew my subscription. I am sure now that I can be somewhat helpful to you in the way of the "sinews of war" in the good and glorious future. There was never much opposition to instructions in breeding fine horses, cattle and hogs; even dogs have had some share of attention and no fault found. And now let us take courage in the cheering thought that it will some time be quite proper for us to seek for knowledge and give instruction for the improvement of the human race, physically, mentally and spiritually.

Your friends well know how you have given your best life and struggled against cruel opposition, and we all ought to manifest our appreciation and sympathy even beyond the expression of words, which do not cost much, if possible.

SUSAN SWAYSGOOD, Healdsburg, Cal.—Enclosed is a letter from the first assistant postmaster general. By it you will see that letters to Roosevelt are simply waste of labor and stamps, for very likely he never sees them. * * * They are handed right over to your enemies and may do more harm than good. Have just read your very able reply to the friend who advised you to drop all discussion of sex question. If I were in your place I would never lower my banner. I would not let LUCIFER be a nonentity among other papers. If you should let go of your ideals your days would be numbered, because you would realize too late that you had sold your birthright for a mess of potage. I know it is not a comforting thought you may yet have to go to prison, but even so you will be more satisfied with yourself than if you let go of your cherished ideal of liberating woman. So I say, Stay by the ship and let your colors fly at the masthead, but at the same time use discretion and do not wilfully antagonize the powers that be.

Here is the letter received by Mrs. Swaysgood. Many others have received similar letters from the same office:

Mrs. Susan Swaysgood,
Healdsburg, California.

Madam:

Your communication of the 20th ultimo, to the President, in reference to the publication LUCIFER, has been referred to this office and will receive due consideration.

Respectfully,

F. H. HITCHCOCK,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

WAKE UP, LIBERALS.

I want to speak of the position taken by the "Woman's Journal" of Boston, on the course being taken by our postal censors. I remember when Lucy Stone began contending for equal rights for woman, and, truly, her mantle has fallen upon her daughter, who says:

"The effort is now being made to stretch the law so as to suppress heresy" (on the sex question) "on the plea of indecency. The 'Woman's Journal' is wholly out of sympathy with many of the doctrines advocated in LUCIFER, but we believe firmly in the right of free discussion. The United States Supreme Court would not for a moment tolerate the monstrous proposition that any and all discussion of sex is obscene."

And then she quotes from Mr. Stead of London, Eng., as follows:

"If at this moment this unknown bureaucrat" (some postal clerk) "were to decide that the Song of Solomon or Shakespeare's poems are obscene anyone who sent a copy of the Bible or of Shakespeare through the post would be liable to be sent to jail."

Yes, and why not? Why not a Christian as well as a Freethinker be punished the same for the same act? If discussion of sex is obscene outside of the Bible it is obscene in the Bible.

I think Mr. Hull of the Chicago postoffice made a little mistake when he marked paragraphs taken from the "Woman's Journal" as "obscene," and though "wholly out of sympathy with many of the doctrines advocated in the 'Journal,'" I extend my hearty thanks for its brave utterance for the right of free discussion. She says truly "truth can lose nothing by it."

Do our Liberal friends realize how much such words from such a journal mean? The oldest and most influential journal in the woman suffrage movement. Will they wake up and take advantage of the occasion? Will they take this question to the Supreme Court by furnishing the sinews of war?—Lois Waisbrooker in "Demonstrator," Lake Bay, Wash.

DIETETICS—A CHAPTER ON.

Dear Friend and Brother:

I will give my views on economy on good but cheap living. In the first place discard all flesh foods and eggs. There is no objections to eggs as to wholesomeness. Fruits, grains, nuts and vegetables are the least expensive. Four pounds unbolted cornmeal, one pound shelled Spanish peanuts, one peck of potatoes per week and some dried fruit or berries, or those fresh picked, which I can now get wild from the fields. I also have several varieties of berries in my garden. Apples in this locality are a total failure this season. Last year they were so plentiful that they could not be sold for 5 cents a bushel. I took a small load to market, but could not sell an apple at any price. I found poor women who earned their living over the washtub who accepted them as a gift, which saved my carting them home. I fed many to my horse, especially sweet ones. My rations cost me 48 to 50 cents a week. I eat about 1 pound of honey a week, which, if I had to buy, would cost 12 cents. I have 26 swarms of bees, so that I have honey to sell. Have string beans and green sweet corn. I eat a little honey about every meal. If I were to dispense with honey it would reduce my cost of living to 36 cents a week.

I occasionally make about one-half of my meal on grass. When I eat grass it reduces my rations to 18 cents a week. I should eat it more, but with my artificial teeth I cannot masticate it sufficiently. When I do eat it I grind it in a small hand mill. There is no food that I eat that agrees with me better than grass, or that I sleep better after eating. I use no stimulants, such as tea, coffee, tobacco or alcohol in any form. I have not drunk a cup of tea for 70 years and never drank 3 cents worth of coffee. I can't understand why it is that people cannot be satisfied to drink the best drink there is—water. It costs nothing and is the most healthful. My eighty-second birthday will be next Friday.

My health is good, but I am not as strong as in my earlier days. I can stand it to do about one-half of an able-bodied man's work. If I do much more I suffer from its effects. I want you to credit the dollar for paying cost on your suit. I only wish that I could make it ten times as much. Fraternally yours,

Every Lover of Liberty

Should read THE CULTURIST, a Periodical of Progress, edited by a man who knows what Liberty is and is striving to attain it. Stands for Love in Freedom, and Freedom in Every thing.

MOSES HARMAN: AN ANALYSIS AND AN APPRECIATION, an article soon to appear, will treat eloquently but philosophically of the eventful life of the editor of LUCIFER and the significance of his work.

Among the contributors to THE CULTURIST whose names are familiar to LUCIFER'S readers are Moses Harman, Franklin H. Wentworth, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, James F. Morton, Jr., Edwin C. Walker, Dora Forster, E. B. Kerr, Jonathan Mayo Crane, Adeline Champney, Lizzie M. Holmes, J. William Lloyd, Lois Waisbrooker, Harriet M. Closz and Walter Hurt.

Clarence R. Darrow has a lumbering leader in the January number which you will want to read.

THE CULTURIST is an artistic magazine, well printed on excellent paper, with a beautiful cover in colors.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation.

G. BERNARD SHAW.

Fashionable American society has evidently come to the conclusion that it took a serpent to its bosom when it made a pet of Bernard Shaw. Some time ago New York received him on the recommendation of England, Germany and Europe generally, and was delighted to find that he was much livelier than most of the other writers who had been sent over with similar credentials. Accordingly, it grew very fond of him. But Shaw turned out a sad disappointment. After gaining the confidence of the respectable with comparatively harmless plays like "Candida" and "You Never Can Tell" he suddenly unsheathed his claws, and horrified his admirers with "Man and Superman" and "Mrs. Warren's Profession." Then leading citizens found out that Shaw was a Socialist, and indignant fathers and husbands realized that he was an apostle of Free Motherhood. Fashionable New York is trying very hard to drop Bernard Shaw now, and the critics all say that they really never thought he was anything of a playwright, and they never could see what all the fuss was about.

Europe, however, is accustomed to the radicalism of genius, and has not lost its head over the opinions of Bernard Shaw. Germany was, perhaps, the first country that fully appreciated him. When London still thought of him only as a Fabian essayist Berlin acclaimed him as a rising dramatist. What England now thinks of him may be gathered from two recent articles, one in the "Athenæum," which has always been considered the chief English literary review, and the other in the "Edinburgh Review," the best of the quarterlies.

The "Athenæum" says: "The man who stands highest among living speakers of our tongue for the combination of distinction and fastidious taste could pick no hole in 'Man and Superman,' except that 'Hell is too long.'"

The "Edinburgh Review," in its April number, says: "The power of producing an impression of life which seems, and which is, more real than reality, may be counted Mr. Shaw's supreme gift as a dramatist." And again: "His plays have the disarming quality of seeming to write themselves."

As I said, Europe expects great writers to be radicals. When Tennyson died a few years ago it was universally admitted that there were only two men fit to succeed to the office of poet laureate, William Morris, the Socialist soap box orator, and Swinburne, the atheistical free lover. Both refused the position when offered by Gladstone, and it remained vacant for some years. Ibsen, Tolstoi and Anatole France are Anarchists; D'Annunzio and Bjornson are Socialists. It is safe to say that all these men, together with Sudermann and Brandes, have published opinions on the sex question which the Chicago postoffice would consider hopelessly unmailable.

Bernard Shaw differs a little, however, from all these literary radicals. They were all known as writers before they were known as radicals. The best work of all of them, except Ibsen, is a thing apart from their radicalism. We can read "The Earthly Paradise" without thinking of Socialism, or "Anna Karenina" without a suggestion of Anarchism. With Shaw the order is reversed. Dramatic composition was quite a late event in his history, for he was more than thirty-six when he completed his first play. But for many years before that he had been well known as a Socialist lecturer, an opponent of marriage, an anti-vivisectionist, an anti-vaccinationist, a vegetarian and goodness knows what else besides. Shaw is fundamentally and essentially a social revolutionist, and only in the second place a man of letters. Every good thing he has ever written is more or less saturated with his revolutionary views.

His preliminary training in the study of social questions gave Shaw a great advantage over the other writers I have named. After all, most of these are what Emerson calls "weak and literary." Such men as Ibsen and Swinburne are little more than examples of the "incoherence of transition." It is impossible to say clearly and definitely what they stand for. Not so with Bernard Shaw. The social questions dealt with in his plays were all questions which he had formerly debated in public meetings with the best debaters in London, or studied in books of statistics. To show how well he equipped himself I shall give a quotation from his tract on "The Fabian Society; Its Early History":

"I made all my acquaintances think me madder than usual by the pertinacity with which I attended debating societies and haunted all sorts of hole-and-corner debates and public meetings and made speeches at them. I was president of the local government board at an amateur parliament, where a Fabian ministry had to put its proposals into black and white in the shape of parliamentary bills. Every Sunday I lectured on some subject which I wanted to teach to myself; and it was not until I had come to the point of being able to deliver separate lectures, without notes, on Rent, Interest, Profits, Wages, Toryism, Liberalism, Socialism, Communism, Anarchism, Trade Unionism, Cooperation, Democracy, the Division of Society into Classes, and the Suitability of Human Nature to Systems of Just Distribution, that I was able to handle Social Democracy as it must be handled before it can be preached in such a way as to present it to every man from his own particular point of view."

As a result of Shaw's long experience in debating, answering questions at meetings, and compiling statistical tracts, he has very clear ideas on every social problem. He knows just what he wants, why he wants it, and how he proposes to get it. One eminent critic said that "the difference between the spirit of Tolstoy and the spirit of Mr. Shaw is the difference between the spirit of Christ and the spirit of Euclid." This was intended as a reproach to Shaw, but it was really the highest praise.

Shaw has another point of superiority over other great radicals in his essentially modern type of mind. Eminent writers have a strong tendency to be praisers of the past. Tolstoi wants to do away with luxury, and persuade everybody to live a simple life upon the land, working hard on plain fare. Ruskin wished to abolish railways and return to stage coaches. William Morris thought that nothing good had happened since the days of Chaucer, and his idea was that we should go back and live in a state of society without organization or machinery, dancing in blissful equality round the village maypole. Shaw has no patience with anything of this kind. He has no reverance for the past. He knows very well that modern cities, modern machinery and highly organized industry have come to stay, but he wants to organize society so that these things may become a blessing instead of a curse. He wants to make cities sanitary, to fill them with inhabitants produced by the most up-to-date methods of scientific breeding, to make machinery public property so that it may be used to cut down the hours of labor to a minimum, and to supply the people with plenty of lively entertainment. In short, Ruskin, Tolstoi and Morris had so little imagination that they could think of the future only in terms of the past, while Shaw has so much that he can imagine a future unlike anything that has ever yet existed.

Many critics have considered his disregard of sentiment a serious fault. But it is really a great virtue in a social reformer. Sentiment will gather around whatever is established, as surely as moss will grow on an old stone wall. No matter how bad a social system may be, those who have been reared under it will love it and die for it. The social reformer need think only of the primary emotions and fundamental needs without bothering about sentiment. Start every one off with a strong, healthy constitution, let each have plenty to eat, plenty to love, and plenty of time for play, and sentiment will take care of itself.

Shaw possesses the greatest of all literary gifts, that of being interesting. Whatever he writes, a play, a critical essay, a letter to the "Times" on the unemployed question, it is sure to be readable. His originality and irreverence preserve him from ever becoming commonplace. There is no pedantry or longwindedness about him; he sees what is the point of vital human interest in the matter and goes to it at once. The great thing with him is to get there, and he does not care how many new words he invents, or how much slang he uses, so long as the desired result is attained.

No man has dwelt more on the fun of being an agitator than Bernard Shaw. Agitation is his only recreation, for he is a vegetarian, a teetotaller, a non-smoker, who plays at no games and practices no vices. In his tract on the Fabian Society we are always coming on passages like these: "From 1887 to 1889 we were the recognized bullies and swashbucklers of advanced economics." "I must not linger over those high old times, tempting as they are." "Our favorite sport was inviting politicians and economists to lecture to us, and then falling on them with all our erudition and debating skill, and making them wish they had never been born. The curious may consult the files of Mr. George Standring's extinct journal, called 'The Radical,' for a graphic account, written by an individualist, of the fate of a well-known member of Parliament who was lured into our web on one of these occasions. The article is suggestively entitled, 'Butchered to make a Fabian Holiday.'"

Shaw's fun and humor help him as a writer, but they are rather a stumbling-block to him as a prophet. English-speaking people expect great gravity from a man who undertakes to teach a higher morality. They think he should be something like John the Baptist. Laughing prophets are a special product of Celtic nations. The great laughers of France, Rabelais, Molière and Voltaire, have also been the great moral teachers of France. The same combination appears in Irish writers like Swift, Oscar Wilde and Bernard Shaw. British and Americans are very suspicious of such characters. They are willing to be amused, but not reformed, by them. It is useless to try to draw such a line, however. Those who begin by letting Shaw amuse them are sure to end by letting him instruct them.

The only occasion on which I ever met Bernard Shaw was at a Socialist convention held at Bradford nearly thirteen years ago. I was quite young then, and it was my first convention, so I have a very vivid recollection of everybody there. Most clearly, however, I remember Bernard Shaw. A number of propaganda meetings were held during the convention, at two of which Shaw and I were set down to speak together, and after one of them I walked home with him right across Bradford. He is a brilliant and rapid conversationalist, but what struck me most was his earnestness and politeness. Beneath his humor and flippancy lies an intense seriousness, perhaps too intense. "He was habitually melancholy, this man who wrote so gaily," said La Harpe of Molière; and I have a strong suspicion that the same might be said of Bernard Shaw. His remarkably sympathetic nature makes him very courteous—"gentlemanly to a degree," as Keir Hardie once called him. When our roads diverged I did not know my way; so Shaw, instead of leaving me to inquire for myself, made it his business to do so for me, and I remember him running across the road to get particulars from a man on the other side. In person he is about six feet high, with yellow hair and beard, rather awkward and angular, and utterly regardless of dress. He is now forty-nine years old.

The majority of LUCIFER's readers would find "The Quintessence of Ibsenism" and "Man and Superman" the most worth reading of his works. Socialists will be delighted with "Widower's Houses" and "Mrs. Warren's Profession." The ordinary person who wishes only to be amused should read "You Never Can Tell." Of all his plays I think this will live the longest, for it is the liveliest and most humorous, and its fun is of a kind that will always be appreciated.

K. B. KERR.

Little improvement can be expected in morality until the producing of large families is regarded with the same feeling as drunkenness or any other physical excess.—John Stuart Mill.

"WOMAN'S MAGNA CHARTA."

"But what is this freedom that woman seeks?" I said. "I beg you to tell me at once what this great right is that she calls her MAGNA CHARTA?"

"It is," said Mr. Lister, looking me squarely in the face, "the right to the perfect ownership of her own person."

"In what respect," I said, "does woman want the ownership of her own person? Does she not have it already?"

"In respect to maternity," he replied.

"I do not understand you," I said, "please explain more fully."

"Well," said Mr. Lister, "the women say that while they are willing, under all proper conditions, to undergo what George Sand grandly called 'the august martyrdom of maternity,' they utterly refuse to have that martyrdom imposed upon them. Maternity, multiplied and practically enforced as it is, constitutes the primeval curse that has rested upon them since they were driven from the garden of Eden. They will bear that curse no longer, and the time has come for man to find a way to remove it. In short, they demand, as an inalienable right, that man shall give them an irrevocable, perpetual guarantee, that no woman from this time forth and forever shall be subjected to the woes of maternity without her free, specific consent."

"What a preposterous idea!" I exclaimed in astonishment. "Upon what ground do they base this extraordinary claim?"

"Simply," replied my friend, "upon the ground that maternity is what George Sand called it, a 'martyrdom.' It puts the life of every woman who enters upon it in real jeopardy. It imperils an existence which is as sweet to woman under true conditions as man's existence is to him. The terrible risks of maternity are woman's and woman's alone.

"The risks cannot be shared by man, and woman alone, therefore, should freely elect when she should incur them. Besides the real peril and physical anguish of maternity there are the weary months of sleepless watching, of wearing care and wasting anxiety. For man lightly or indifferently to expose woman to such peril that suffering without her free and undoubted assent is worse than the worst form of African slavery, barbaric and unchristian."

"Unchristian!" I echoed, for the unexpected opening of such an entirely new field for woman's rights confused me so that I repeated mechanically, "Unchristian!"

"Yes, unchristian!" he resumed. "The women quote the saying of St. Paul, 'Love worketh no ill to his neighbor,' and say that man, under the sacred name of love, casts upon woman, who is his nearest and dearest neighbor, the most grievous of human ills. He compels her continually to run a gauntlet as cruel as the Indian's tomahawk, and multitudes sink before it is run. In the face of such terrible ills, 'the clods of the valley are sweet to them.' See, here is a specimen of the cry which appeared in the magazines just before the strike began." And Mr. Lister pointed to a letter which was contained in an article entitled "To Marry or Not to Marry." This letter was entitled:

"WHY I HATE CHILDREN."

"Poetically speaking, children are the rosebuds of life; practically they are the torments of existence. I speak from a long and miserable experience. Married at twenty-five, I am the mother of seven children at thirty-five, the eldest nine years, the youngest nine weeks. I am called their mother, but am really their slave. I was once a care-free, happy, joyous girl, but my children have made me a fretful, nervous, care-worn woman.

"All the romance of my life has gone, the poetry of existence has changed to the dullest prose. I live in the midst of quarrelling children instead of enjoying the society of congenial friends. From Monday morning till Saturday night I am working for my children, yet they show not the slightest gratitude, or make not the least return for all my devotion. Sick or well I am compelled to live in a state of noise and confusion, distracting to my nerves and detestable to all my finer feelings.

"My children are not exceptionally bad or mischievous; all children are more or less so; and, of course, the more children there are in a family the more trouble they give. Had the Roman Cornelia been the mother of seven children, instead of two, she would not have treasured them so highly, and called them her 'jewels.' Instead of their being her pets they would have been the pests of her life, as my seven children are of mine.

"I feel, in fact I know, that I was made for a better, a higher purpose than to be the helpless victim of seven little domestic despots, and one large one. The delicious bloom of my life is gone forever. The sweet fancies, the lovely aspirations, the serene happiness that made my girlhood a perpetual joy will never more be mine. My days are passed in a pandemonium from which there is no escape.

"I love my husband devotedly, and he deserves all my love, for a kinder, sweeter, tenderer husband never lived; but dear as he is to me, had I known that marriage would have made my life what it is I would never have married him. A MISERABLE MOTHER."

If the "Miserable Mother" had been the mother of one, two or three children instead of seven she would probably have had sufficient health, strength and self-control to train her children in habits of kindness, sympathy and forbearance towards herself and towards each other, so that instead of the torment of her life they would have been the joy, comfort and happiness of her life.

Of all books sold by us none more nearly preach LUCIFER'S central doctrines than does "Strike of a Sex"—including "Zogassent's Discovery," written by Geo. N. Miller, and now published by the Stockham Publishing Co., Chicago. The book is remarkably well printed, contains 119 pages, is entertaining as any novel, and sold at the low price of twenty-five cents postpaid. M. H.

REGISTERED AND UNREGISTERED LETTERS.

Editor LUCIFER:

Advice is cheap; and I have long since seen it classed with kicks and medicine as one of the things we all esteem more congenial to the giver than the receiver.

Mine, for the present, is as follows:

The statute, United States (No. ———) Sept. 19, 1890, is damnable of course (what else would you have a Federal statute of Harrison-McKinley days), but the section cited by Hulda L. Potter-Loomis (very likely the only person in America who has read it) does NOT authorize the postmaster general, or the postmaster particular, to hold up unregistered letters addressed to alleged frauds, like Helen Wilman-Post; nay, it contains an implication that he must not do so, which, since the thing implied only reaffirms the common law, is sufficient to prove that. The returning of registered letters alone is sanctioned. The sender of a registered letter is known by the accompanying postal card. The sender of an unregistered letter cannot be known without opening the letter. Section 3929, Revised Statutes (amended), concludes with the words "nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself." Something else must be extractable from "those ten thousand statutes which every one is supposed to know and no one does know;" or the inference is plain. No postmaster can hold up a letter addressed to any one but an alleged fraud (nothing is said about the obscene racket). No one but postmasters instructed by the postmaster general can hold up a letter addressed to an alleged fraud. No postmaster, so instructed, can hold up a letter except on condition of returning it to the sender. No postmaster can return it to the sender without knowing who the sender is. No postmaster may look inside a letter for the sender's name (except, in case of an unknown addressee, at the lost letter office). Ergo, every postmaster is bound (notwithstanding any fraud order) to deliver the letters which come into his hands for alleged frauds, unless the sender's name is given him on a registration postal card, or the envelope, as is sometimes done.

The postmaster at Chicago, and others who have been holding up LUCIFER, remain as liable as before to suit; which is more likely to avail than prosecution.

But the proper person to bring suit is the addressee. The reasoning of Chas. H. Soelke, that only an impossible impeachment stands between any citizen and excommunication from fire and water by one Jack-in-office, all assumes the citizen to be an apparent evil-doer, whose crime the Jack-in-office would prevent instead of punishing. This description may apply to an alleged fraud, but it does not to the receiver of an obscene publication. Anthony Comstock no doubtless receives more obscene publications than any other man in America. Is he an apparent evil-doer? Perish the thought! Besides, the courts have held differently. Now, to say that he and other detectives may receive obscene mail matter but plain folks like me may not, would be that discrimination of persons or classes of persons which Mr. Soelke says is beyond the power of Congress itself, not to mention the postmaster general (J. I. O.). I renew, therefore, my advice that readers of LUCIFER combine in sufficient numbers to sue the Chicago J. I. O., and, if necessary, the postmaster general, for the confiscation, without law, of their property (copies of LUCIFER mailed to them) under the frivolous pretense of preventing the editor of LUCIFER from committing an offense which, if any, was already consummated when he deposited those copies in the mail. I am glad to see some correspondents approve of this suggestion. It is the only practical one I can make as things are, though ridicule, as Bernard Shaw has just proved again, is great; and if I were editing a large paper like the "Record-Herald" I would fill it with blanks imitated from yours, e. g., "We are afraid the postmaster general will hold us up if we print what naturally follows: Our neighbor, Miss Tabittia Bramble, says the usual word in this place isn't nice, so we leave the reader to imagine it for fear we should be held up," etc. If you can induce some editor to do this act, do!

Readers who think of suing the J.'s I. O. for holding up their LUCIFER want to hurry their cakes, however, or their case will be getting old. Your device of letting your paper be censored in advance, as if this were Russia twenty-five years ago—they don't do such things in Russia now—may be a good way to consult your own safety, but it gives the enemy a precedent.

"And many an error, by the like example,
Will rush into the state—"

unless you do what I am now going to advise. Get up a special list of subscribers for unmailable matter, putting their rate high enough to pay for letter postage as often as need. Every time the J. I. O. censors LUCIFER send them unmutilated marked copies in sealed envelopes, which the J. I. O. dare not open. Have the envelopes addressed by typewriter or mailing machine, with nothing outside to show whence they come. Do not have them put in the postoffice itself, but in pillar posts dispersedly. In case of detection and interference have sub-editors (readers in different towns) among whom the list can be divided, and send them packages of the unmailables by express or freight with stamps. Of course their names must be concealed. I'll bet your list of subscribers for unmailable LUCIFERS will soon exceed the other.

As for writing to Roosevelt, a mere sensationalist, whom all the politicians of his party have found out and every one else will soon find out, I am of W. W. M.'s opinion about its utility. There would be more hope in addressing members of Congress.

C. L. JAMES.

Under date Eau Claire, Wis., Dec. 28, 1905, Mr. James writes us the following postscript: I shall not issue a call, as proposed by Frank Weller in your last edition, because I believe many others are better situated for the work he proposes than myself. It should be done by some one living in a large city, like Chicago, able to see his lawyer, a person selected for competence and familiarity with such business, every day. Or the lawyer should be himself the assignee of those whose papers have been held up (but then he must be trustworthy—there is a class of lawyers who like nothing better than a case adapted to attract general attention, like a suit against postmasters for their official conduct). I am glad my suggestion to bring suit against the Chicago hold-up man, and his Washington boss, if necessary, has found so much favor. I hope our friends will find a suitable person to materialize it. If they insist on my doing so, and subscribe, as Mr. Weller proposes, I will serve, but I have given my reasons for not wanting the job. My being an Anarchist is an additional one. It would be thrown up to me as inconsistent, and there are enough believers in the law to test its value.

According to the Kosalia (Wash.) Citizen, a Seattle woman sued for a divorce on the ground that her husband "tried to make her love him"—a truly reprehensible act on his part if they are right who hold that increase and not love is the justification for marriage. As a possible warning to other husbands the court granted the lady the divorce for which she prayed.—The Truth Seeker, New York.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

To friends far and near:
Happy, Happy New Year.

ON THE GRIDIRON ONCE MORE.

Thursday, Jan. 4, in the Federal Building in this city, before the United States Court of Appeals, a hearing was had in the case of "Moses Harman, plaintiff in error, against the United States, defendant in error." Case for plaintiff was argued by Seymour Stedman, and replied to by District Attorney Morrison. No decision reached. Decision may be expected any day. LUCIFER'S forms were held back one day for this brief report.

G. BERNARD SHAW.

The prominence given to this writer by the attempts to keep the general public from witnessing the performance of his plays has probably caused all the readers of LUCIFER to want to know something of the man himself, and of his history. Although the longest contributed article in this issue it is believed every reader will be well repaid by a careful perusal of the sketch of this noted man's career, as given by a personal acquaintance, and one who would not allow personal bias to warp his judgment. In the near future we hope to print a selection from an address by Lawyer Adelman of this city upon "Mrs. Warren's Profession," delivered before a large and very appreciative audience in the Masonic Temple, Sunday, Dec. 31, 1905. M. HARMAN.

LETTERS TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

After careful weighing of the pros and cons it is believed best not to print in LUCIFER any more copies of letters addressed to President Roosevelt, and not to encourage our friends to write and send any more letters to that official in LUCIFER'S behalf. Judging from the many answers received by the writers of these letters it is very probable if not quite certain that Theodore Roosevelt has never seen even one of the hundreds of personal letters sent to him, and that all these letters are simply pigeon-holed in the office of the first assistant postmaster general, Mr. Hitchcock—if not destroyed as soon as received.

This procedure only illustrates anew what we all have had abundant reason to know, namely, that the President of the United States is in no sense the servant of the people. To send letters addressed to himself—making complaint of the action of the postoffice officials—to those officials themselves, is to offer an unpardonable insult to the writers of such letters. It reminds me of the action of "the board of pardons" at Washington while I was confined in the Federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The officials of that prison and many other influential citizens of Kansas applied for my release from prison on the ground of ill-health and other reasons. The board refused to consider the case because the prosecuting attorney and the judge who sent me to prison refused to sign the application for my release.

In this connection attention is called to the letter of C. L. James in this issue, in which letter the plan is proposed of suing the postal officials for damages sustained by the subscribers who have lost their property through the unlawful action of these officials.

While it is believed that the writing of letters to Roosevelt has not been altogether in vain, and while the officers of the league are certainly grateful to those who so promptly responded to their suggestion, and while LUCIFER'S editor would return sincerest thanks for all such efforts, including the writing of duplicate copies of such letters to be printed in LUCIFER, the accumulation of these letters in this office is now so great that it is simply impossible to find room for even a small fraction thereof. For this reason and because of the great press of other excellent matter it is thought best, as before said, to treat all alike, and print no more of such letters.

If our friends wish their letters returned to them they are hereby requested to notify us of such desire. M. H.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR.

Pursuant to time-honored custom it was perhaps expected by many readers that our last issue of LUCIFER, that of Dec. 21, would make honorable mention of the annual holiday called Christmas. That no mention was made of this the most popular of all our national holidays was owing to the fact that LUCIFER'S editor holds that the custom of celebrating Christmas is one that would be "more honored in the breach than in the observance." At least that the usual and popular methods of such celebration are not conducive to health, longevity and happiness of the people who participate therein, not to mention their effect upon posterity, or upon the continued life and progress of the human race—through the educational features of this ancient holiday.

That the original significance of the festival now known as Christmas was beautiful, natural and conducive to health, social equality, human sympathy and solidarity of human interests, is doubtless very true. In prehistoric times this festival, under other names, "Yule Tide," etc., was instituted to celebrate the resurrection of the sun-god, after his eclipse, or temporary death, at the time of the winter "solstice"—sun-stood, and therefore the original meaning of this holiday was the celebration of the birth of a new year, and not at all what the day is now made to commemorate.

In later times, or since the conquest of the northern tribes of Europe by Christian emperors of Rome, this ancient festival, beautiful and inspiring in its significance, was perverted to serve and perpetuate one of the most debasing and inhuman of old time superstitions, that of bloody sacrifice to appease the wrath of an angry deity. "Christ mass," means simply the offering of a "consecrated wafer," called the "host," believed to be the body of Christ, which in mass is offered as a sacrifice. See Webster's Dictionary, edition of 1886.

This means that the old Hebrew, Phenician and Egyptian doctrine of "vicarious atonement for sin," through the sacrifice of bullocks, lambs, rams, goats, doves, and also of human beings, could produce reconciliation between an offended god and offending man. That is, that the innocent could and must suffer, must bleed and die, for the guilty.

The basic Christian superstition is that the innocent son of the Hebrew god, Jehovah, or more correctly spelled Yahveh, was offered up as a sacrifice, killed, for the sins of the world on the Roman cross, about one thousand nine hundred years ago, and that this bloody sacrifice is repeated year after year by the priest, at the time of Christ mass, Christmas, by offering on the church altar a consecrated cake, called the "host."

This is the first and quite sufficient reason why I, a Freethinker or Rationalist, decline to take part in the celebration of the church feast called Christmas. There are many other and very weighty reasons which cannot be enumerated at this place and time.

If this festival could be celebrated in a rational manner and as at first intended, that is, to commemorate the annual birth of a new year, I should have no objection to it, but, as already said, I regard this Christmas custom as one that would be honored in the perpetual breach rather than its yearly observance. M. H.

ALTERNATING CURRENTS.

As stated more than once in these columns, LUCIFER'S editor has neither taste, talent nor time for personal controversy. It is only when accused of conduct dishonorable to him as a man and as a citizen of the world, that he takes any notice of newspaper assaults. It is mainly because of its incorrect statements in regard to matters of business that the following editorial in the December number of the magazine called "Health Without Drugs" (London, England), is given a place in our much crowded columns. This editorial is headed, "Comments on Some Sex Reformers," with the sub-head, "Variety Love Leads to Ill-Health, Loneliness, Failures and Poverty." It starts off in this style:

"I will begin with Mr. Moses Harman, Editor of LUCIFER (500 Fulton street, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.), post free, 5 cents or 3 pence. If I understand Mr. Harman rightly he advocates free love. Not lustful love, but love amongst those who are sexually attracted to each other. The number of lovers is not limited, hence, they have adopted the name variety lovers. Mr. Harman is now seventy-six years of age. He has been imprisoned twice [thrice] because he printed articles to which the postal censors objected, and he is again on $1,000 [$1,500] bail [pending appeal to higher court], pending the action of a federal grand jury for circulating obscene literature.

"Readers of current periodicals know that there is hardly any paper on social and food reform which does not include the discussion of sex matters, and the editors are unmolested by the authorities. No man of discretion would have printed the obscene (?) paragraphs after having been punished twice for a similar offense. His ignorance regarding the effects of sexual indulgence may be inferred from the following paragraph from Lucifer (December 10th, 1898), in which he describes his physical condition. I understand that he was never a strong man:

"'I am not really sick, but have fallen into a low condition of vitality—a state of nervous prostration, so to speak; a lack of digestive and assimilative power—accompanied with insomnia, and resulting in loss of appetite, loss of strength, and loss of avoirdupois (twenty pounds reduction inside of two months).'

"I sent Mr. Harman a copy of my pamphlet, 'Sexuality and Vitality,' but he never thought it worthy of notice. A careful study of it, however, and the adoption of my principles, would have saved him from his breakdown. Some of my readers may perhaps divine the cause of his nervous debility. He also states that he came out of prison in better health than he went in. Lippelites can explain this fact easily. As his sisters (?) did not accompany him there was no temptation to waste vital fluid. Any man of weak constitution who has a little common sense knows that he is better in health without sexual relations.

Mr. A. M. writes: 'Dear Miss Leppel—I have made sure that all you say is correct about foods which produce an excess of vital essence, and the practice of sexual union is a shocking drain on the whole system. I have proved it, and nothing can alter my conviction. How many men are sent to their graves yearly through their wives? When I was living in the South of England there was a woman who was known to have outlived, or, rather, outloved, six husbands. Her present husband was the seventh and he was confined to bed, dying of consumption. You are at liberty to give my address to any inquirers.'

"Last year Mr. Harman asked me to exchange advertisements with him, space for space, and advertisement for advertisement. I inserted his advertisement twice, but, in return, he printed a small inaccurate advertisement about actresses, without my authority, omitting my name, the name of my magazine, and the number of address. In answer to my surprised inquiry, he stated that he had written it from memory, because mine had been mislaid. When reminding him of his promise, space for space, he informed me that he had no time to pay attention to details. When I sent my advertisement again, he accused me of monopolizing his paper, and that my advertisement would take at least half a column. It contained the same number of words as his own, and would occupy, of course, no more space. Lucifer still owes me an advertisement.

"I see in a contemporary that Mr. Harman is poor, and that his friends will have to support him if he is fined. A reformer who has not sufficient sense to provide for himself the necessities of life and keep clear of the law is incompetent to guide the young. The doctrine of variety love is most degenerating, especially for the young. If variety lovers knew that sexual excess was a kind of temporary insanity, the result of wrong foods, they would not waste their money in supporting the editor. Variety love leads to ill-health, loneliness, failures and poverty. Though prostitution deteriorates the nation, yet if variety love were adopted, it would lead to worse results. I cannot publish the reason for fear of coming into conflict with the law. A short explanation in a private letter (under 200 words) can be obtained, however, for one guinea or five dollars (prepaid)."

These extracts from "Health Without Drugs" are given place, for these among other reasons:

First, because the editor, Madame Sophie Leppel, asked me to do so.

Second, because she is by no means alone in her misunderstanding of LUCIFER'S work, and of the personal life of its editor. Madame Leppel voices the opinion of many thousands, in Europe and America, who consider themselves fully emancipated from old-time superstitions of all sorts—the sexual as well as the theologic and political—so that in replying to her I reply to a large class of so-called Free Thinkers, Secularists, and Evolutionists.

Third, because to fail entirely to notice criticisms such as those of Madame Leppel would subject me to the implication, in the minds of friends as well as foes, that the charges are well founded, and that silence means confession of their substantial truth.

To begin, then, let me say that LUCIFER'S space is too small and too precious to admit answers, in detail, of all the points made by my London critic. Only the more important can be noticed in this reply.

In general terms I agree with much of the reform for which Sophie Leppel stands committed. The food question is one of the most important; therefore I would gladly cooperate in all practical ways with those who agitate for more rational habits of eating and drinking. I have often desired to quote—approvingly—from the columns of "Health Without Drugs," and it is mainly because of my good will toward its editor that I give her so much of our limited space.

Yes, it is very true that "social reform and food reform papers discuss sex matters and not molested by the authorities." Is there anything strange about this? In Garrison's time many papers discussed the questions of capital and labor and were unmolested, but when the "Liberator" attacked the then popular relation of these two social factors at once there was trouble.

Yes, it is true that I have continued to publish matter that is called "obscene" by the postal authorities, after being imprisoned thrice for "similar offenses." It may be true, as my critic says, that "no man of discretion" would continue such publication, after such warning. Are we to infer from this that Madame Leppel would stop publishing her views on health without drugs if the postal authorities should decide such doctrines to be unmailable? and that persistence would mean fines and imprisonment for herself?

Madame Leppel is not alone in giving such advice. Many of LUCIFER'S readers would have me stop talking about the sex-question, in the way I have been doing, and would have me conform to popular and conventional laws and usages on this subject.

To all these critics, whether friendly or unfriendly, I would respectfully say, once for all, that while I make no promises for the future; while I may see things in a wholly different light tomorrow, and may then shape my course according to other standards of right and truth, yet for today, I would echo the words of Shakspere when he said:

"I'd rather be a dog and bay the moon," than to follow a temporizing line of conduct such as that evidently advocated and practiced by Sophie Leppel and by many other good meaning people. If I were a dog there would be no feeling of responsibility for my senseless barking. The dog acts from emotion, or intuition, alone, instead of from enlightened rationality, while the evoluted human animal is supposed to consider what effect his conduct will have upon his fellow humans, and upon their posterity.

Where, O where, let me ask of Sophie Leppel, would be human liberty and human progress today if all men and women in the past had meekly followed her advice, and had bowed meekly to the commands of men "clothed with a little brief authority?"

Whenever the time comes that LUCIFER'S editor shall make the opinions of the postal officials, the Federal judges or the Federal executive his standard of conduct or of conscience, then, quoting the language of that sturdy old Roman warrior, Cassius: "Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts, dash him to pieces!"

VARIETY LOVE.

Yes, LUCIFER'S editor advocates freedom in love, commonly called "free love," as in all other relations in life, but I have never "adopted the name variety lover." I have adopted no name, whatsoever, except liberty-lover and seeker after truth. I do not advocate promiscuous sex-relations, variety relationships, nor monogamic, polygamous nor polyandrous relationships; I simply demand the right of each and all to choose her or his own life in this regard. With

Spencer I say: "Each should have the undisputed right to do as he pleases so long as he invades not the equal right of others."

"The very head and front of my offending hath this offense, no more."

The paragraph quoted by Madame Leppel as proof that I am a variety-lover and that I indulge the sex appetite to excess, was first inserted in LUCIFER as explanation of my then proposed vacation in Florida. The "nervous prostration" spoken of was really no new experience. I had been subject to periods of such prostration for more than thirty years. As to whether indulgence of the sex instinct had aught to do with any of these periods of prostration I certainly do not know, but that such has not been the fact as to many of these cases I have the best evidence possible. That my coming out of prison in better health than when I entered was owing to forced abstention from sex-indulgence, is only one of Sophie Leppel's numerous unfounded assumptions. When first imprisoned I was suffering from epidemic "lagrippe." Comparative rest of mind and body, together with more careful attention to such hygiene as was possible within prison walls, cured me of lagrippe—not the absence of my "sisters," as charitably (?) inferred by my self-complaisant, highly opinionated critic.

Yes, I have made some mistakes in sexual matters, as perhaps all septuagenarians have done, but that I have not been a sinner beyond the average of men in this regard, I have good reason to know. That these mistakes—the mistakes of ignorance mainly—have been on the side of asceticism, of total abstinence, rather than of over-indulgence, I verily believe. While freely confessing my errors I am very willing to compare records in this regard with any of my accusers, not excepting Madame Leppel herself! If what she records of her own nervous break-downs be true, and if, as she infers in my case, nervous exhaustion is due to sexual excesses, then my mentor should heed the injunction, "Physician, heal thyself."

MY POVERTY.

Yes, as stated by a "contemporary," it is very true that I am "poor" in this world's goods, but I am not a pauper. I have enough to supply the "necessities of life," without calling on "my friends," but I freely confess to not having "sense enough to provide" a fund large enough to pay heavy fines of the Federal court, and if ability to "keep clear of the law" is the best evidence that I am "incompetent to guide the young," then I plead guilty to such incompetence.

In fact, I have not set myself up as a guide for the young or the old. I am myself but a learner, a pupil in life's great school. I am willing and anxious to learn—from Madame Leppel, the youthful Leppel, or from any one who knows anything concerning life's problems, and especially the most important of all life's problems, those pertaining to the egoistic hunger for food, to keep the body alive, and to the altruistic hunger for the relation that keeps the race from dying out.

If I were so lucky as to have five dollars to spare I might be tempted to invest it in a lesson of 200 words, written by the head-center of "Leppelism," the founder of the sect, or cult, of that name, but on account of lack of good "sense" in accumulating dollars, I must forego the written lesson and contest myself with what I can glean of Leppelism from the magazine, "Health Without Drugs," which comes to us in exchange for LUCIFER. And this brings me to the most important of the charges made against me, that of failure to fulfill my promise in regard to

EXCHANGE OF ADS.

Whether I suggested such exchange or accepted the suggestion I have quite forgotten, and whether I agreed to equal space and number of words, has passed my recollection, but if I did so it was certainly with the understanding that there should be reasonable limits to space to be occupied by the exchange. It is true that I at first inserted Madame Leppel's ad. from memory, but I then believed, and still believe, that I inserted the most important features of the ad. as sent by her. It is true as she says that I omitted her name, and this omission sealed my doom, no doubt. As the good lady is evidently ambitious to be the founder of a new sect—Leppelites—the most important part of her ad. was and is her own name, but I gave correctly the name and purpose of her magazine, also the name of the buildings and the city in which it is published. I inserted this ad. three times, with what is called a "Cap. head," and then changed it for one dictated by herself—word for word—and ran the corrected ad. in at least three separate issues of LUCIFER. Then when she asked me to insert a new ad., so large that it would occupy about a half column of our wide measure I respectfully declined, on account of "monopoly" of our very limited space allowed for advertising.

So far as I know we have already given Madame Leppel more of space than she has given to us, but to silence all complaint on this score I now offer to insert a new ad. for her, not to exceed two inches in depth, one or more times in LUCIFER, and will add to this offer a promise to insert, as space may allow, selections from her teachings upon the food question in its relation to the right control of sex hunger, and will close this long comment by earnestly advising LUCIFER'S readers to send ten cents, stamps or coin, to "Miss Sophie Leppel, 26 Clovelly Mansions, Grays Inn, London, W. C., England." This, by the way, is the exact instruction as to address given by the lady herself.

ANOTHER SIDE.

I began this exceptionally long article with the title "Alternating Currents," and will now give a little space to a current that flows the other way. In the "Woman's Journal," Boston, dated December 23, 1905, appears a letter from the treasurer of the Free Speech League, with a short comment thereon by the assistant editor, Alice Stone Blackwell. The article is headed in capital letters, "Garrison and Harman," is addressed to the editors of the Woman's Journal, and reads as follows:

Your last issue contains the tribute of Mr. E. H. Clement, of the Boston Transcript, to Garrison, and as I read it, including his inquiry, "Where is the hero for the hour" of today? the reply comes to me, without a doubt, it is Moses Harman. In many ways his experiences parallel those of Garrison. He is contending with the same "elements of intrenched wrong" as enumerated by Clement, and I can but wonder if Clement had Harman in mind when he wrote his query: "Who are they that are doing in our day the same sort of pioneering, with the same sacrifices and stripes, that Garrison did?"

In your editorial on Garrison I find these points in which Harman reminds me of Garrison:

1. He "stood almost alone."
2. Slavery was a "divine institution," and Church and State were allied in its support. Garrison fought it. Marital slavery now stands similarly supported. Harman assaults it.
3. Garrison repudiated political action altogether, as Harman does today.
4. Garrison was, like Tolstoy, a non-resistant, and Harman is in this like them both.
5. Garrison was "aggressive and uncompromising in his utterances." So is Harman.
6. Garrison was "equally strenuous in his advocacy of woman's rights." Harman is, if possible, even more so.
7. Garrison was in earnest, would not retreat, would be heard. Harman is made of just that stuff; and we hope for a final "parallel case," that fifty years hence Harman's assault on the evils of marital slavery will be as much appreciated as is today Garrison's on black slavery.

E. B. FOOTE, JR., M. D.

[Some of Mr. Clement's hearers in Boston, as well as Dr. Foote, were reminded of Moses Harman by that description. It is not likely that all Mr. Harman's views will ever be generally accepted (and Garrison's non-voting and extreme non-resistance principles seem so nearer acceptance now than fifty years ago), but it is only a question of time when Mr. Harman's opposition to the servitude of wives will be recognized as wholly rational and noble.—A. S. B.]

And here is still another alternating current. In "Wilshire's Magazine" for January, 1906, under the head "The Post Office Autocracy," appears this defense of Liberty and Equality, in which the editor mentions LUCIFER and the attempt to supress it:

One of the most remarkable incidents of the growth of the tendency to autocracy methods in this country is seen in the way drawn by the postoffice officials.

I myself was thrown out of the mails because the postoffice ruled that as I was publishing "Wilshire's Magazine" to advertise Wilshire's ideas, "Wilshire's" was merely published for advertising purposes, and therefore, had no right to the second-class entry.

As a result I had to go to Canada and publish "Wilshire's" in Toronto for three long years before the United States postoffice could be brought to realize the absurdity of their ruling, and their grave offense against a free press.

When a man can be thrown out of the mails for his publishing his own ideas there is very little freedom of the press remaining for us Americans. It's a long road to travel, but the only remedy is to elect a President who will appoint postmasters who are no simpletons. Some day we Americans will travel this road, but we are not ready just yet for it, even to gain freedom of the press.

Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, in Chicago, was thrown out of the mails merely because he stated that he thought a wife should have control of her own person. The postoffice said this was obscene, and LUCIFER'S light is extinguished. But it is burning again, feebly, and will burn fiercely some day.

Those journals which sell on account of their vulgarity and obscenity are never molested by our remarkably modest postmaster general. He must pick upon a theorist like Harman, who writes his stuff for thinkers, and not for the lovers of the yellow, to exercise his power.

Many other currents setting in the same direction might be cited, but these must suffice for this time.

M. H.

THE EVOLUTION OF MARRIAGE IDEALS.

This is the title of a leading article in the December "Arena," written by Theodore Schroeder, whose essay on the "Impurity of Divorce Suppression" in the same magazine attracted much attention some months ago. Beginning with Ancient Greece Mr. Schroeder carefully traces the growth of, and changes in, marriage ideals from primitive times to the present. Considerable space is given to the treatment accorded to women by the fathers of the Christian church—or churches. The following are a few characteristic paragraphs:

"By the tenth century, woman's subjection as a chattel-slave was complete. Her husband-owner could mortgage, sell or kill her, just as he could any other live chattel. No wonder, then, that thousands of women were driven into monasteries, as the only place offering even a little freedom, economic independence and respectability.

"The same crime was more severely punished, if committed by a woman, than if committed by a man. The wife's rebellion against her husband was punished as treason. President Roosevelt still esteems it akin to treason for the sex-slave in marriage to refuse to render sex-service. Before the Mothers' Congress, speaking of the deliberately childless wife, he said: 'Such a creature merits contempt, as hearty as any visited upon the soldier who runs away in battle.' The deserter before a foe is killed. Does Mr. Roosevelt's 'contempt as hearty' mean that he desires also to inflict the death penalty on married women who have deliberately limited their offspring to a number less than their utmost physical capacity? That is the logical inference.

"We have now seen how Christian denunciation of marriage, as impure, and of women as subordinate and vile, produced a wifehood of chattel-slavery. This necessarily involved that rendering sex-service had become a woman's slave-duty to her husband-owner. Under our present partial emancipation and enlightenment, husbands lack the courage, publicly, to insist upon this as their personal right, but instead, ask for it for themselves in the name of a class, nation or race, which every such man feels himself in duty bound to save from its imminent danger of extinction. As formerly he demanded a slavish slave, so now he demands a 'womanly woman,' one who joyously defends and meekly submits to the male imposition of economic dependence, intellectual inferiority, a dual standard of morals and female duties. Motherhood, as a right, has vanished, and motherhood as a duty is still preached by the benighted as the highest mark of female slave-virtue.

"Other forces have contributed to the persistence of this ideal. The tribal chiefs and war lords, needing soldiers for slaughter, rediscovered their advantage in making breeding a virtue. Napoleon needed 'food for cannon,' so when the brilliant but barren Madame de Staël asked him: 'Who is the greatest woman?' he said: 'She who has borne her husband the greatest number of children.' Frederick the Great, in 1741, wrote: 'I look upon men as a herd of deer in the zoölogical gardens of a great lord; their only duty is to propagate and fill the park.' President Roosevelt still endorses this ideal as the highest for womankind when he says that 'the wilfully barren woman has no place in a sane, healthy and vigorous community,' and adds, before the Mothers' Congress, that: 'There are exceptional men and exceptional women, who can lead, and ought to lead, great careers of outside usefulness, in addition to * * * not as a substitute for * * * their home duties.' Until the zoölogical garden of her great lord and master is full of deer, and these adequately cared for by her, woman may not even aspire to a career of other usefulness without forfeiting her right to live in a 'sane, healthy and vigorous community!' It is quite incomprehensible, how women with any education can sit calmly under—or even applaud—such with any education can sit calmly under—or even applaud—such a degrading denial of an equal opportunity for the exercise of other than their breeding capacity and its incidents."

In these utterances of Theodore Roosevelt we see an adequate explanation of the opposition to sex freedom for woman by the present national administration, as evinced by the rulings of the postal department and by the prosecutions in the Chicago Federal courts. Judges Bethea and Landis, in the Stockham and Harman cases, and the postoffice bureau at Washington and Chicago simply enforce the policy of their chief.

Speaking of sex-slavery in marriage our author says further:

"Thus the husband-master of a sex-slave in marriage, not caring or daring to repudiate the whole of the ascetic ideal, yet seeking a moral justification for a wife's compulsory gratification of his sensual appetites, secured the aid of both the church and the state, and all these still seek to limit a woman's activities, to coerce propagation and its incidents. All are united to laud her compulsory sex-submission as a virtue.

"Even to this day, in probably every state in the Union, the law still recognizes the husband's ownership of his wife's body. He may rape his wife with practical impunity, since marriage is a defense to the crime of rape. When he rapes a woman without having acquired that right, by priestly ceremony, even though she is his paid mistress, the criminal law against rape will send him to prison. Even if the law were changed, economic dependence and a perverted public opinion, which in consequence of such dependence prates of 'wifely duty,' would still compel submission; and all this, because the Bible says: 'Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands in all things.'"

The closing paragraphs read thus:

"The press dispatches recently announced that the Corn Exchange National Bank of Chicago had posted this notice: 'Employés of this bank receiving a salary of less than $1,000 a year must not marry without first consulting the bank officials and obtaining their approval.' The reason assigned was that: 'It is nonsense for a man to attempt to care for a wife and family with an annual income of $1,000. We would feel ourselves partly responsible for any misery which might follow, if we approved of such a course.' The clear imputation is that an economically dependent wife, to a husband with small salary, is a direct inducement to embezzlement, and prudent business men are unwilling to assume the moral risks.

"All this but makes it clear that economic and social pressure are compelling the abandonment of our present ideals which, without clearer moral vision, we refuse voluntarily to relinquish. Thus we will arrive at a legalized, easily dissoluble monogamy, into which woman will enter on terms of perfect equality as to her economic, moral, religious and political status, and her compulsory maternity will be replaced by the enlightened motherhood of privilege, in which the right of the child to be well born will be the paramount consideration. The realization of this ideal, toward which we are tending, is still far off, and what may be beyond is not given me to know."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

A. A. C., Mo.—At present I am among a rough, wild class of people, quite licentious and foul of speech, but steeped in the prevailing social beliefs and deeply prejudiced. They read and think but little and seem well satisfied with present conditions.

GEO. FOULKROD, Suffolk, Va.—Enclosed find $1 to apply on my subscription to LUCIFER. I don't think this country can boast of a better government than Russia as far as respect for the rights of the people is concerned. I hope you will come out all right at your trial. I can't see how any intelligent jury can make you out guilty.

JOHN LENK, for Bohem. Am. Educat. Club, New Bedford, Mass.—Enclosed you will find $5. We did the best we could. It was impossible to get any subscribers, because the majority of our members are not able to read an English paper. So the last meeting allowed the treasurer to send you $5 as support to be used in the fight for the existence of LUCIFER.

ALICE ARCHER LITTLE, Mass.—If the trouble you are meeting with the law were not so serious a matter to you personally it would seem to me the quintessence of foolishnes when I read what is supposed to be such awful and wicked speech for human ears to hear, and the growing mind to think upon. I feel like a second "Alice in Wonderland" with each new departure and "hold-up." The whole world cannot be so shocked by such vital matters being examined, and different opinions expressed must be—as I always look at all history—the event controlled by some one person, governed by secret animosities, that results in such experiences as yours. I hope this will be the last infliction, and that all these will only increase the interest they are intended to quell.

M. L. S., Atlantic City, N. J.—I think that it might be a good thing to do if a few men from New York City would go to Washington and interview "Ted"—or if you could make the trip yourself, in company with Dr. E. B. Foote, E. C. Walker and others.

ERICHT EBEL, Chicago, Ill.—Our friend, August Bosshammer, San Blas, Mexico, sends $2 for LUCIFER. When I went to Topolobampo in '92 Bosshammer was the first one to inform me about your struggle in Kansas and the real conditions of the freedom of press and speech in the United States. Wishing you strength and endurance in the struggle for freedom.

O. LEONARD, St. Louis, Mo.—I send you a copy of "The New Life," which I have written. I think you could make arrangements with my publishers to sell the booklet. You can announce at any rate that it can be ordered through you. I heard of the shameful proceedings of the postal censors against you and your paper. I need not tell you what I think of it all. You know my views on such subjects. I wish I had the power to help you in this fight. I know that every freedom loving man should do something against this reign of czarism in America.

W. G. MARKLAND, Chattanooga, Tenn.—The idea of appealing to the president is unpleasant to say the least. It seems to me that the logical, feasible program in all such cases as yours is open, dignified, public protests and endurance.

Despotic greed dominates presidents, congresses, courts and all the petty machinery of government and until its potentialties are worked out we will find no relief. My feelings find voice in "let 'er grind," and "damned be he who first cries hold, enough!"

The assault on you means larger game in view. It's an apprentice hand at your throat. We may look for the master's hand ere long. "Brothel syndicates" are a coming feature among the political gods. Although weak you are an obstacle to be crushed. It's destiny, but the struggle must go on to its limit.

C. H., Ashland, Wis.—Enclosed find $1.50. This pays my subscription from No. 1049 and leaves 50 cents for any other purpose. I should enjoy the reading of some of the literature of protest, but cannot do much propaganda work. The moment I speak of the postal inquisition the most intelligent man among my hearers shouts: "You are an Anarchist." The epithet "Anarchist" is quite equal in these days to the "A Heretic" of olden time in its sociologic effect. The victim is vanquished. To all arguments or excuses the hearers say, in their quiet way, "O! Never mind, I don't care to argue the question." Generally they walk away. Truth to tell, I find only one or two out of sixty-five men who can be induced to listen to any of what I should call reasonable talk. Most of them care for nothing but to talk of the amount of work they can do and the latest scandal or sensation. As to "letters to the president," I consider them as so much wasted energy. Comstock didn't ask the president for his powers to become a general nuisance. Nor can the president take away those powers. "Subscriber," on page 420 of LUCIFER, No. 1053, offers the only sensible solution of the problem. I disagree with nearly all the main principles advocated by LUCIFER, but still I like the paper because it is strong.

Every Lover of Liberty
Should read THE CULTURIST, a Periodical of Progress, edited by a man who knows what Liberty is and is striving to attain it. Stands for Love in Freedom, and Freedom in Everything.

MOSES HARMAN: AN ANALYSIS AND AN APPRECIATION, an article soon to appear, will treat eloquently but philosophically of the eventful life of the editor of LUCIFER and the significance of his work.

Among the contributors to THE CULTURIST whose names are familiar to LUCIFER'S readers are Moses Harman, Franklin H. Wentworth, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, James P. Morton, Jr., Edwin C. Walker, Dora Forster, E. B. Kerr, Jonathan Mayo Crane, Adeline Champney, Lizzie M. Holmes, J. William Lloyd, Lois Waisbrooker, Harriet M. Closs and Walter Hurt.

Clarence S. Darrow has a luminous leader in the January number which you will want to read.

THE CULTURIST is an artistic magazine, well printed on excellent paper, with a beautiful cover in colors.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of Marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

PROUDHON AND HIS "BANK OF THE PEOPLE."
BY CHARLES A. DANA.

This is a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency, and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of Free and Mutual Banking. A series of newspaper articles written by the after-time editor of The New York Sun, he having been a Brook Farm experimenter in early life. Price, 10 cents.

"TO THE YOUNGER GENERATION WHICH IS KNOCKING AT THE DOOR."

Break, break it open; let the knocker rust,
Consider no "shall not," and no man's "must":
And, being entered, promptly take the lead,
Setting aside tradition, custom, creed;
Nor watch the balance of the huckster's beam;
Declare your hardiest thought, your proudest dream;
Await no summons, laugh at all rebuff;
High hearts and youth are destiny enough.
The mystery and the power enshrined in you
Are old as time and as the moment new;
And none but you can tell what part you play,
Nor can you tell until you make assay.
For this alone, this always, will succeed
The miracle and magic of the deed.

FREE SPEECH DEMANDED.

The same good friend who sent us the collection of brief and pungent sayings of thinkers in favor of freedom of speech—published in No. 1054—has added other excellent paragraphs to that collection. Among these are the following:

"Great men are placed upon the scaffold for their peccadillos, and little men are often enthroned for servility or good intentions."—Wm. T. Hughes.

"Question with boldness even the existence of a God, for if there be one, he must more approve the homage of reason than of blindfold fear."—Thos. Jefferson.

"I regard Comstock as infamous beyond expression. I have little respect for those men who endeavor to put down vice by lying, and very little respect for a society that would keep in its employ such a leprous agent."—Ingersoll.

"Without free speech no search for truth is possible; without free speech no discovery of truth is useful; without free speech progress is checked, and the nations no longer march forward toward the nobler life which the future holds for man."—Bradlaugh.

"But I will demand if that man is not rather entitled to respect than the discountenance of society, who by disputing a received doctrine either proves its falsehood and inutility (thereby aiming at the abolition of what is false and useless) or gives to its adherents an opportunity to establish its excellence and truth. Surely this can be no crime."—Shelley.

"The government has nothing to do with the moral or intellectual quality of the matter transmitted through the mails. It has no right to discriminate. If it may discriminate for good purposes it may discriminate for bad purposes. The power is fraught with too much danger of abuse to be safely intrusted to the government."—N. Y. Sun editorial, Dec. 23, 1878.

"Your note admonishes me of a duty that should have been discharged before—the duty of telling you that your argument in the charges before—the duty of telling you that your argument in the charges before—the duty of telling you that your argument in the charges

EMERSONISMS.

Insist on yourself; never imitate.

Let us bow and apologize nevermore.

A simple manly character need never make an apology.

With consistency a great soul has simply nothing to do.

The characteristic of a genuine heroism is its persistency.

Out upon your guarded lips! Sew them up with pack thread, do.

I cannot consent to pay for a privilege where I have an intrinsic right.

I ought to go upright and vital, and speak the rude truth in all ways.

My life is not an apology, but a life. It is for itself and not for a spectacle.

I see not any road of perfect peace, which a man can walk but to take counsel of his own bosom.

A man is to carry himself in the presence of all opposition as if everything were titular and ephemeral but he.

A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen and philosophers and divines.

I am ashamed to think how easily we capitulate to badges and names, to large societies and dead institutions.

I hope in these days we have heard the last of conformity and consistency. Let the words be gazetted and ridiculous henceforward.

Be true to your own act, and congratulate yourself if you have done something strange and extravagant, and broken the monotony of a decorous age.

Good and bad are but names very readily transferable to that or this; the only right is what is after my constitution, the only wrong what is against it.

If you would serve your brother, because it is fit for you to serve him, do not take back your words when you find that prudent people do not commend you.

Else if you would be a man, speak what you think today in words as hard as cannon balls, and tomorrow speak what tomorrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said today.

Self-trust is the essence of heroism. It is the state of the soul at war, and its ultimate objects are the last defiance of falsehood and wrong, and the power to bear all that can be inflicted by evil agents. It speaks the truth, and it is just. It is generous, hospitable, temperate, scornful of petty calculations, and scornful of being scorned. It persists; it is of an undaunted boldness, and of a fortitude not to be wearied out.

"MONNA VANNA."

One of the chief events of our time is the great revival of the drama. Twenty years ago Ibsen was the only dramatist of any importance in the world; the novel was everything. Today we have Ibsen, Hauptmann, Shaw, Sudermann, Maeterlinck and D'Annunzio, and of late years Tolstoi has written some important plays. All these authors write problem plays, some of which are very advanced on the sex question, and well worth studying as signs of the times. One of the best is "Monna Vanna," by Maurice Maeterlinck, a Belgian author who is still only forty-three years old. It has become popular in America, and I have just seen it acted by Nance O'Neil and her company.

The scene is laid in Italy in the fifteenth century. Florence is at war with Pisa, and is just on the point of taking and destroying that city. At this juncture Prinzivalle, the Florentine general, who has been unjustly accused at Florence and condemned to death in his absence, makes overtures to the Pisans. He promises to supply them with food and ammunition on the one condition that Vanna, the wife of Guido Colonna, the Pisan general, shall go to his tent and spend one night there. Guido is furious at this proposal, and refuses to consider it at all, but Vanna takes a different view. She determines to go, and thus save the city, and she goes in spite of the anger and insults of her husband.

Vanna has no idea who Prinzivalle is, but when she reaches his tent, he reveals himself. It turns out that he and Vanna played together as children, and that he fell so deeply in love with her then that he has never been able to think of any other woman. When still a boy, however, he was taken to Africa by his father, and was there imprisoned by the Arabs, and did not return to Italy until after Vanna's marriage. Since then his one thought has been to get possession of her. Now, however, that she is in his tent, he finds that he loves her too much to do her any violence. He is as meek as a lamb, and they spend the night talking of old times, and get no further than to kiss each other on the forehead. Dawn is near, and she is about to return to Pisa, when steps and voices are heard. It is the Florentine commissary coming to arrest Prinzivalle as a traitor. He knows not where to fly, but Vanna persuades him to go with her to Pisa, promising him her husband's protection.

When they get to Pisa they find Guido still in a towering rage. Vanna hastens to tell him how happily her adventure has come out, but he utterly refuses to believe her story. Vanna tries to make him understand that Prinzivalle spared her because he loved her, but Guido cannot understand. He calls upon the crowd to say if they believe that any man would have a woman sent to him under such conditions and then let her off with a kiss on the forehead. Guido's father Marco says he believes her, but every one else is silent. Guido thinks that Vanna has fallen in love with Prinzivalle and is trying to shield him; so he gives orders that his rival shall be taken and tortured. Then suddenly Vanna discovers that she loves Prinzivalle. Rushing among the guards who have seized him she cries out that her whole story was a lie, that Prinzivalle did force her, and that she has deceived him to Pisa in order that she may have him tortured to her heart's content. She insists that he shall be taken to a dungeon, and that she shall have the key. Her wishes are obeyed; with the key in her hand she sinks down fainting and the curtain falls.

The reader will notice that the subject of this play is similar to that of Shakespeare's "Measure for Measure," but the treatment is very different. In Shakespeare's play a young lady called Isabella has the opportunity of saving her brother's life by sacrificing her chastity. She rejects the proposal without a moment's consideration, saying:

"Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity."

It is quite clear from the way Shakespeare handles the subject that her answer is in his opinion the only one which a woman of the highest virtue could give.

Maeterlinck makes Vanna give a different answer, and it is evident that he would have done so even if there had been only one life to be saved. He makes old Marco, the wise man of the play, say: "Believe me, nothing is worth a life that one saves; all the virtues, all the ideals of man, all that he calls honor, fidelity, and the like, seem but a child's game in comparison." Maeterlinck's treatment of all the characters is quite unlike what Shakespeare's would have been. Shakespeare would have made an injured martyr of the jealous husband, but Maeterlinck makes him a little ridiculous from the start, and detestable at the close. Shakespeare would have made Prinzivalle a monster, but Maeterlinck makes him humane and lovable.

It was interesting to watch the audience while this play was being acted. They did not know what to cheer, which sentiments to admire and which to be shocked at. "Is she good?" exclaimed a young lady behind me in great bewilderment. There is no doubt, however, that these advanced plays are having their effect, and are a powerful agent in the breaking up of the old morality.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

F. B. E., New York.—No doubt the Chicago papers contain reports of Prof. Adler's remarks on Shaw and Maeterlinck, urging unofficial censorship of press and drama—and teaching that "happiness is not essential to marriage"; that "marriage is to keep the flame of life burning," and that "better offspring and health" can be hoped for by holding together married couples after they would naturally fly apart.

That is rank heresy from any sociologic point of view, and if ever a censorship were to be justifiable it would be for suppression of such error as that. Adler is way off the track of truth, but what he preaches appears to be congenial to our official censorship. So be careful how you try to "call him down."

C. E. E., Pa.—Your letter came duly to hand and I wish I could respond to it as I should like to; but I, too, am suffering on account of the faith that is in me. Was teaching for about five years in school founded by one of the millionaire coal barons, and, perhaps to my shame, kept my faith to myself pretty much so I might be able to feed my babes. But the truth will out, and one Sunday I had, at the Y. M. C. A., a discussion with a minister, in which I pronounced the Garden of Eden story a fable. That was my finish; I "lost my job," and am now struggling to re-establish a private school for myself. I had such a school, but left it to better myself. It is hard to teach for the mossback conservators of current morals and economics; indeed, I should say it is a shame for a liberal to do so.

But in our poor lives—for most of us are shabby compromises—we bow a little to the lords for our bread. Nature's production of free souls is pitifully slow. My subscription to Lucifer expired with No. 1650. Find enclosed $1.25 to extend it. The dollar is for renewal on the paper, the 25 cents for postage you have spent in sending Japanese paper. Should be glad to have more copies of the paper from the Land of the "Risen Sun" if you can spare them. My best and kindest wishes are with you and yours. As said, I am struggling to get on my feet again. If I do I shall be able to help Lucifer some.

Otto Bobsien, Mt. Vernon, N. Y. The inclosed clipping is an expurgated copy of a letter I sent to the "New York Evening Journal": W. R. Hearst, Editor Evening Journal: Dear Sir—You publish a very admirable editorial on William Lloyd Garrison. You say we need more Garrisons. How many of your readers know that in this country a postal official may act as judge, jury and prosecutor, all combined, and that an appeal cannot be made in any court? An Englishman would blush with shame if this could be said of his country, but we Americans go on blindly and indifferently, while liberty (of the press and speech) is being destroyed all around us. Only the truth, the naked truth, can make people free.

Arthur Wastall, 3 Amalinda Road, East London, Cape Colony.—The Bernard Shaw-Daly affair in New York has happened apropos, and may turn the scale in your favor. The withering satire of the far-famed author of "Superman" will likely prove more than a match for the feeble-witted Comstockians, with their stupid "draped-piano-legs" ideas.

Free speech in America bids fair to become as "notifiable" a disease as scarlet fever. For the benefit of McAfee, McAdoo & Co. I could point to a center of infection that, although at the Antipodes, may become a dangerous menace to self-debasing puritans everywhere. If this celebrated firm will take the trouble to write to 29 Capper street, Kent Town, Adelaide, South Australia, I am sure the editor (a woman doctor by the way) will gladly furnish them with the fullest details of their local outbreak of this particular epidemic. It seems to have got such a hold of South Australia that a monthly periodical is now issued dealing with the latest phases of the complaint and how to prepare special "cultures" in suitable mediums, etc., etc.

The lay and non-official public can have copies of this journal at the trifling cost of 3d (6 cents) a number. I can assure them it will be found a surprisingly excellent, sound and outspoken publication on Lucifer lines, which none can afford to miss, if only to show them how much more liberal and up-to-date in such matters are the dwellers under the southern cross than the North American worshipers at the shrine of Taboo.

In Lady Florence Dixie Lucifer has lost an eloquent and forceful advocate of its cause. I sent you recently the record of her demise.

I inclose $2.50 to be used to help defray extra expenses.

Subscriber. Dating back more than thirty years, in the state of Pennsylvania, there lived a man and woman who loved. There being some impediment to a legal marriage they ran away together and settled in a new town in Northwestern Iowa. Here they lived as man and wife; were happy and prosperous and moved in the best social, political and business circles of the community. After their children were grown, some of them to manhood, the secret partly leaked out, and in order to pacify the children they went to Chicago and were legally married. Up to this time they were considered about the happiest married couple in the town. Two years later they separated and were finally divorced.

Draw a moral.

James P. Clark, Albia, Iowa.—Yours of the 17th inst. has reached me here at home, where I arrived several days ago. I have been absent about six months, isolated in the mountains on the Pacific Coast. I have practically been denied the use of the mails all summer. The censor of the Chicago postoffice has, no doubt, done all he could to keep me from getting my Lucifers, but the fact of my isolation made it impossible at times for me to even get a letter from my nearest relatives for more than a month between times. To go out and take such a visit with Nature is a grand way to forget our troubles, but I find that when deprived of all reading matter one forgets much else also. We were shut out practically from the outside world; lost all track of what was going on, but by the Lucifer enclosed with your letter we learn that you are still hammering away at the old stand. The circulars enclosed with your letter are all O. K., and in conclusion, Brother Harman, will say we have not the least doubt of your integrity. I have been with Lucifer almost from the start and firmly believe in all your good intentions, and it is too bad that in your declining days you should be dragged around in such a shameful manner. I am not one to encourage you to be putting your head in the cannon's mouth; you do not own humanity that much. I should much rather see you have a little comfort in your old days, but all this is no excuse why you should be persecuted for doing what you think is right. You have done a noble work for human rights. No one ever tried harder to better woman's condition than you. She owes you a lasting gratitude. You do not tell me how your finances are, but I take it you need all the help you can get, and I herewith put in my mite to help along your defense fund. Place it where you need it most.

A. E. Ellis, Boston, Mass.—I had an answer to my letter to the president, of which I mailed you a copy. It is signed by J. J. Howley, acting first assistant postmaster general, and reads as follows:

"Your letter of Oct. 30 to the President in reference to the publication Lucifer, has been referred to this office and will receive due consideration."

I wonder what is "due consideration" in this case? In the last Lucifer Mr. Harman writes very appropriately about the letters to the President too often being in the form of a petition instead of a protest. I am in full harmony with that idea and in the first copy of my letter, as I intended to send it to the President, the closing sentence was this:

"The postal authorities are your appointees and you are our elected representative and we expect you to see to it that their depredations on our property are stopped and due restitution made to Mr. Harman."

That is what I liked to write, but as I am considered very aggressive and insistent on my rights and been much criticised therefor I did not in this case trust my own judgment, but fearing to injure the interest of Lucifer, which has become dear to me, I changed it as you may see in my letter—"Hoping that it is only necessary," etc. But if I had received Lucifer of Nov. 9 before I wrote to the President my first way of putting it would have prevailed.

I wish again to express my admiration for the great and noble work you are doing. We ordinary mortals are cowards when it comes to the all-important sexual questions, and your courageous work will bear its fruits in a happier humanity. I am myself considered exceptionally independent and outspoken ordinarily, but in this field I am like the rest of the people. Only after getting acquainted with Lucifer do I dare to try to get enlightened and to discuss these matters freely. I thank you for what you are doing and have done, and wish you all kinds of success.

D. Webster Grob, Hagerstown, Md.—Henry E. Allen's bitter denunciation of my recent postal card you printed, without refuting a single idea advanced therein, is quite complimentary, indicating that a very little of my writing is very effective and irrefutable.

The defeated politicians always denounce the victorious ones and their doings, in order to get themselves elected next time, after which their average doings are about as bad as those they displaced—for this is how the game of politics is played. And, calling the victorious politicians Socialists instead of Republicans, or Democrats, or Whigs, would not change their nature or improve them one iota. Indeed by having more power, through "politician (government) ownership" of everything, while individuals owned absolutely nothing with which to repel their invasion, their tyranny could and probably would be greater in proportion to the relative power of each.

In demanding the initiative, referendum, recall, proportional representation or any other increased restriction of politicians' powers, as well as in reducing their financial power through reduced taxation, I will gladly coöperate with Socialists or any others, but not until the proverbially corrupt politicians become spotless angels will I ever advocate increasing their power and lessening ours financially or otherwise.

As "the worker's right to work" and "have the social product of his toil" existed in greater perfection when governments and trades unions were less powerful, even despite the competition of chattel slavery, indications are that lessening the politicians' power would be advantageous.

"Man's individual responsibility for his own acts" increases exactly in proportion as government's responsibility therefor is withdrawn. Hence, he who must live off of his own savings is naturally more industrious and economical than he who depends on a government pension and vice versa. Consequently more individualism and less governmentalism and paternalism will accelerate prosperity and progress.

As some who wrote President Roosevelt know he never saw their letters they should use the precaution to at least mark their envelopes and beginning of their letters "Personal," as this would make it more likely he would get to read them, as his deputies probably don't open his personal mail.

But writing letters to the press does more good than to the President, so every liberty lover should join the Press Writers' Association and you yourself should run in Lucifer a column or two of extracts from daily and weekly papers to serve as targets for the Press Writers corps and also print extracts of their printed comments in other papers.

Once you get this scheme working right it will get too hot for Comstock or even the postoffice officials to invade your liberty. By all means organize a Liberty Press Writers' League.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

ANOTHER "HOLD-UP."

LUCIFER No. 1056 was declared unmailable by the superintendent of second-class mails, Chicago. At this writing, January 15, we have not heard whether the decision of Mr. Hull is sustained by the Washington office or not.

It may be well to say at this place, that the loss to the subscribers will be made up, whenever an edition is denied the mail, either by an extension of time paid for, or in some other way.

ON THE FIRING LINE.

In the never-ending struggle between Freedom and Slavery, between Equity and Privilege, between Progression and Retrogression, another battle has been fought—fought and LOST!

Lost to the hope of those who have worked, waited and prayed for victory for the cause of free speech; victory for the cause of womanhood, the cause of woman's right to self-ownership; victory for the right of the voiceless unborn to be born well, if elected—or condemned—to be born at all.

Another victory has been scored by the forces of Privilege, the forces of Reaction, the forces of Monopoly, the forces of Medieval Superstition and of paternalistic Despotism.

And yet, WHO KNOWS?

Was the cause of political liberty lost when the American colonists were driven from the field by the troops of King George at Concord and at Bunker Hill?

Was the cause of Grecian independence lost at the pass of Thermopylæ, when Leonidas with his little band of immortals, his three hundred Spartans, went down to death before the assaults of the unnumbered hosts of Imperial Xerxes?

Was the cause of freedom for the enslaved African defeated when John Brown was hanged at Harper's Ferry by Governor Wise, at the command of the slave-crats of Old Virginia?

Was religious liberty and the right of free speech hopelessly lost when Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake by the officials of Papal Rome three hundred and six years ago?

Let the ovation accorded to the memory of Bruno—one of the greatest of all the civic ovations ever seen in the "seven-hilled city," at the time of the "unveiling" of the Brunonian monument—give answer.

Let the spread of free thought; let the decay of the temporal and spiritual power of the church; let the world-wide acceptance of the scientific views for the championship of which Bruno suffered seven years' imprisonment, followed by his martyrdom at the stake, give answer.

Who knows what the final result of the late legal battle in the ages-old conflict for freedom of speech will be. I refer now to the hearing at the Federal Building, in Chicago, of the appealed case of LUCIFER'S editor, for the right to discuss—in a clear, rational and honest manner—the most fundamental of all human problems, those pertaining to sex and reproduction of the race.

The affirmative side in this legal fray was argued by Seymour Stedman, for the "plaintiff in error," as this appeal case is technically called, and was replied to by the printed brief of United States District Attorney Morrison and by the oral argument of his deputy, named Marston—if I do not mistake the personality of the man who on that occasion represented the Modern Inquisition familiarly known as the Postal Censorship of Press and of Mails.

Whether Mr. Stedman made the best possible fight for freedom I do not pretend to say. His line of argument was mainly on points of technical law, rather than for the fundamental right of every one to equal freedom to express honest opinions on all subjects pertaining to human welfare.

The attorney for the Censorship did his best to show the horribly demoralizing effect of permitting discussions, such as presented in the two indicted articles, to be sent broadcast through the mails; also to show that the points of law upon which Mr. Stedman hoped to get a reversal of the decision of the lower court were not well taken; in other words, he tried to prove that the "plaintiff in error" had no legal ground on which to base an appeal.

At the close of Mr. Stedman's last plea he asked the judges to allow his client to make a short talk in his own behalf. This request was promptly denied! While the counsel on either side were making their arguments I was taking notes, expecting nothing less than that I would be allowed my citizen right to give reasons why a prison sentence should not be affirmed, or confirmed, against me by the Appellate Court.

Immediately after the close of Mr. Stedman's argument the court was declared adjourned, and next day he was officially informed that the three judges constituting the United States Appellate Court for Illinois, had affirmed—giving no reasons therefor—the sentence of the District Court, namely, that the defendant in the original suit, Moses Harman, should be punished by imprisonment in penitentiary at hard labor for the term of one year.

Mr. Stedman's understanding is that no appeals from decisions of the United States Appellate Court are ever allowed; therefore, it would seem there is no escape from this sentence.

At this writing, January 12, no announcement has been received at this office as to when the execution of the sentence is to begin. Our attorney says the usual proceeding is to allow the condemned a few days to "put his house in order" previous to donning the convict stripes.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

Briefly, in conclusion, it is perhaps needless to say that, as heretofore, when I have been sent to prison, LUCIFER will be published as usual. All necessary arrangements have been made for the editorial and mechanical work in getting out the paper as promptly every two weeks as the postal censorship will permit, during the enforced absence of its editor.

While there is no reasonable doubt that LUCIFER will go to press regularly, either in its normal or its expurgated form, it should not be forgotten that the publishers must depend on the financial cooperation of subscribers and patrons for the wherewithal to meet current expenses. Very naturally then, my chief cause of anxiety on giving up the management of LUCIFER to other hands, is in regard to the support it will receive from friends outside the office. Judging from the past, however, and knowing that the cause of freedom and justice is not less the cause of LUCIFER'S friends than it is the cause of its old editor I have little reason to fear that the paper will be permitted to die for lack of the necessary funds to pay expenses of publication.

M. HARMAN.

THE OUTLOOK.

At the opening of a new year it is but natural that we should take a retrospect of the past year and from its record form some estimate of what may be expected in the future.

Lack of space will prevent an extended review, in LUCIFER'S columns, of the happenings of the year just past. However, we can say, in brief, that the closing battles of the war and the treaty of peace between Russia and Japan stand foremost, in the opinion of most people, as the greatest historic events of the year 1905, common calendar.

As an actor in bringing about the termination of this the bloodiest of modern wars, Theodore Roosevelt achieved much prominence and received much praise. Whether the treaty, brought about by his initiative, was really in the interest of peace—of peace based upon justice, upon human right and human welfare, is a question concerning which there is room for honest difference of opinion.

Consider a moment: When negotiations for peace between Japan and Russia were opened by Roosevelt, the tide of war was going triumphantly in favor of Japan. The prospect was that the czar could not much longer raise money and men to continue the war, and that a total collapse of imperialism and autocracy in Russia was imminent. The revolutionists of the empire—those who for many years had suffered, had worked and waited for a radical change, a change by which the common people might be allowed a voice in the general government—all of whose burdens were borne by themselves alone—these revolutionists were hailing as a star of hope the defeat of the armies of the czar in the far east, and had begun an active campaign to overthrow autocracy and to establish limited monarchy, democracy, or perhaps the Cooperative Commonwealth in its stead.

Such being the situation in Russia and the east, when Theodore Roosevelt asked for the appointment of commissioners to arrange a basis for peace between the emperor of Japan and the czar of Russia while I would not impugn the motives of any man the question naturally arises:

Was Roosevelt's move in the direction of real peace, peace founded on liberty for all and privilege for none?

Or was it a move in the direction of continuing the never-ending struggle, the never-ending war, between freedom and slavery?

Was his interference with the progress of the war in the far east a move in favor of the oppressed revolutionists of Russia, or was it in favor of the czar and the bureaucracy of that typical despotism?

Was it in favor of the oppressed and murdered Jews or was it in favor of the bloodthirsty Cossacks and of the Russian State Religion—the priests of the Greek Church, who have continually urged the people to drive out or exterminate the Jews?

Let the treatment since accorded to the Jews of Russia and to the revolutionists generally give the answer.

As just said, I would not impugn the motives of Theodore Roosevelt, but we cannot avoid looking for causes of human actions.

What then is the general character the president of the United States, as interpreted by his acts, by his attitude towards freedom and justice for all, as seen in his appointments to office, and in his shielding officials from punishment for malfeasance in office?

What of the bureaucratic and autocratic acts of the postal department and the war department of his present administration—his right and left arms?

"By their fruits ye shall know them!"

"Birds of a feather flock together!"

Instead of taking up our limited space with the details of these unprecedented (in this country) usurpations I ask our readers to get a copy of the January "Arena," and see what its editor, B. O. Flower, has to say of the "Onward March of Autocratic and Bureaucratic Aggressions in the National Government."

The most discouraging of all the features of this outlook is the supineness of the people, the indifference of the general public to the stealthy but steady and sure encroachments of autocratic, imperialistic assumption of power by the present administration at Washington, D. C.

Most men, to say nothing of women who are supposed not to take any interest in such matters, laugh in your face when you say that our government is rapidly adopting the imperialistic methods of the rulers of the old world. They either cannot or will not read the "signs of the times," as portrayed by indisputable facts.

PER CONTRA.

On the other hand we are not without reason to be thankful and hopeful. The terrible shakings that have been given to popular standards of business morality, commercial morality, by the recent exposures of crookedness, of rottenness, of criminal dishonesty in high places, are beginning to set the stupid mass to thinking. The evident complicity of trusted and honored members of the national government with this crookedness, it is hoped, will help to break the spell and cause an earnest effort to bring the public servants to see and know that the people have some rights left that the "elected ones" are bound to respect.

Of the many "journalists of opinion" that are now speaking with no uncertain voice against the bureaucratic methods of the Washington government it is encouraging to be able to name "The Arena," Boston, and Trenton, N. J.; "The Public," Chicago; the "Star," San Francisco; "Woman's Journal," Boston; the "Conservator," Philadelphia; "Wilshire's Magazine," New York; "Appeal to Reason," Girard, Kansas; "Physical Culture" and the "Worker," New York; "Light of Truth" and "Chicago Socialist," Chicago; "Liberator," St. Paul, Minn. Many dailies also might be added to this list, besides numberless weeklies and monthlies, did space permit.

LUCIFER'S WORK.

Speaking more particularly of the outlook in the line of LUCIFER'S central work, there are many hopeful signs. For instance, a special dispatch to the Chicago "Inter-Ocean," dated Des Moines, Iowa, December 7, reads thus:

"The women members of the Chauncey Depew Club of Des Moines believe in race suicide, and are willing that mankind should know it. After an animated session this afternoon it was unanimously agreed that the sentiment of the club upon this much mooted theme would be henceforth expressed in this motto: 'Quality rather than quantity; fewer but better babies.' Mrs. George W. Ogilvie, the chairwoman, likened children to blooded stock, and declared that if people were as careful in the rearing and development of their progeny as some of the stock raisers were of their prize animals there would be a speedy uplifting of the human race."

As many of our readers know, these mottoes adopted by the Des Moines Women's Club, have been part of LUCIFER'S mottoes ever since its first issue.

Another hopeful pointer is the article of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, one of the most popular writers of the present day, in the Hearst syndicate of dailies, dated December 29, 1905, in which she commends a bill to be introduced in the Iowa legislature entitled:

"A bill for an act to provide instruction upon the subject of better parentage and making an appropriation therefor."

While most of us have no faith in legal enactments of this kind, we hail with delight the evidence that the leaven is at work in the popular mind, demanding that the haphazard, unscientific and irrational methods of bringing children into the world must be superseded by something better. A part of the comments on this text are these:

"There is no reason why 'Good Parentage' should not become a scientific branch of our colleges before two decades pass. * * * Many useless and unimportant things are taught now in our schools. A letter came to me recently from a woman who said she was recovering from a blow given her by her eldest son, and that two years ago the press had mentioned her as being found at death's door, alone, in her home, with a newly-born child in her arms, and no food or fire in the house. The husband, a drunken brute, was afterward imprisoned for his treatment of her. * * * She was the mother of nine children, she said, and had never known anything but misery, abuse and poverty in all her married life. Yet nine children proved her ability to arrest race suicide."

Few writers of the present day have it in their power to arouse the dormant public mind upon this vitally important subject as does Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and it is sincerely to be hoped that she will not neglect her opportunities, and that she will remember the tremendous responsibility these opportunities, and her own exceptional mental powers, impose upon her.

Other hopeful signs of a general awakening along LUCIFER'S special lines of work are accumulating. One of these is the fact that the parenthood question is being discussed by the members of the "American Press Writers' Association," in their letters to a multitude of journals that now offer a limited part of their space as a "Battle-ground of Modern Thought." It is hoped all of LUCIFER'S readers will improve the opportunity thus given and thus hasten the day when such instances of criminally reckless parenthood as that mentioned by Mrs. Wilcox will be no longer possible.

LOCAL LECTURES AND MEETINGS.

Meetings of the Spencer-Whitman Center, 2238 Calumet avenue, are held Mondays and Thursdays of each week. Lectures begin at 8 p. m. Discussions follow the lecture. All invited to participate.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology holds regular meetings Sunday afternoons in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic building. Meetings open at 2:30. All invited.

Chicago Social Science Club meets every Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Hall 913, Masonic Building.

"THE LAW DID IT."

From an editorial in the "Public," Chicago, January sixth, I clip this paragraph:

"A pathetic story comes from Vermont. It is said that the school children shout 'Hangman! Hangman!' at the little daughter of the deputy sheriff who recently executed the death sentence on a woman in that State. This is pathetic because that poor child had no responsibility in the matter. But it is not so easy to pity the man himself, even if the people do point him out contemptuously as a hangman. He excuses himself by saying that he did not hang the woman, that the law did it. But the law didn't do it; he did it—he and the officials who aided or ordered him. Maybe it was his duty, but that is apart from the question; the point is that, duty or no duty, he himself did the act."

No; the "law" didn't do it. "The law" never did anything! "The government" never did anything. The State, the Nation, never did anything.

We speak of law and government as though they were substantial entities, self-existent forces—as when we say, "let the law take its course."

Of all the superstitions that have come down to us from the ignorant and brutish past, none are more irrational, more immoral and debasing, than is this worship, this fetish-worship, of law and government.

If the Vermont "officials"—the sheriff, the jury that convicted Mrs. Rogers and the judge that named the sentence—had been unable to find a man low enough and mean enough to spring the trap that sent a weak and defenseless woman prisoner—hands and feet securely tied—up into the air with no support but the rope that choked the life out of her—that made her turn black in the face; made her eyes bulge out in a frightful and shocking manner—if these officials could not have found a human biped, or a quadruped beast, a dog or monkey for instance, low and mean enough to do this act for money or from fear of a whipping, then where, O where, would have been the late disgraceful and inhuman Vermont hanging?

In a very few days LUCIFER'S editor expects to don the "stripes" in some "government" prison and be put to hard labor without pay, except the meager fare—meager as to variety and wholesomeness for a chronic invalid. Then it will doubtless be said, as in the case of the hanging of Mrs. Rogers—"the law did it."

Suppose, however, that when said editor, in charge of the sheriff or United States marshall, shall reach the prison gates and be handed over to the warden, suppose that official should ask:

"What is this man's crime? What has he done to merit imprisonment?"

The sheriff would probably answer:

"I don't know. That is none of my business. My business is to obey orders, not to ask the reason why. If I had been told to hang this man I should hang him and without presuming to inquire into his guilt or innocence of crime. I am an executive officer, not a judicial. Other men are elected or appointed for that department of the government."

Suppose again that the warden should reply:

"Your idea of official duty is the popular one, the conventional and the 'legal' one. But I was a man and a citizen before I became an officer of the law, and when I became an officer I did not cease to be a man and a citizen. My duty as a man takes precedence of all other duties. I would not hang this prisoner simply because a judge and jury may have condemned him to die. I would have to be first convinced that the safety of my own life or the lives of others for whose safety I am responsible, is now in such imminent danger that nothing but the death of this man will prevent my own death or the death of other innocent persons. Then I might be induced to hang him—or kill him in a more speedy way—but not till then. The fact he has murdered some one in the past does not justify me in murdering him. The lex talionis, law of retaliation, is unscientific, unphilosophic, irrational, barbarous.

"For very similar reasons I decline to deprive this man of his liberty—taking him from his home, his friends and his business until I am convinced that he is a dangerous character—too dangerous to be allowed to run at large. If he habitually assaults people who are simply minding their own business, or if he habitually takes what is not his own and refuses to return what he has stolen to the rightful owner, then I will admit him as a ward—as one that needs to be cared for—until I shall be convinced that the charges against him are false, or until I can be satisfied that the reformatory treatment for which this institution was founded, has been successful, and that further confinement, further segregation from society, is not necessary. Again I ask, what is this man's crime?"

In plainer words I am now supposing that the warden of the public institution, or reformatory, to which I am now to be sent, is one who has not subordinated his manhood, his citizenship, to his official duties. As a man and citizen he owes it to himself to do no wrong to any human being, neither as principal nor as partner of others in the commission of wrong. I am supposing that the warden recognizes the fact that "the law" never does anything. That if a man or woman is hanged it is the hangman that does the hanging, not the law, and that if a man is imprisoned it is the keeper of the prison that imprisons him, not the law.

For myself, I'd rather be a dog and bay the moon than to be simply a tool in the hands of other men to do their dirty work—to do the crime which other men authorize, but which they themselves shrink from committing because of the infamy attached to the carrying out of such crimes. M. HARMAN.

THE POSTAL DEFICIT.

The postal deficit for the last fiscal year is about $15,000,000. The surprise is that it is not greater. Ninety per cent of the United States mail is carried in cars for the use of which the government pays a yearly rental of more than their cost, and then for the service eight times as much as the express companies pay. You see, the railroad companies are liberal and regular contributors to the National Republican campaign fund. Hence the deficit. A fair rate for carrying the mail would leave a larger surplus than there is now a deficit in the postoffice department. There's where the people want some railroad "regulation."—San Francisco "Star."

This is the department of government that is setting itself up as a model of conduct for the common citizen to follow. Having no faults of its own to regulate it is attempting to regulate the conduct of other people by "fraud orders," and by denying mailing privileges to certain publications because of the alleged immorality of their teachings—not to mention prosecutions by the officials of this department that put editors and publishers in prison and subject them to heavy fines because of alleged violations of postal laws.

But such has ever been the history of wrongdoers. To hide their own crimes and misdemeanors they call attention to crimes of others, real or pretended, thus securing immunity for themselves and getting credit as regulators of public morals. M. H.

BRIEF MENTION.

LUCIFER CLUBS.

From the "Arena" for January (Trenton, N. J.) we learn that an "Arena Club" has been formed in Denver, the president of which is Judge J. Warner Mills, with M. Florence Johnson, formerly of Milford, Mass., as secretary. These persons, as well as others whose names are mentioned as honorary members, are old-time friends and helpers of LUCIFER, and this announcement suggests the query,

Why not have a LUCIFER Club in Denver as well as an Arena Club? The first object of the Arena Club, as stated, will be to work for "direct legislation and a general civic uplift in all governmental affairs," and while we are glad to note that "all subjects are to be discussed," and that the "platform is to be absolutely free," we would ask if the questions of freedom from postal tyranny and the freedom of woman from marital slavery, and the right of the unborn to be born well, are not subjects deserving a special effort, a special club, quite as much as are the political objects spoken of in the lines outlining the objects of the Arena Club?

And why not have a LUCIFER Club at every center of thought in the United States, in Canada and in every English speaking country? A few such clubs have been formed, but because the members themselves are not threatened with immediate imprisonment or other punishment most of these clubs have ceased to exist as active factors in the work of creating a public conscience that will compel a reform in postal laws and in the administration of postal laws, in this and other English speaking countries.

DIVORCE TO BE PROHIBITED.

In the Chicago "Tribune" of January 12 it is stated that a Chicago lawyer, John Gibson Hale, "has submitted to the judiciary committee of the lower house at Washington" the draft of a bill proposing an an amendment to the national constitution, an important feature of which bill is that "divorce is to be prohibited, except where the cause ascribed could not have been anticipated before marriage, and especially in those instances where the court believes that the welfare of the children of the parties will be subserved by a continuance of the marital relation."

The chairman of the judiciary committee in the lower house, it is stated, is willing to "consider suggestions along this line."

There is just one result of such legislation, if this bill should be enacted into law, that perhaps its advocates have not thought of, namely, that its tendency would be to make legal marriage still more unpopular than it now is, and that it would encourage thousands to do as is done in many European countries today—ignore both civil and canon law in regard to marriage, and become a law unto themselves, as was the great Christian oracle, Saint Paul.

"THE INDUSTRIAL WORKER."

A new labor journal has just been launched as the "Official Publication of the Industrial Workers of the World," organized at Chicago, June, 1905. It is published monthly at Joliet, Ill., with headquarters at 148 W. Madison St., Chicago. Price, 50 cents a year.

The first article in the January number is by Eugene V. Debs, under the head, "Industrial Revolutionists." In his opening paragraphs Mr. Debs says:

"Such are the Industrial Workers—industrial revolutionists. They stand against the present system of enslaved wage-labor and for the coming system of free cooperative labor. The Industrial Workers is, therefore, a revolutionary economic organization. It has a stupendous mission. It has come at the right time and is catching on amazingly."

Other prominent contributors to this number are Daniel de Leon, Ernest Untermann, A. M. Simon, Frank Bohn and others well known to the reading public.

Our readers will do well to send for a copy of the revolutionary "Industrial Worker." It will stir up thought, and the hope of the world rests upon the agitation of thought. M. H.

"THE CULTURIST."

A few weeks ago attention was called in these columns to a new radical reform publication called "Free Speech," hailing from the Antipodes—Adelaide, South Australia. In this number of LUCIFER a further description of the character and mission of our new Australian contemporary is given by Arthur Wastall, himself an old-time publisher and editor of a reform journal. Now it becomes our pleasant duty to chronicle the advent of the long promised magazine, the "Culturist," edited and published by Walter Hurt—a name familiar to many of LUCIFER'S readers as that of a man who wields an incisive, fertile and very forceful pen. Few men of his years, if any, have made a better, more favorable impression upon the world of advanced thought than has Walter Hurt.

Some weeks previous to the advent of the magazine itself there appeared a forerunner, telling of the purpose of the proposed journal; from this prospectus I clip the following condensed paragraphs:

"Altruism. Optimism. Tolerance. No religion but that of reason. Abolition of capital punishment. Kindness toward every living creature. Pure philosophy and philosophic purity. Universal good for the individual benefit. Application of philosophy to all the facts of life. * * *

"The fullest individual liberty consistent with universal right.

"Aestheticism instead of asceticism to discipline human nature.

"Emancipation of woman from economic, social and sex servitude.

"Implicit confidence in the ultimate beneficence of the cosmic scheme.

"Rational pleasure as one of the objects of existence and a factor in development.

"Abolition of the arbitrament of force between individuals and between nations.

"Rational living that will put every person in correct relation to the laws of health.

"Study of the sex question as one of the most vitally important in every person's education.

"Education as the remedy for all error. When men learn to think right they act more nearly right.

"A patriotism that knows no nationality and a brotherhood so broad that it recognizes no distinction of race.

"Reason as the supreme test for all things, and the consequent rejection of whatever fails to quadrate with logical conclusion.

"Scientific treatment of criminals, and revision of penal system to make it repressive and (when possible) reformatory instead of punitive.

"Evolution—physical, spiritual, social and economic—as the process by which all problems must be solved; but an evolution that can be accelerated by human effort."

It would be hard to improve upon this as a working platform—as I see it.

The first (prose) article in the first issue of the "Culturist" is by Clarence Darrow, entitled "Punishment and Its Function." This is followed by more than two dozen articles in prose, about half of which are editorials, with a good sprinkling between of poetry, original and selected. Did space permit I should be very glad to make selections for LUCIFER'S columns, from the many surpassingly excellent things served up for the delectation and instruction of the reader.

The title page of the "Culturist" is a marvel of design and execution, being the picture of a lighthouse on a stormy, rock-bound coast, with the words, "Truth, Justice, Liberty, Knowledge," emblazoned upon the streamers of light issuing from the head of the tower.

There are twenty large pages, three columns each, besides the advertising pages. Price one dollar per year, single copies ten cents. No better investment in radical reform literature can be made than by subscribing for the "Culturist," published monthly by the Culturist Publishing Co., Station "M," Cincinnati, Ohio.

This notice should have appeared some weeks ago, but press of other matter prevented. M. H.

SHOULD WOMEN DEMAND PAY FOR BEING MOTHERS?

In No. 1054 Philip G. Peabody asks me the question, "How can woman ever become economically free without injuring herself as a producer of children?"

Several answers might be given, but there is only one which I consider worth giving. Women can be mothers, and yet be economically free, if they demand pay for being mothers, and refuse to become mothers without pay.

Motherhood is a public service, like grading the streets, or serving in the fire brigade. People are not so foolish as to grade streets for nothing, or to act as firemen for nothing. Why should they be mothers for nothing?

If any person had the folly to grade streets without receiving pay from the public, he would have to find some private individual to live on, and he would be the slave of that individual. That is the fix that women have got themselves into. A large part of their lives is occupied in maternal functions, for which they demand no pay from the public, and the consequence is that they have to attach themselves as parasites to individual men, and to submit to every kind of cruelty and indignity from those who feed them and their children.

Of course I know that it is essential to the health of many a woman to have at least one child. In that case her economic efficiency is increased instead of diminished by having the child, and there is no problem to be solved. If women had only the number of children which they need for their health and pleasure, however, the population of the world would decline very fast.

Women should declare a universal strike against motherhood, except in so far as it is needed for health. They should refuse to resume maternal duties until the community agrees to pay them in hard cash for their time spent in maternity, to give them a regular allowance for the support of each child, and to guarantee them work when they are ready to return to it. R. B. KERR.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

"And he showed me a pure river of water of life."—Rev. xxii-1.

Does this imply that there had been a time when the river of the water of life was impure?

Some believe it to be impure now, and that it is their bounden duty to do what they can to show to the unthinking and unbelieving that it must be purified if we as a nation hope for further progress.

All sex reformers agree that the impurity has been caused by an unnatural, a perverted use of the sex nature—under man's rule over woman in every department of life.

Yes, the present deplorable state of affairs has been brought about by man's rule, and a few men and women believe that the time has now come, in the history of the world, for the ruling power, as regards the sex relations of men and women, to change hands, and, because on woman must fall the consequence of this relation, these few believe it to be the proper thing, the rational thing, for woman to rule in this department of life and not man, as has been the case in all past ages; which unnatural, unreasonable, unjust, unloving and selfish ruling has caused the river of life to be impure, as we see it today, resulting in death to the individual and to civilization. All of which must be changed, if ever changed, by woman taking her rightful place side by side with man, except in the kingdom of love, where she must rule supreme—not selfishly, as man has hitherto ruled, but lovingly and reasonably for the individual good, and for the good of all future generations.

Why do these few meet with so much opposition from the authorities? Do the authorities see that their rule will be over? Of course it will be over, for with free womanhood and free motherhood will come free manhood; manhood capable of self-government, a law unto themselves, knowing the right and doing it because of the greater happiness it brings.

A new religion will be born. Yes, "The indications are that in the United States a new faith, a new hope, is being born," is already born. Yes, a new religion and a new savior are already born into the world. I know not the exact time or place. However, I think the place was not a manger, but, like the Christian's Christ, the rulers are seeking the young child to destroy it.

This new young child is extremely unpopular. So very unpopular that the few who believe it to be the true savior and are protecting and nourishing and proclaiming it to the world as the true savior are persecuted, imprisoned, ostracised.

I think the young child will live and become famous and popular that the few who believe it to be the true savior and are protecting the few thinkers who are—some of them—sacrificing health, strength, time, money, their all, to the cause for humanity's sake.

WOMAN'S SOURCE OF POWER.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed; it becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

A LETTER TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

To the Honorable Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

Mr. President:—In fact and by virtue of the Constitution you are not only the "executive" of the people of the United States, but by your office, as its title shows, you are their presiding officer, and their chief representative for essential purposes. The people are equal in rights and privileges because fundamentally we live under parliamentary law, of which you are now their administrator, and the protector of the whole body or "house." You are to be addressed on a "question of privilege" by any citizen-member who learns that a serious detriment impends from which you are "to see that the republic"—the political body—shall take no harm, as the old Roman decrees used to say.

Circumstances have made me feel, and indeed know, that dangers impend which justify any citizen who knows the facts in presenting this question of privilege to you, which calls for the exercise of extraordinary constitutional duties, powers and measures from you in order to protect the people in their personal rights, liberties and welfare.

The greatest dangers to states are the result of slow and almost imperceptible accumulations and growths, like mountain avalanches, and which like them, fall suddenly as the result of some trivial incident or change.

Such incidents are the passing of the so-called Comstock postal laws in, and since, 1873; the precedents and convictions occurring under them, and culminating in the recent prosecutions and sentences at Chicago of Dr. Alice B. Stockman to pay a fine of $500 and costs, and of Moses Harman, the 76-year-old editor of LUCIFER, the "Light-bearer," to one year at hard labor in the penitentiary, which is to him practically a death sentence. These sentences are for a statute-made "crime" of mailing a so-called improper or "obscene" newspaper in the Chicago postoffice. The prosecution was attended by the seizure and confiscation of whole editions of the paper without any notice to its owner, editor or subscribers, upon the mere opinion of some postal official, and that opinion turns out to be this: "Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and so unmailable. The only occasion for any talk on such matters is in the private conversation of physicians with patients." That these were the words of the official is clearly proved, and that they were acted upon repeatedly is a fact indisputable. That they were a formal rule or "decision" may be denied, but that is not claimed; the action upon them is the ruling and precedent, and that is shown over and over again in these two and other prosecutions. This opinion has been practically accepted by the United States courts (see Judge Bethea's charge in the Stockham case hereinafter quoted), and it makes trial by jury a mere farce, a mere acceptance of that opinion from "the court."

These statutes, prosecutions, opinions, precedents and verdicts have become a fatal danger to the republic and the people, which the Congress, courts, prosecutors and postal authorities have all estopped themselves from opposing, and, therefore, the appeal must be to the extraordinary action of "the President," as above and hereinafter described. There is no other remedy, escape or relief for the people, and hence this letter.

The first and great difficulty is to sense the nature and extent of this new but really retrograde revolution which has imperceptibly grown over all, and rendered all branches of the government except our President powerless.

Look back for a moment to the stirring yet hesitating discussion in the conventions by which (1787-1789) the Constitution was adopted! Had it then been supposed for an instant that the innocent-looking postal clause, "To establish postoffices and post roads," gave to the federal government the power of unlimited censorship over the press and mails, and criminal jurisdiction to punish without limit for mailing any literature or thing it might declare unmailable, and which might be designed to affect objects moral, social, political or other beyond postal necessities, such as "frauds," "lotteries," "anarchy," improper literature, or that called "obscene," or that in any wise relating to sex or marriage relations or affairs, or "race-suicide," or indeed any subject whatever that the "Congress" might happen to deem injurious or objectionable—think you that the Constitution would ever have been adopted? No! It is as certain as the sun in the sky that it would have been unanimously rejected. Such criminal jurisdiction would have made the voice of Patrick Henry triumphant when he described it as "the grave of the liberties of the people." Hamilton's plea in the "Federalist" and on the floor "that the federal postoffice was "only a matter of public convenience" would have been met by taunting, leering repetitions of the word "only!"

The very fact that the federal postal bureaucracy is now exercising a Russian criminal "administrative process" over all of the subjects above named—a jurisdiction never dreamed of, much less intended, when those expressed and "limited powers" were granted by the states and people—should make us halt at once, and return to the Constitution as it was intended to be; that is, as IT WAS and IS.

The Constitution was designed and adopted to "secure" the reverse of all this, viz., "the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," and of all these "blessings" the "rights" of personal freedom, and of free speech, a free, uncensored press, and of free, equal and inviolable mails, were the chief. Next thereunto were the rights of labor and of property honestly acquired. In these postal prosecutions every one of these rights have been remorselessly and even exultantly overthrown.

The postoffice has indeed become more and more a "public convenience," and the very substance and necessity of civilization. But by this plain, clear, palpable usurpation of "ulterior powers," and the espionage, decoy and censorship, with limitless criminal jurisdiction thereunder, it is now overthrowing the very object of civilization itself. It has become a "Trojan horse," introducing unawares and into the very citadel of our liberties the old enemies of the republic and their allies. Without these rights and liberties the welfare, independence and progress of our people is impossible. They are the substance of all that is superior in English and American character—all that is making them the leaders of the human race. They reach down to the very foundation of all that makes life desirable to a people that would be free. So sacred are they that their loss is the loss of all reason for living, never to be submitted to as long as life is left.

The surprise with which this growth of an inconsistent despotism in the heart of the great republic is regarded, abroad, is notorious and instructive. But with us the whole matter is suppressed, as if that, too, was "obscene," or as if it would not do "to see ourself's as others see us." Yet that sight is a helpful duty, and the last utterances of Mr. W. T. Stead, the English editor, author and reformer, and of Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, the celebrated Irish author and playwright, may enable us to judge of our position in the world of taste and intellect.

In the last July number of his London "Review of Reviews" Mr. Stead says:

"The American law authorizing a postoffice official to decide what is and what is not obscene literature places an arbitrary authority in the hand of an unknown censor which would not be tolerated for a moment in Great Britain. The Comstock law, as it is called, is so obviously capable of abuse that from time to time men who hold the faith which Milton held in the liberty of the press have protested against such absolute power being lodged in the hands of any official. If, at this moment, this unknown bureaucrat were to decide that the Song of Solomon and Shakespeare's poems were obscene, anyone who sent a copy of the Bible or Shakespeare through the post would be liable to be sent to gaol on the charge of using the mails for circulating obscene literature. In a recent case which led to the tragic death of a friend of my own, the judge expressly refused to listen to any evidence as to the morality of the book in question. When the postoffice, he ruled, had decided that any publication was obscene, the function of the court was limited to ascertaining whether or not an attempt had been made to send that book through the mails. This law arms a postoffice official with absolute power to place whatever publication he pleases on a far more terrible Index Expurgatorious than that of Rome. Its existence in a free country is a temporary anomaly and an intolerable anachronism."

To which a London critic adds:

"The Comstock laws and their operation illustrate what Whitman called 'the endless audacity of elected persons.' He might have said appointed persons, too. The moment you give a man power over his fellows he proceeds, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, to exercise it illegitimately if he can."

Mr. Shaw's article in regard to "Comstockery," which, he says, is "the world's standing joke at the expense of the United States," is found in the New York "Times," of September 26th ult., and Mr. Comstock's reply appears in the same paper of the 28th of September. Together they are very interesting and instructive reading. Mr. Shaw refers to the Harman case thus:

"The one refuge left in the world for unbridled license is the married state. That is the shameful explanation of the fact that a journal has just been confiscated and its editor imprisoned in America for urging that a married woman should be protected from domestic molestation when childbearing. Had that man filled his paper with aphrodisiac pictures and aphrodisiac stories of duly engaged couples, he would now be a prosperous, respected citizen."

In England and Europe where there is one Parliament, a general union of Church and State, and no division of government into State and Federal, Comstockery is indeed a ridiculous mystery. To U. S. the matter is too real and dangerous for other than serious consideration.

We have pointed out that it is a direct usurpation on the part of the federal government, in that it misuses the postoffice to get an unlimited criminal jurisdiction over "ulterior matters" which are not postal at all, and over which the jurisdiction is reserved by the express words of the Constitution to the states and people, and so is expressly denied to the federal government. This whole matter was tried out in 1836 in reference to the mailing of "abolition" literature. Henry Clay and Daniel Webster led the discussion in the Senate. Mr. Webster stated that all attempts to exclude or punish for mailing matter by reason of "its meaning, were expressly unconstitutional." The Senate, then filled with "great senators," and the country, including Mr. Calhoun and President Jackson, who had suggested the matter in his message, finally agreed or acquiesced. This precedent settled this whole contention, and, like the Missouri Compromise, it should have remained settled. What slavery failed to do, Comstockery, in the blind ignorance of well-intentioned zeal, has seduced our federal government into undertaking to do. As was shown in the "abolition" discussion, there is no need to make the U. S. postoffice our general censor and inquisitor with power to punish its victims to any extent it chooses. Every state has laws which it deems proper and sufficient on all such subjects, with courts and juries, and officers to enforce them. The evil and crime is not in the mailing, but in the circulation of the objectionable matter in the state. Whether it should be repressed or not, the state law makers, courts and juries are the proper judges. If the mail is used in the circulation, the postal officials and employes are always at hand, if needful as witnesses. This is as it should be. One universal censorship is ruinous to all free thought, inquiry, progress, liberty and originality. What is allowable and healthy in Vermont and New York may be found the reverse in Louisiana and Texas. Let the people of each state govern and judge for themselves. This is the constitutional way of safety, peace and health.

VOICES OF THE PAST.

"If every action which is good or evil in man at ripe years were to be under pittance, prescription and compulsion, what were virtue but a name, what praise could there be due to well doing, what gramercy to be sober, just, or continent? * * * They are not considerers of human beings who imagine to remove sin, by removing the matter of sin. * * * Suppose you could expel sin by this means; look how much we thus expel of sin, so much we expel of virtue: for the matter of them both is the same; remove that and ye remove them both alike." Milton's Areopagitica (Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing).

"In a sinless and painless world the moral element would be lacking; the goodness would have no more significance in our conscious life than that load of atmosphere which we are always carrying about with us. We are thus brought to a striking conclusion, the essential soundness of which cannot be gainsaid. In a happy world there must be pain and sorrow, and in a moral world the knowledge of evil is indispensable. * * * The alternative is clear: on the one hand a world with sin and suffering, on the other hand an unthinkable world in which conscious life does not involve contrast. * * * What would have been the moral value or significance of a race of human beings ignorant of sin and doing beneficent acts with no more consciousness or volition than the deftly contrived machine that picks up raw material at one end, and turns out some finished product at the other? Clearly, for strong and resolute men and women, an Eden would be but a fool's paradise." John Fiske, in Through Nature Up to God.

"Whoever reads, with philosophic eye, the history of nations, and their laws, will generally find, that the ideas of virtue and vice, of a good or a bad citizen, change with the revolution of ages; not in proportion to the alteration of circumstances, and consequently conformable to the common good; but in proportion to the passions and errors by which the different law-givers were successively influenced. He will consequently observe that the passions and vices of one age are the foundation of the morality of the following; that violent passion, the offspring of fanaticism and enthusiasm, being weakened by time, which reduces all the phenomena of the natural and moral world to an equality, become by degrees, the prudence of the age, and an useful instrument in the hands of the powerful or artful politician. Hence the uncertainty of our notions of honor and virtue; an uncertainty which will ever remain, because they change with the revolutions of time, and names survive the things they originally signified; they change with the boundaries of states, which are often the same both in physical and moral geography." Crimes and Punishments, Fourth Ed., 1775, pp. 24-25.

"Suppose a print-seller, with a view to business, exposes in his shop windows a number of objectionable pictures, for the attraction of those only who choose to look at them and possibly buy them. I have occasion to walk through the street; am I a party? How am I injured? Is my sense of decency shocked and hurt? But if this is sufficient ground for public interference then I have a right to call for its assistance when my taste is hurt and shocked by a piece of architecture which violates the laws of high art. I have similar grounds of complaint when a speaker gets up in a public place and preaches doctrines which are positively loathsome to me. I have a right of action against a man clothed in dirty rags, or with pomaded hair or a scented pocket handkerchief.

"If you reply that in these cases my hurt is not painful enough to justify any interference with another's freedom I have only to cite the old and almost forgotten arguments for the inquisition. The possible eternal damnation of my children, who are exposed to heretical teaching, is surely a sufficiently painful invasion of my happiness to warrant a most strenuous resistance. And even to modern ears it will seem reasonable that I should have grounds of action against a music-hall proprietor who should offend the moral sense of my children with songs of a pernicious character. This test will not do. * * * No man has ever yet succeeded in defining virtue a priori." Wordsworth Donisthorpe.

"Freedom to speak or print does not imply the right to say or print that which shocks decency, corrupts the morals of the young or destroys all faith in God." Anthony Comstock in "Traps for the Young," p. 199.

"Another class of publications issued by free lovers and free thinkers is in a fair way of being stamped out. The public generally can scarcely be aware of the extent that blasphemy and filth commingled have found vent through these varied channels. Under a plausible pretense men who raise a howl about 'free press,' 'free speech,' etc., ruthlessly trample under foot the most sacred things, breaking down the altars of religion, bursting asunder the ties of home and seeking to overthrow every social restraint." Anthony Comstock in report to New York Society for Suppression of Vice, 1878. Adopted unanimously by the society.

"I accord to every man the fullest scope for his views and convictions. He may shout them from the house top or print them over the face of every fence and building for all I care. But the common law and statutes both declare he must do it in a decent and lawful manner or not at all. I am sworn to enforce these laws—this and nothing more." Anthony Comstock in Frauds Exposed, p. 408.

"By the grace of the everliving God the liberal's demand shall not be allowed." Anthony Comstock in Frauds Exposed.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

THE GHOURKI, Morgantown, W. Va.—I bid you Godspeed in your work and sympathize with you in your persecutions. If the "Ghourki" can be of service to you command me. We who stand upon the pinnacles must receive the shafts.

THOS. HIGGINS, Monmouth, Ill.—Enclosed you will find $1, which please apply on my subscription to LUCIFER.

Sorry to learn that you must go to prison, but even that may be of some use, if like Debs you would take up the study of Socialism and learn that it is the material interests of the ruling class that demands the suppression of you and your teaching on sex and marriage questions. However, I hope you will come out of the experience with sufficient strength to keep up the fight.

JAMES P. MORTON, JR., New York.—You know how I feel without an expressed word at this culminating infamy. The days of sanity and justice are yet far distant in this country; but you are helping to make them possible. Your imprisonment will yet prove a boomerang, and serve the cause of free speech better than a host of phrases; and we who are still at liberty will fight harder than ever. The chief worry I feel is on account of your health, but I strongly hope you will come through safely, and live to lead us in many a good fight for liberty in the years to come.

MRS. ANNIE B. FISH, N. Y.—I grieve to learn that you really have to serve your sentence. It does not seem possible that such injustice could go on. I enclose my monthly 25 cents and wish some good could be done with it in your behalf. I wish I could send as many dollars a month, and if all of LUCIFER'S readers could send as many dollars may be their protests would prove more effective. I think the plan of C. L. James is a good one. I believe it has been suggested before. Now, what do I have to do in the matter? I wish to be one of the complainants. You see I would like to help in this struggle, but do not know how. I need not admonish you to have courage, for you have that.

E. C. MCDONALD, Buffalo, N. Y.—I ask your pardon for the delay in renewing my subscription. I read LUCIFER with a great deal of interest and take the trouble to send it to some friend. I cannot but admire your courage and persistence in still, at your advanced age, advocating your theories and endeavoring to shed light upon mankind. You probably will not live to see the fruits of your labors, but you are making a grand struggle and all fair-minded free-thinking men and women should be in sympathy with you.

You have my best wishes for your very laudable efforts.

Inclosed find $2, one year's subscription, and the other dollar to do as you like with.

E. O. PATTERSON, Durham, N. C.—I have just read a communication from Jas. F. Morton, Jr., to the "Standard," of Daphne, Ala., relative to the procedure and rulings of the postoffice department in the Moses Harman case, and I am incapable of expressing my feelings since reading it. If our Assistant Attorney General had a spark of purity in his heart he would see some things in the light of purity. "To the pure all things are pure." He must be of a low, base character, for "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." If a discussion of the sex question is obscene it must be very indelicate to be sexed at all; therefore the Almighty inventor and executor of life must have made a great mistake in endowing the race with a sexuality. The proper use of any organ of the body is right and proper and involves nothing impure, but the abuse or unnatural use of those organs is what creates impurity, obscenity and disgust. The obscene observer and thinker a clear insight into his character and disposition. I am inclosing herewith my check for $1 for one year's membership in the "Free Speech League." I would be pleased to have literature relative to its organization if you have any for distribution.

[This letter was written to E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., treasurer of the Free Speech League.]

MRS. M. LILLY-SLAIGHT, State Evangelist Minnesota G. L. I. O. G. T., Hutchinson, Minn.—The other day I received through the mail from some unknown source a copy of LUCIFER. I have read it carefully and with much interest. I do not know for what purpose this especial number was sent me, but I have a theory that these things all tend to some definite purpose, and so have endeavored to discover just what its coming was to mean to me. I was much impressed with its mention of the sex question and approved of many of its sentiments, but could not form much of an opinion as to its specific mission from so brief an acquaintance. Also as regards the press censorship, I would like to know more concerning its action and the whyfor of it. Send me some more of your literature that I may judge if your cause is one I can conscientiously espouse. I would state in regard to the affair with Mr. Angell, as quoted by your exchange on first page, December 23, that it was a little mistake. It was not the postal authorities who held up his noble little paper of May, in which he spoke of President Roosevelt's hunting party, but the superintendent of schools, who refused to allow the bands of mercy connected with the school to receive them or make use of them in their monthly lesson; a matter of toadying to position perhaps, but not just the same as postal interference. I have this from my friend, Mr. Angell, himself. Pardon the correction, but I am sure you wish to be right.

THEODORE DEBS, Terre Haute, Ind.—I notice that the Supreme Court has affirmed the judicial outrage perpetrated upon you by the lower court. This was to have been expected, and will occasion no surprise among those who have had experience with those capitalistic agencies for suppressing free speech when its suits the ruling buccaneers of the system. Their crowning disgrace is your crowning honor, and the year of your sentence will hasten by many years the overthrow of their despotism. You do not need my words to sustain you. The great cause of freedom is sufficient for this and you seem to be her favorite son.

J. WILLIAM LLOYD, Westfield, N. J.—This is sad news that your sentence has been confirmed and that you must go to jail. I do not know what to say to you. Perhaps you do not need anything said. Your courage seems always competent. I know of no braver man than you, or one who has proved it better. In the history of liberty you must be reckoned (and always will be) as one of her heroes. But there will be more to follow you. This battle for free speech is irrepressible and in part, at least, must be fought out through martyrdom. At present it looks as if that was almost the only way. Remember, dear friend, when you are "behind the bars" that many a heart is beating in sympathy with yours, and with admiration and gratitude for your work.

ANNIE E. K. PARKHURST, Brooklyn, N. Y.—"Procrastination is the thief of time" is what I used to write in my copy book when a child, though I had no idea of its meaning then. But I find the old fellow has stolen almost a month of time since your last was received.

Personally I do not see how "The Right to Be Born Well" could harm any one who would read it, but I gave it a second reading, all the time trying to imagine myself a conservative person, and so long as I could mentally hold this attitude, could see how it might be considered very objectionable applied to humans. Of course it would be O. K. applied to animals and vegetables (a la government horse book and Luther Burbank's work in the vegetable kingdom), but oh, horrors! Human beings have so long ignored natural law in sex life that the average mind can see nothing but filth in the subject.

MRS. M. W.—I attended a lecture the other night by a reverend doctor of Chicago, who is on the regular lecture course of some bureau. His theme was "America," and he exhausted most of our English adjectives in lauding our government, especially that part of it known as the Republican party. He claimed that God and Roosevelt would solve the question of universal peace, and that the example of William McKinley repeating on his death bed the words of the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," would be a lasting tribute to religion and to American statesmanship. He then patted us women on the back (metaphorically) and told us what a blessed privilege we possess in being permitted to bear sons to run a nation like ours, and while he was busy on this theme a small baby in the audience made a little disturbance, not enough to worry any one but its mother, however, and he stopped and said:

"If the lady, ah, would kindly take the baby out perhaps it would be quiet. Ahem, I hate to speak of it, but we are so constituted that it makes us nervous."

The poor mother was much mortified, and the confusion of her leaving the hall was three times what the fretting of the child caused, but the reverend doctor was pacified and delivered himself of his peroration in good shape.

Why the lecture bureaus hire such folks is a mystery to me. Stale stories, encomiums on the administration, denunciation of anarchy and cheap compliments for women may suit some folks.

I do hope when our editor has to go to prison he will be comfortable. It's horrid to think of at all, but I am proud of him, and please give him my love and tell him I shall write to him as often as the rules permit. I had a letter recently from a woman, a LUCIFER reader, who has just left her husband. She has five children to support and is doing it by baking bread. She tells a pitiful story of the persecution she has endured and even the attempted " by her legal owner. There is scarcely a day passes we don't hear of these evidences of marital misery, and yet our law makers are striving to enforce legal marriage, and our would-be moralists are elevating their noses whenever they hear of any one who defies custom and man-made law.

[The word which should appear in the above is usually replaced by the phrase "criminal assault" in the eminently pure, respectable and proper daily press. Should LUCIFER give it place it would probably cause another confiscation and denial of right of transmission. Of government Edmund Burke said, "The thing, the thing itself is the abuse." But of this outrage, the most loathsome that can be perpetrated on woman, it is not the thing itself, but the naming of it that is the abuse! It was the publication of a strongly-worded denunciation of a similar outrage that incited the first of the long-continued attempts to suppress LUCIFER and silence its editor.—E.]

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

AT THIS WRITING, January 30, LUCIFER's editor is still at home. Why the execution of the sentence of one year in penitentiary is postponed is not known at this office. An effort is being made, so we are told, to get the case reopened, or failing in that to get the sentence commuted to a fine or a term of jail imprisonment, but with what prospect of success is not known to the prisoner or his friends.

SOME WEEKS AGO it was stated that no more letters to Theodore Roosevelt from our subscribers would be published in LUCIFER. Since that decision was reached a reconsideration of the matter has been had, and, as a result, one more is now printed, the longest and most elaborate of them all. It is believed that the old-time worker for reform, and leader in the ranks of revolt against paternalistic despotism in the postoffice, Thaddeus B. Wakeman, is peculiarly fitted to write such a letter, intended to influence public opinion. Thus believing we ask all our friends whose letters to Theodore Roosevelt have been sent to this office for publication to forgive the discrimination and join with us in a combined effort to get the letter of Bro. Wakeman, in LUCIFER and in leaflet form, into the hands of readers and thinkers everywhere.

THE OUTLOOK.

THERE BE THY GODS, O ISRAEL!

A week or two ago the richest of Chicago's merchant princes, Marshall Field by name, "paid the debt of nature," to use a common phrase.

Nothing strange that a rich man should die any more than that a poor man should do so. On the contrary the chief cause of wonder is that the enormously rich, the abnormally rich, should live as long as they do, when we consider the kind of lives that most of them are compelled to live—the temptations to which they are constantly exposed, not to speak of the rivalries that the possession of great wealth naturally engenders, causing envy, strife, antagonisms, jealousies that make the rich the targets for the deadly shafts of those less fortunate.

"They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition," said one of old, and the saying holds good, in a physical and temporal sense, in multitudes of cases, whether its author had reference to a future state of existence or not.

That the very rich do sometimes live to great age is very true; such men as Russell Sage and women such as Queen Victoria being cases in point, but that these are rare is a matter of common observation; hence the prayer of Agur, "Give me neither poverty nor riches" would seem a wise invocation.

The thought uppermost in mind, however, when the above text was taken had reference mainly to the influence upon the coming civic life of our city, that will be exerted by the example of the lately deceased merchant prince. What did Marshall Field do that merits such honors as those so freely lavished upon his memory?

First—It is said he built up the greatest store, the most wonderful business enterprise of the kind, in the world.

Second—He gave to Chicago "The Field Columbian Museum," which when complete will probably be the greatest collection of the kind in America, if not in the whole world.

Third—He amassed a fortune of one hundred and twenty-seven millions of dollars by his own skill and energy in less than fifty years.

The young man just starting in life naturally asks, "How did Marshall Field accumulate this almost inconceivably great fortune?"

"Did he do it honestly?"

"Honestly or dishonestly, is it possible for me to acquire a fortune equally great?"

The answer to the first two of these questions is:

He used the "System"—the American "System," success in using which means ruin to competitors in the same game.

It means demoralization of body, mind and soul—more or less complete—of the greater number of employes, female and male.

It means degeneracy for the unborn, simply because the mothers of the coming generation must consume the best part of the child-bearing period of their lives in a nerve-racking, unhealthful struggle to obtain money enough to buy a social position, and money enough to buy an eligible man to become the father of their children.

As further illustrations I quote from Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, in "Everybody's Magazine":

"One sees a certain man openly displaying five hundred millions of dollars, a sum which represents the life earnings of 150,000 of our population, and knows that this man has secured this incredible amount during forty years of his life.

"One sees the second highest and most honorable office in the nation, a United States Senatorship, openly bought for a few stolen dollars by a man who up to the very day of its purchase was a watch repairer in a small country town, and who had never done a single meritorious deed or been possessed of worldly goods to the extent of $5,000.

"One sees a wily adventuress secure from the banks, which exist only to safeguard the people's deposited savings, hundreds of thousands of dollars on her bare story that she was the possessor of some mysterious documents.

"One sees a $3-a-week office boy of one of the 'System's' votaries able to borrow for the 'System,' on his bare note, four millions of dollars from a New York institution which only exists to safeguard the people's savings—although the law says that such institutions shall not loan to any man on any kind of collateral, even government bonds, one-tenth that sum.

"One sees two men, drunk with their success, gouging and tearing at each other's hearts in Wall Street, and sees their gouging and tearing bring about a panic which takes from the people in an hour over a billion dollars and drives scores to suicide, murder and defalcation—the two men continuing meanwhile as ornamental pillars of society instead of wearing prison stripes.

"One sees a great railroad corporation, in which are millions of the trust funds of widows, orphans and charitable institutions, caught 'short' (having sold something it did not own) in the stock-gambling game and held up to the tune of ten million dollars by a reckless stock gambler, who says, 'If you don't settle to-night it will be twenty millions to-morrow;' and the toll is paid, while the great banker who conducts the release of the hold-up charges the further tribute of twelve million dollars for his services. And then one sees this twenty-two millions of 'commission' tacked on to the capital stock of the great railroad which is subsequently capitalized into a 'bond' and sold to great life insurance companies as a first-class investment for their trust funds.

"When one sees these things and a hundred other as rankly fraudulent, one should not wonder at anything American connected with dollars."

A year ago many people doubted the correctness of some of the charges made by Thomas W. Lawson against the American "System" whereby such fortunes as that of Marshall Field are built up, but these charges have since been abundantly verified as we all know.

Here, then, are a few only of the "gods" held up by the leaders of public opinion—editors, clergymen, lawyers, judges—for the American youth to adore, to emulate, to follow.

Is it any wonder we hear the distant but distinct rumblings of the coming "revolution"? And yet we do not despair. All along the line are signs of an awakening to a sense of danger, and of a determination to apply the only true remedy. In an article in the February ary "Arena," protesting against a return to barbarism through adoption of the "whipping-post for wife-beaters," R. W. Shufeldt, New York, has this to say in regard to the causes of marital unhappiness, and of race-degeneracy:

"Above and beyond all those various causes, however, is one that completely envelopes everything having anything whatever to do with the matter of the conditions under which the two sexes can happily and profitably be mated and their offspring reared to become normal men and women and sound, intelligent and progressive representatives of the race. This cause is the utter ignorance of the science of sexology and a lack of a thorough understanding of human nature in its broadest sense. Now what makes the situation still more hopeless, not to say dangerous, is that we have permitted to grow up in this country, under federal protection, the most vicious system of censorship that has ever disgraced a civilization. Under its rulings, not only has it come about that it is practically impossible to introduce into the United States the works of foreign writers of the highest authority on sexology, but any one attempting to publish, either in the public prints or in book form anything touching upon such vital subjects, not only places himself or herself in danger of fines at the hands of the courts, but of all other forms of legal persecution, including a term of years in prison. So with suppressing the information upon one side and ignoring the matter of crass ignorance upon the other, of such matters, the result is precisely what the courts and the clergy are deploring."

The outlook for the future, then, though dark and despairing, is not without its silver lining. M. H

"TRAINING FOR FATHERHOOD."

Under a general heading "Straight Talk," a recent number of "Everybody's Magazine" contains the following:

"The letter in the July 'Everybody's' on 'Training for Fatherhood' interested me much, being a mother of boys. There certainly is a great lack of literature on that subject, as well as lack of training in that direction. 'My Wife and I,' by Harriet Beecher Stowe, is the only thing approaching it I ever read, until recently, when I have noticed a hint here and there, though not even 'three articles in ten months,' as your correspondent puts it.

"The saying, 'Boys will be boys' is taken too much for granted. It really means, boys will be careless; boys will be irresponsible; boys will be selfish, and, what is worst of all, boys will be more or less immoral. Consequently, boys grow up into manhood feeling that these are their prerogatives. No wonder there are husbands and fathers who are careless of how they provide for the wife and children, not feeling any responsibility in the matter.

"Others seem to think they have a right to use large a part of their income as they choose to keep, not realizing how the lack of her share may add to the wife's burdens. Still others appear to think the Seventh Commandment was intended for the weaker sex only.

"It is time parents and all having care of children were aroused on this subject, 'Training Boys for Fatherhood.' Proper training to this end would lessen many a wife's and mother's burdens, and would eventually make a startling change in the divorce list.

MRS. A. H. B."

"St. Louis, Mo.

Yes, training boys for fatherhood is second only in importance, as a department of juvenile education, to training girls for motherhood. But while training in handicrafts, in the professions—law, theology, medicine, militarism, civil-engineering, etc., etc., is considered necessary as preparation for the duties and the conflicts of life, our leaders in church and state do not think it necessary to train either girls or boys for parenthood. On the contrary the knowledge of sex, through and by which function alone it is possible to become parents, is forbidden, is tabooed, is denied to the young, and those who would give instruction on this subject are branded as criminals and punished as such.

As instances of this, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, of Chicago, was indicted, tried and sentenced to pay a heavy fine for instructing prospective brides and bridegrooms how to use their sex endowment, their sex forces, in such way as to secure their own health and happiness and also the right development, health and happiness of their prospective offspring.

About the same time the editor of LUCIFER was indicted, tried and sentenced to one year's imprisonment for publishing an article on the "Fatherhood Question," written by a man, and another article by a woman, a grandmother, giving instruction to both sexes on the parenthood question.

If these writers had given instruction to breeders of plants or domestic animals, how to obtain best results through control of sex function, there would probably have been no trouble.

Why this difference? Are cabbages, potatoes, apples, plums, peaches, pigs, cows, sheep or horses, of more value than human beings?

Why should Burbank be commended for improvements in potatoes, apples or cactus, while Dr. Stockham is condemned and punished for telling how the human race can be improved by much the same means, namely, by widening the sphere of knowledge in regard to sex?

Questions such as these are being raised on every hand, as when the editor of "The People's Press," Chicago, says, in a recent issue of that small but very lively journal:

"Chicago has had another cat show this week and a dog, horse and livestock show not long since, which proves that we take an interest in raising fine animals, from hogs up, and give the raiser a medal and cash prize; but when Moses Harman tried to show the people the need of raising fine children and wrote some able articles on motherhood and conditions necessary to conception and bearing of children so as to improve the quality of the human animals, he was arrested for obscenity, and sentenced to the penitentiary. It's all right to talk and write of raising fine cats and dogs for old maids and barren society women, but don't talk or write of raising healthy and intelligent babies,—that's obscene and might shock the morals (?) of Christian (!) society."

A LETTER from California informs us that Lois Waisbrooker is spending the winter in the Santa Cruz mountains, that her health is frail and that a little present in the shape of financial aid, on the occasion of her approaching eightieth birthday, would be much appreciated. Though an octogenarian Mrs. Waisbrooker is still working for the good of humanity, especially in the interest of freedom of speech and of press. A line addressed to her at Gibbs, Cal., would doubtless bring a reply showing how her present efforts are being directed. Her latest book, "Woman's Source of Power," is a work of great value, being a condensation or resume of several larger books treating upon the same subject. The price is 25 cents; it will be sent post-paid from Gibbs, Cal., or from this office. None of the pioneers of sex-reform are more deserving of remembrance in the shape of a birthday present than is Lois Waisbrooker. Contributions for this purpose may be sent to her through this office and also through the office of the "Demosatrator," Lake Bay, Wash., and will be duly acknowledged, or they may be sent direct to the veteran worker herself, at Gibbs, Cal.

THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN's letter to President Roosevelt, a part of which appears in this issue of LUCIFER, is an especially valuable contribution to the literature in defense of Free Speech and Free Press. We shall publish it in leaflet form and hope that all who are interested in this vital question will aid in giving Mr. Wakeman's work the widest possible circulation. Let us know, friends, at once how many you can use to advantage. Send any sum that you can to assist in defraying the expenses of publication, postage, folding, wrapping, etc., but let no one allow the fact of inability to send money stand in the way of ordering any quantity that can be effectively used. These leaflet letters are to be sent to congressmen, senators, judges, editors, postmasters, public lecturers, press writers and others. Often personal letters accompanying them will be found effective.

This leaflet will be ready for mailing soon after this issue of LUCIFER reaches its readers, and again we earnestly request our friends to let us have their orders as early as possible.

BOOKS, OLD AND NEW.

"Jeanette; The Reclaimed Delilah." "A Thrilling Story of Abandoned Life, by a Man of the World. Truth is Stranger Than Fiction." William Nicholson & Sons, publishers, London.

The subject of this booklet is not new. It is old as the history of woman's enslavement to man's selfish passion—of woman's confiding woman's love and trust, and of man's betrayal of that love and trust. The author does not pose as a reformer, not as a philosopher, but simply as an observer of facts, an observer who has the power to weave those facts into one of the most absorbingly interesting stories ever penned.

The heroine of the story is a clergyman's daughter brought up in ignorance of what life means, and especially of what sex-life, sex-function, means. When driven from home because of the natural consequences of this ignorance, she tried to drown herself, was defeated of her purpose in a very remarkable way; joined a theatrical troupe and gradually drifted into the life of a "courtesan."

While plying this vocation the writer of the story made an effort to bring about a reconciliation with her father. The following paragraphs tell of the failure of that effort, and fitly describe, no doubt, the mental attitude of the vast majority of women thus betrayed and abandoned to the fate of a "common prostitute" in the great cities of so-called "Christian civilization":

"Poor Jeanette! Though beautiful as a Greek, she is superstitious as a Buddhist. How quickly she read in my face the tale of my failure with her father! What strangely contradictive cogitations she creates in my mind when, on my trying to paint to her the fearful consequences of remaining in her present mode of life, she quietly says, "Oh! God is good; He will take care of me." God is good! And this said with full faith, in a brothel, and by a woman at the sight of whom pious people draw up the skirts of their garments, and flee as from a damned thing! Such is the effect of the fanaticism stamped into her by her self-absorbed parent—to trust in God when she should trust in herself.

"Poor girl, she is sore beset. The direful picture of herself shunned by all those more fortunate of her sex who should show her most sympathy; the thought of being unearthed from every hiding place, dragged out from every disguise, and driven over the face of the earth like a hunted criminal; the picture of herself a prey to all the infamy and degradation to which the prudish selfishness of our conventional life would subject her, did she attempt to renew her life by one of virtue—still hold her firm to her lamentable occupation, and stand in the way of every suggestion I could make to help her to freedom."

The writer of this story—which he avers is true "in its facts"—seems to have caught a glimpse of the right solution of the terrible problem known as the "social evil," when he says she should trust in herself, not "trust in God."

In order that she may trust in herself it seems plain that woman must first repudiate wholly the old idea that she is "fallen" the moment she transgresses the artificial code of morality laid down by priest, judge and Grundy.

In order to trust in herself woman must assert her right to all the knowledge possible to be obtained in regard to her own body and mind, and this knowledge she must have as soon as her mental faculties are sufficiently developed to understand the meaning of words.

The old puritan idea that ignorance is the best protection of virtue is shown to be false by the experience of all the past as well as by the plainest dictates of what is called common sense—which, however, is the most uncommon, as we all know.

"Jeannette" is well printed, as are most books made in London; 104 pages, and is sold at 15 cents per copy, postpaid. Having received a good stock of this booklet from a generous helper in New Zealand, we offer to sell it to those who may want to distribute to others, at ten cents each, while the supply lasts.

"Marriage and Divorce," by Josephine K. Henry, Versailles, Ky. Price, 25 cents.

The writer of this well printed booklet is by no means unknown to the world of radical thought. In this essay she begins with the words "A Lance Broken on Behalf of Woman." Her opening sentences read thus:

"This pamphlet deals with the great subject of Marriage and Divorce from the woman side of the question. Men of all classes have given their opinions and legislated on the vital question while women who have been the victims of a faulty system have suffered in silence. Men have not solved and cannot solve it alone. It is a great subject and should receive all the light that human knowledge can throw upon it, and it is the duty of women to give their best thoughts to the world on the one subject that seals the weal or woe of their sex."

Mrs. Henry speaks of the consternation caused some years ago by the audacity of Mona Caird, when she seriously and pointedly asked the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" since which time, now some twenty years ago, "it has been a burning question, and as well expect death to add luster to the eye or bloom to the cheek as expect to stifle human thought on this subject."

Besides Mona Caird, our author thinks that Grant Allen thrust a "two-edged sword" into the vitals of our marriage system—as when he says:

"Last and hardest of all to eradicate in our midst comes the monopoly of the human heart which is known as marriage. Based upon the primitive habit of felling a woman with a blow, stunning her with repeated strokes of club or spear, and dragging her off by the hair of the head, as a slave to her captor's hut or rock shelter, this ugly and barbaric form of serfdom has come in our time by some strange caprice to be regarded as positively of divine origin.

"The man now says to himself: 'This woman is mine. Law and church have bestowed her on me. Mine for better or worse; mine drunk or sober; I have tabooed her for life.' There you have it, in all its native deformity, another monopolist instinct in this monopolistic age, the deepest seated of all—the grimmest, the most vindictive."

But Mona Caird and Grant Allen were not more dangerous foes to conventional marriage than is Josephine K. Henry herself, as when she says:

"The Christian of Europe and America today, at the marriage altar, assumes control of the body of the woman; chooses her home; makes all the conditions of life for her; requires chastity of her and retains liberty and license for himself; has a legal claim to the children she bears, and if he suspects her unfaithfulness, he sets spies on her life, and inflicting more lingering torture than that employed by the Turk, he drags the woman into a prying, insolent court, composed of men alone, divorces her with contumely and makes her an outcast from heart, home and society."

That women are slowly waking to a sense of the insanity, the inhumanity, the irrationality of canon law marriage is indicated by such incidents as this related by Mrs. Henry:

"In Washington city a couple went to a magistrate to be married. The young woman, a high school graduate, on entering the magistrate's office, said: 'Say, Mr. Magistrate, if this man does not treat me right, and if either of us fail to live up to the marriage contract and are unhappy, can we dissolve this partnership?'

"The official was thunderstruck and said: 'Preposterous! No indeed! This is a life contract.'

"The woman turned to the young man and said: 'James, it is all off. I cannot make any such contract.'"

"That girl," adds Mrs. Henry, "possessed a superior brand of common sense, which if possessed by all men and women would save them from much misery."

Among the sayings quoted by our author is this from Landor:

"Death itself, to the reflecting mind, is less serious than marriage. Death is not even a blow; not even a pulsation; it is a pause, but marriage unrolls the lot of numberless generations."

Most sincerely would I recommend all of LUCIFER'S readers to send to the author for a copy of "Marriage and Divorce," and after reading pass it to some friend, or get up a club and send for a few dozen copies for general missionary work.

If, when Garrison discontinued the old "Liberator"—because he thought its work was done—he had carefully looked into the marriage and divorce question, he might soon have seen that there was more need of the "Liberator" in that field of effort than ever there had been in the realm of chattle-slavery.

Much the same he would have found, also, in the field of monopoly of natural wealth and of the tools of production—in other words, the realm of wage-slavery. But of these two the enslavement of womanhood and of motherhood is the worst, inasmuch as it more nearly concerns the life of the race—the unborn who must take the place of the slaves now toiling in the fields of unrequited labor.

"Garrison the Non-Resistant," By Ernest Crosby, author of "Captain Jinks Hero," "Swords and Plowshares," "Tolstoy and His Message," etc., etc. Chicago. The Public Publishing Company, First National Bank Building. Cloth; handsomely bound and lettered. Price, 50 cents net.

For those who cannot afford to purchase the four volumes octavo, entitled, "William Lloyd Garrison, The Story of His Life Told by His Children," I would strongly recommend this comparatively small volume, which is much more than a compilation from or condensation of that larger work.

Opening the book almost at random at the seventy-first page I read:

"The non-resistant is no weakling. Garrison himself is proof enough of that. The very renunciation of physical force seems to give a new and loftier power to a man. No, the strenuous man is not the soldier on horseback with saber drawn, but rather the man with folded arms who sees a new truth and utters it regardless of consequences.

"No man can injure the man who refuses to be hurt. You may kill him, but you cannot touch the man in him. * * * The most influential men in history have eschewed physical force as an instrument. * * *

A WARNING.

"Let us beware, however, of imitations and travesties of non-resistance. It is no colorless, negative quality, and should have no taint of timidity, no suspicion of effeminacy. Let us be quite sure we are above violence and not beneath it. It is far better to fight to the death than to decline the combat from cowardice, whatever be the name behind which we mask it."

This seems to be essentially the doctrine taught by Emerson in his essays, especially those called "Self-Reliance" and "Heroism." According to Emerson, Garrison, Crosby and many more, the greatest of all the "virtues" is courage! This view is sustained by the etymology of these two words. "Courage" is derived from cor, the heart, the seat of life, the most important of all the animal organs. "Virtue," from vir, a "man." In all lands and climes the chief characteristic of man as man, is reckoned to be courage.

The mistake of all times is that courage is thought to be a physical rather than a mental quality. William Lloyd Garrison did much to show that the highest and truest courage is mental rather than physical, and that the highest and best resistance is what is commonly but falsely called "non-resistance."

The story of Garrison's life, as told by Ernest Crosby, is one of the most entertaining ever written by an American.

A CATECHISM FOR COMSTOCK.

O Anthony! Saint Anthony! Of virtue undefiled,
How shall we cast away the sins upon our conscience piled?
For all the world is going mad with questions turned to vex
The innocence we try to cloak about our native sex.

Whate'er we read, howe'er we read, with blinders or without,
The theme engenders more and more a taste we cannot doubt.
Its shame parades the modern stage, the novels reek with it,
Its fashions follow every age each kind of us to fit.

The magazines, the daily press, the pulpits, courts and all,
Of its unsatisfied distress to every nature call.
No tongue or language is exempt from all its songs and signs,
No censor held it in contempt till spoke your low designs.

Far from the city's dreaded slums we've sought the rural wild,
But animate creation there, undraped, is most defiled.
The vegetation, too, alas! the great division knows,
And every primal source of life in wild abandon grows.

"The Book" is built upon the scheme, and Law its passions tax.
The Art of Ages boldly laughs when e'er we turn our backs.
And now has Science to the world this heresy declared:
"Creation holds dominion here through sexes surely paired."

How will consistency persuade your law-encircled pride
To yield consent to Teddy's scheme anent Race Suicide?
How shall we search the scriptures far, through glasses safe with smoke,
To find the purity we need its license to revoke?

How shall we watch the turning tides? How shall the seasons keep
The hid, unsullied sex of us all passionless asleep?
How shall the music of the spheres be echoed here on earth
When you have locked away the joy that sings creation's birth?

O Anthony! Wise Anthony! Whatever shall we do
To neutralize the vicious thing that rends the race in two?
O would we were a neuter egg whose enigmatic state
Would charm away your snarling zeal and soothe your frenzied hate.

But, Anthony, mad Anthony, the sexes you will drape
Until all unexpectedly you'll wind yourself with crepe.
Then may you find an easy job up where the saints abide,
Supplying genders to the souls by nature thus denied.

GEORGE E. BOWEN.

PLATO VERSUS PLATT.

Long ago, Plato, who anticipated nearly all the advanced movements of our time, proposed that children be bred on the same principles as domesticated animals. This was very shocking to persons of refined mind, and they have protested ever since whenever some modern Platonist has renewed the suggestion. The latest protestor is William Platt.

Mr. Platt admits that, "if you look for no more than a healthy animal," the prescription is admirable. That is a great concession, to start with. If scientific breeding promoted general health, and did nothing more, it would be the most valuable discovery ever made by man. Of all the sources of happiness, health is undoubtedly, by far, the greatest. But health does not only promote happiness; if we take the word in its wise sense, to include constitutional vigor, it is also an important condition of intellectual efficiency. The longevity of great men has often been noticed. Take, for instance, the most eminent Englishmen who have died during the last quarter of a century—Tennyson, Browning, Darwin, Spencer, Carlyle, Ruskin, Disraeli, Gladstone. Of these eight men, five were over eighty, two more were over seventy-five and the remaining one was seventy-three. Some of these men suffered from bodily ailments but all possessed great fundamental strength of constitution, and the power of getting through a vast amount of work. Lombroso in "The Man of Genius" gives striking proof that great men are long lived.

Mr. Platt is certainly mistaken, however, if he believes that only physical health and strength can be produced by breeding. All experience shows that mental and moral qualities are inherited as truly as bodily ones, and can therefore be developed by selection as surely as bodily ones.

Throughout the whole animal world we see that different animals are as regularly characterized by certain mental as by certain physical qualities. The courage and ferocity of the tiger are inherited as surely as his stripes, and an antelope is as certain to be timid as a tiger is to be brave. The burrowing instincts of moles, the nocturnal instincts of cats, the curious social instincts of bees and ants, are inherited with as much accuracy as the structure of their eyes and legs.

The same is true of the domesticated animals which have been artificially bred by man. No person doubts that the bloodhound, the greyhound, the setter, the pointer and the bulldog have been artificially produced by human selection. Yet these animals have mental peculiarities as clearly marked as their physical ones. In some cases, indeed, the distinguishing characteristic of a breed is a certain mental trait. Of this the pointer is an excellent example.

When we come to man, we find that the rule still holds true. The force of mental inheritance in human beings is perhaps best shown in the case of mental disease. Lombroso has told us how eleven members of the same family arrived in succession at Connecticut Asylum. In the remarkable chapter on "Inheritance," in his "Variation of Animals and Plants Under Domestication," Darwin says: "Every one knows how often insanity runs in families, and some of the cases given by Mr. Sedgwick are awful—as of a surgeon, whose brother, father and four paternal uncles were all insane, the latter dying by suicide; of a Jew, whose father, mother and six brothers and sisters were all mad; and in some other cases several members of the same family, during three or four successive generations, have committed suicide."

The evidence for the inheritance of mental talent is not quite so overwhelming; nevertheless, it is very strong, as any one will see who reads Galton's "Hereditary Genius." There are some striking cases now in English public life. Balfour, the present prime minister, is the fourth member of the family of Cecil who has held that office since the time of Elizabeth. His cousin, Lord Hugh Cecil, bids fair to be a fifth. The coming man of the Liberal party seems to be Winston Spencer Churchill, son of Lord Randolph Churchill, and a descendant of England's greatest general. No doubt these men have exceptional opportunities, but hardly more than several thousands of others who show no ability.

It may be said that it is dangerous to breed from genius, because of its close relation to insanity, alcoholism and other forms of degeneration. Although genius has often begotten genius, it is also true that the children of great men are often very unsatisfactory. It may, perhaps, be an open question how far it is desirable to breed from genius of the highest class. This difficulty, however, does not apply to persons of considerable but not prodigious ability. Galton and others have shown that talent at least breeds very true, and genius usually springs from talented families.

To avoid frightening the timid, I may say at once that I do not propose the drastic methods of Plato. In my opinion, freedom would suffice. All that is needed is to have collective maintenance of children and payment of motherhood, and to leave every woman free to select the father of her child on each occasion. The great majority of women would be sure to select superior men, especially if public opinion held up a high standard in this matter. We would thus have an automatic method of improving human heredity without restricting the liberty of anybody.

R. B. KERR.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

Dear Friend Harman: When I knew that Dr. Alice B. Stockham was indicted by the same grand jury that indicted you, I hoped that she and her friends—for their name is legion—would take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and secure a judgment from the court of last resort. But I see by the "Nautilus," Holyoke, Mass., that Mrs. Stockham, together with her business manager, have already paid a fine of $500, and thereby confessed guilt on the charges preferred against them and agreed not to send out any more OBSCENE letters to her patients. Obscene, in this instance, must mean any reference to the generative organs, their proper culture and management.

Now a very practical question arises: What will Dr. Stockham do in the premises? She has a large clientage who look to her as a teacher and guide in sexual knowledge.

Are these persons to be left without the knowledge so important to them? Or will Comstock, McAfee & Co. send a censor into the office of Dr. Stockham and expurgate the obscene parts from her correspondence and allow the others to go free? Can Dr. Stockham take a patient into her private office and give desired instruction in regard to proper use of the generative system? This subject is a large one and in the end these promoters of public debauchery and private ignorance may find that they have "bitten off more than they can chew."

This case of Dr. Stockham is the greatest outrage on human right that has ever been perpetrated on American soil. For one,

I am pleased that it has occurred, for it shows more clearly the animus of the promoters of ignorance than any event that has occurred since this persecution of truth, justice and knowledge commenced its work of sending people to prison for the simple reason that they were making an effort to enlighten the world in regard to important truths pertaining to the present and future welfare of mankind. Comstock & Co., are doing the precise work of the Spanish Inquisition, viz.: protecting church and state from the advancing tide of knowledge that threatens to overcome them. History repeats itself.

Protestants in this land of the free (?) and home of the brave are doing the same work that Catholics did in Spain some three hundred years ago, and for the same reason: Because they are ignorant.

The practical question remains, as Boss Tweed once said, "What are you going to do about it?" I know very little as to the case of Dr. Stockham, but of this I am sure: When persons holding the position of Dr. Stockham lie down like whipped curs at the feet of their tyrannical masters and confess guilt by paying fines, other and smaller men will have a mighty poor chance to obtain justice before such courts, and I am astonished Dr. Stockham did anything of the kind; in her surrender I read your fate.

Yet in all this I read the ultimate downfall of the cabal who have taken it upon themselves to hold all men, and especially women, in the dungeon in which they are themselves confined. Light is breaking in. The chinks will enlarge, despite the efforts of reactionists to plaster them up. The world shall be free in spite of the struggles of the ignorant to enslave it.

Your position in regard to this persecution is the true one. In the face of prison doors you have maintained the same calm demeanor, and have really offered the sublime petition: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

This spirit shall win in this fight, as it has won in every other since the foundation of the world. You will stand in future by the side of Old John Brown and others that might be mentioned, whose souls are marching on because they dared obey the monitions of the spirit within in place of the tyrannical edicts of ignorant men without, who are laboring to prolong the rule of themselves and their class, and promote their own private interests.

But why do I talk, when action, and action alone, will secure the end sought? There is little use postponing or delaying the coming conflict. Come it will, and come it must.

H. W. HUNT.

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

WOMAN'S SOURCE OF POWER.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

A LETTER TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

CONCLUDED FROM NO. 1056.

So much for this usurpation in its legal, constitutional and political aspects. Now, what are the consequences—religious, moral and social?—and, finally, the remedy?

The first result is the union of Church and State, surreptitiously but effectively obtained in regard to the most delicate and important matters in which it could possibly exist.

All of these Comstock laws, from 1872-3 down, were and are of theological inspiration and origin. In their first draft and intent they included "blasphemy" and free thought as well as obscenity and immorality. Only the latter two words were afterwards found to be necessary, for by making their meanings elastic they would cover all that was necessary to secure the censorship and control of the people's literature, and so of their thoughts, feelings and conduct. In a word, it is the revival of the inquisition in purpose and method in our secular republic, by a theological usurpation of the federal government.

This alliance of Church and State is becoming, whether intended or not, a bar to all social, moral and intellectual progress of the people. Progress, in its origin and thought, is the evolution of modern science against the old theology, which knows it not except as a hostile intrusion. You must be familiar with the works of Professors Draper and White on this subject, and of the retrograde position and influence of that theology in our slavery and labor struggles towards freedom and a higher welfare of the people. With us, as everywhere and always, it has been the ally of a corrupt, selfish and oppressive plutocracy, of which, sharing in the spoils, it is the consecrator and conscience. It rests upon supposed revelations, traditions and dogmas of the past, towards which its face is always turned. That past they are trying to retain and force upon the people, who have outgrown it and to whom it is a crucifixion. Such theology is the true Bourbon, it "neither learns nor forgets." Such theology is the true Bourbon, it "neither learns nor forgets," and its future here and hereafter is an illusory dream which science shows to be utterly impossible. But it has not learned that the Copernican system has swept away forever its heaven and hell—and all its foundation and substance. It does not realize "that the thoughts of men are widened by the process of the suns," and that religion, morals and life are being scientized and humanized into a new world, whose eternity is here and now, and whose "heaven" is its own continuous evolution on this earth.

Accordingly, the presidents of republican Mexico and France have been compelled, in order to save their republics, to lead their peoples out of theologic control, as to their education, morals and religion—that is, into our true world, as revealed by science, and man's lot and fate therein. The only real conquest by old theology in our day has been that of our federal government and of our education, our press and plutocracy by these Comstock laws and its false pretense of extra truth and virtue. How can that be true and good which is behind the age, an "anachronism," and entirely out of the line of the people's evolution and progress? How can that make and teach others to be true and good and patriotic—when it is neither? It is now opposing every step of progress. Every victory of science has been a victory because won over it. Serpent-like but with far from dove-like innocence, these spiritual descendants of those who burnt Bruno and Servetus have now joined hands to control our republic, consecrate our plutocracy, educate our youth, censor our postoffice and supervise our morals!

For reasons, above intimated, these obscurantists are now the last ones to be entrusted with any such functions—even where necessary—and the last two, that is, education and censorship, are simply samples of a past which we should join Mexico and France in allowing to remain such. In morals, for instance, we have this inevitable discussion of sex relation and affairs, which to the old cast-iron intellect and conscience of that theology is simply an impudent "obscenity." There they would compel and have simply authority, obedience, ignorance and silence, presided over by doctor and priest, with Mr. Comstock and the federal courts to drive to prison or suicide all recalcitrants, to the tune of "obey" and "no divorce!" It is just this kind of theological music and sex and woman oppression that has made "LUCIFER, the Light-bearer" a necessity. It is dated in the "New Era" of science and man, beginning with A. D. 1600, which opened with the promulgation of the Copernican astronomy and the theological burning of Giordano Bruno for his share in publishing that the old world of "creation" and a "sky-heaven" was at an end. Writing in the "New Era" (say Sept. 1, 305 E. M.), Editor Harman is powerfully convinced, now that slavery and its labor questions are being solved, that the sex difficulties and evils are next in order, and that the remedy must be found by a free discussion of them from the social, that is, scientific, point of view. The first step, he thinks, is to get force and rape out of matrimony. He says that "Slavery and marriage in, of and by force (like polygamy) are simply 'twin-relics of theological barbarism; that rape under the priests' blessing and the states' law is not only as great a crime and outrage as ever, but one for which we are all personally responsible unless we do all we possibly can to put an end to it. He is not opposed to marriage, but insists that it should be FREE, because love must be free or not be at all. Woman will then be protected and free in the control of her own person, and consequently with right of free divorce if she thinks it necessary. This free marriage, he is sure, will give U. S. better homes and offspring than slave marriage—and fewer divorces and abuses called free-love," and less prostitution, with all its dangers and horrors. Such is the head and front of his offending. "When some time be passed over" there will be endless wonder and regret over his conviction and sentence in this "free" country. I have little personal acquaintance with this man, but his paper, conduct and character are well known. He is simply an earnest and sacrificing reformer, and there is no obscenity, in any proper or legal sense of the word, about him or his paper. It is not read or circulated for that, but for the opposite purpose. And so is it with Dr. Alice B. Stockham, with whom I have no personal acquaintance. She is a regular physician, practicing and publishing to the great relief and benefit of her sex, and is probably the most determined, effective and esteemed opponent of "race-suicide" in our country. Since her arrest I have looked through her books, and they and her character, life purpose, and portrait in the catalogue of her works, condemn this charge of obscenity against her as infamous.

Neither of these victims of persecution know anything about this letter and nothing in it must be charged against them. My reference to them is chiefly for the purpose of illustrating and impressing the fact that this old cast-iron, "thus saith the Lord," view of modern thought and morals is utterly incompetent to be made the censor and superintendent of our people now. For it is utterly static and hidebound, not dynamic and progressive. Thus, it cannot distinguish the good and reforming in sex discussion and exposition which "makes for the righteousness," welfare and happiness of the people, from the bad and obscene which makes for the contrary, and is used to desecrate, degrade, misuse and waste sex and love until they become a dirty, disgusting, poisoning nuisance. "It is only the corruption of the best that can make the worst" is the true Latin proverb. Against this corruption and its indelicacy, improper exposure, evils and nuisances (which are really results of that theology), the states have proper laws already—let them be enforced! Our "theological postoffice" is the worst possible umpire and prosecutor in such most delicate affairs. The business of carrying and distributing the mails does not make an expert in sociology, literature and moral perspicacity. The addition of theological Comstockery and censorship can only make any—even the proper state laws—seem partial, ignorant and intolerable. Think of the United States courts enforcing such ignorance and censorship where the highest intelligence is needed, and in what should be the most free and enlightened republic of the world! No wonder we are a laughing stock to the rest of the world.

For instance, U. S. Judge Bethea, in his charge to the jury in the Stockham case, made the contrast between the law and morality of science, and that of theocracy, quite clear, thus (italics mine):

"The old-fashioned notion was as to many things that children and young persons should know nothing about them until able to understand them, and that as to many things it was better for ALL PEOPLE, men and women, to REFUSE to think about them or to KNOW about them." Again, the judge charges about Dr. Stockham's tract, thus:

"It is said of this pamphlet that it is a medical treatise, without illustrations, and beautifully and simply expressed in careful, clean, wholesome language. In able argument counsel for the defendant (Mr. Clarence Darrow) asserted it was wise to instruct ALL in the uses and functions of the human body, warning of the result of misuse; that the knowledge of such law, and a work of such character, could not be classed as obscene."

As his conclusion the judge charged:

"Now, under the law in force in this country, as even common sense teaches, and as found upon the statute, I think it takes the view in this kind of case—under the facts noted here—that it is a violation of the law. And the court will so hold and instruct the jury to find the defendant guilty."

This incoherent charge well illustrates how, under statutes theologically dictated and executed, ignorance is the enforced "law of the land" upon subjects as to which nothing can be of greater importance to human beings than knowledge. The United States should never permit its laws to lie across the path of those who prefer knowledge to ignorance. "There is no wisdom, health or safety save in the truth," say the wisest of modern men. For our republic to shut off any source of truth and knowledge from its people is at once tyranny over and treason against them. It is taking the sun from the sky. All of the offenses of these so-called "criminals" are trivial in comparison with that. The evil consequences of enforced ignorance are beyond calculation. Comstockery fraudulently boasts of its thousands of arrests and its tons of confiscated literature. Yet the real evils it has reached could easily have been removed by the police departments, had the matter been left to, instead of taken from, them by the United States, whose business under the Constitution it was not. Ignorance, fraud and cruelty are the results of this usurpation. People cannot and will not consult doctors or priests for necessary truth even if they could afford it—which they cannot. The communication of such truth and knowledge by print is a public necessity. What a fraud and a shame to call such literature "obscene" and its authors "criminals!" And the murderous cruelty of all this is ours, unless we protest and do all we possibly can to bring it to an end. Some thirty years ago Mr. Comstock was boasting that besides his thousands of "convicts" and tons of "unfit" (?) he had driven fifteen people to suicide; since then the list has doubtless doubled. The last one publicly known (for most of them die silently), was that friend of Mr. W. T. Stead, referred to in the above quotation from him. Her enforced suicide was a murder, of which we all share the guilt. It was the first stroke that aroused Mr. Stead to some realizing sense of that monster hybrid of theocracy and plutocracy, that "anachronism," against which the intelligence of the world stands aghast. Because of some words of sympathy, a letter from the broken heart of that victim's mother came to me. To me it brought the question: "Can nothing be done to prevent such tragedies?" The only answer then could be, "Nothing now."

To justify this answer a few words of history are needful. This law of 1873 had been passed in the turmoil of a closing session, without the knowledge of the people, and without being understood by President Grant, who was opposed in mind and heart to any sort of union of Church and State (see his Congress message and Des Moines speech). The "repeal or modification" of that law, so as to prevent the evils which have followed, was petitioned for by over 70,000 citizens, among whom were the first and best in nearly every state, such as James Parton, the historian; Hon. Elizur Wright, Horace Seaver and James Verity, in Massachusetts. In New York, by Courtlandt Palmer, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Oliver Johnson, and many more, equal in worth and character, if not in fame. Their motto was "Liberty and Union, now and forever, one inseparable!" Yet the position of Webster and of the whole country in 1836 was ignored. The petition was of no avail. The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in re Jackson followed in 1877, affirming that act by an obiter dictum illustration, as if covered by a law passed in 1872. Thus the whole Comstock legislation has received the apparent recognition of the Supreme Court as constitutional. Many have found it hard to treat the Jackson opinion with anything like the respect due to the court. It reversed the opinion of all jurists and of the whole country as settled in 1836, and was felt to be a most unfortunate dictation of theocracy. I think it was Hon. Elizur Wright who said, that the only thing it settled was the non-existence of any heaven or hell, for if Dogberry was in either he would certainly return to earth to crown that opinion with laurel. It was at once pointed out that though the states and people had committed the whole postal business to Congress by the power to "establish postoffices and post roads," and that such power had been variously exercised to include or exclude from the mails, yet that such exercise had been invariably for postal purposes only, and instead of justifying the notion that Congress could exclude beyond postal, and for "ulterior purposes," it made imperative the contrary conclusion that they could not. This was confirmed by the fact that the Constitution expressly names the criminal jurisdiction granted to Congress and leaves none to be implied. It defines treason, and expressly reserves all other powers to the states and people, and then by its bill of rights, the ten commandments, it interdicts forever all attempts to make laws that shall interfere with free speech, a free press and the rights of person and property. It was shown that Webster and the whole country in 1836 were exactly right, and that a postal exclusion and censorship for non-postal reasons and purposes was an usurpation, and a violation of the Constitution, than which none more "express," plain and palpable could be imagined. No answer to this exposure has ever been made, and from the facts and nature of the case, none can be.

Newton had one of the mightiest of human intellects, but when it struck the "Prophecies" he was a child. Our U. S. Supreme Court is a wonderfully able and venerable part of our government, trustworthy and final as to private differences and ordinary legal questions, but when it strikes great political, moral and religious evolutions under the bias of politics, theocracy and plutocracy, then, from its very nature, as Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln pointed out, it cannot well help but "go wrong." Its embryo was the conservative and organizing intellect of Hamilton. But Washington kept him in check by keeping Jefferson at his right hand. When Jefferson succeeded Washington he rose above the Alien and Sedition law decisions of the federal courts. Thus Jackson rose above the Supreme Court's U. S. Bank decision. Lincoln raised the whole nation above its Dred Scott decision. Grant rose above its first greenback decision, and "reformed" the court to do it. There are several other of its decisions (notably that of the income tax), which the presidents and people must overrule by rising above, but none more certainly than this postal usurpation, with its censorship, decoy, espionage, and limitless federal criminal jurisdiction—limitless as to crimes and penalties.

Nor is this difficult to do. Because a court has decided an Act of Congress not to be unconstitutional, Congress is thereby placed under no obligation not to repeal or modify that act. The law, decision, discussion thereof, and the evils necessarily attending its execution, may well justify such action and repeal on the part of the people and their President and Congress without the slightest disrespect to the former Congress or the court, or the proponents of the laws themselves. The exigencies which were supposed to call for such legislation have passed away. As Mr. Shaw says, "Hell is paved by good intentions, not bad ones." The last thirty years of Comstockism has shown sufficient percement of that kind! Now let us return to the Constitution, the common law, and common sense, with its prosecutors, courts, and grand and trial juries of our country. Let the postal department attend to postal affairs only, and leave the censorship, criminal prosecution for all sorts of things, and the multiplication of tragedies and suicides to the past, or to those more fit and responsible. Let us have no Comstock as the censor and inquisitor of ninety millions of free people. He is doubtless sound in every theological dogma, he says his prayers every day; but he never heard of Mr. Stead nor Mr. Shaw, and of the modern world in and for which they and art and science live he is as ignorant as a troglodite. Hitherto, as above intimated, I have not expected any relief from this national disgrace in my day. There were slavocracy, theocracy and plutocracy in conscious or unconscious conspiracy against the republic and the science, welfare and progress of its people, and they seemed to be inevitable. But physical and legal slavery has gone; science has left theology and its theocracy bottomless; the blessed "religion of humanity" arraigns, as it once did the monarchy, now the plutocracy, before the bar of a public conscience it can no longer subsidize nor bulldoze. The physical, intellectual and economic slaveries over the people seem to be vanishing together before the light of the "New Era." Our new literature of sociology brings a repetition of the voice of John of Old: "Reform thy heart and hope! for the Kingdom (republic) of Heaven (on earth) is at hand." (Matt. 3:1, 2.)

Take, for instance, that last and most timely book, "Constructive Democracy," by William E. Smythe, of San Diego, Cal. (MacMillan, publisher). What is that but the program for the opening of the door of a new and better future for us all? It seems to me to lead in the literature of rational practical hope and help, because, as it passes from chapter to chapter, it presents a more feasible and less revolutionary way than any yet proposed, out of complications and difficulties, political, social and economic, which have seemed insuperable. Of course, when these slaveries and their fetters and exploitations pass, Comstockery will pass, as did the Dred Scott decision and the Fugitive Slave law, when Lincoln finished the slavocracy.

Yet there is one condition precedent of any "Better Day"; that is the "Word" from the man who has the ear of the people, their love, confidence, and who can speak with authority to be heard! We live in a Babel—in a hum of voices, each confusing or cancelling the other. There is needed a successor of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, to speak and act as they did and as the world in the great emergencies which now threaten. In an utterance of Mr. Smythe since his book, but a fitting epilogue thereto, he leads us to look at the present occupant of the presidential chair as THE MAN. He says: "I believe the country is fast approaching a crisis, and that we must enter upon a period of genuine constructive progress, if disaster is to be avoided. I believe we should consciously progress in the direction of a higher co-operation among men, and a loftier expression of democracy. My book is a sincere attempt to show how this may be done, 'with malice toward none, with charity for all.'

"I believe President Roosevelt is for Humanity, and that he has boundless courage, but I do not believe that he knows clearly what to do, nor that he can get the right kind of advice from some of the influences which surround him. His hold on the popular confidence, and even affection, is extraordinary, yet I believe the real test is still ahead of him, and that he has yet to 'make good.' Can he find the true course between Scylla and Charybdis,—between Plutocracy and Socialism. That is the task which he now confronts. If he fail, his failure will be the most pitiable incident in American history; but if he succeed, he will stand forever on the heights with Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln." These words, from one able, earnest, loving soul, I felt should go to another—the one he meant, and so they are here. They are an echo and repeat the words of John's disciples to the ideal Christ: "Art thou he that should come? Or do we look for another?" (Matt. 11:3; Luke 7:19.)

These are the words of thousands—nay, of millions—to our President now. That they may not be left and compelled to look for another, is the earnest wish and hope of—

Your sincere, admiring, well-wisher and obedient SERVANT,

THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

P. S.—This letter is regarded by me as a parliamentary "Question of Privilege," belonging to the President and the "House," the great body of the people—so not hearing otherwise, it will be also open to them.—T. B. W.

"COMSTOCK THE KING OF PRUDES."

[It will be remembered that Bernarr Macfadden, editor of the magazine "Physical Culture," New York, was arrested some time ago by Anthony Comstock on the charge of having printed lewd and lascivious pictures in his magazine, namely, pictures of the "human form divine." In the December number of "Physical Culture" was begun a series of articles by Mr. Macfadden, entitled, "Comstock, the King of Prudes." In his January number appears a continuation of this series, from which I quote the following paragraphs: M. H.]

"Why, Mr. Comstock, if you are really endeavoring to protect the boys and young men, do you not continue to give your attention to the quack doctors? They do boys and young men a thousand times more harm than the worst pictures or written sentences have ever done, or ever can do. The advertisements of these quacks fill columns on columns of nearly every daily newspaper, they greet your eye every time you spend a cent to read the news of the day. Why, Mr. Comstock, do you neglect this mighty evil? Why do you allow these monstrous frauds to go by unnoticed and unchecked?

"Thousands, yes, millions of boys and young men acquire, often unknowingly, vile debilitating habits because of the policy of mystery and secrecy that you so emphatically advocate. The penalty for their sins they pay in full with physical and mental agony. Then, naturally, the poor victims look for advice. They turn to quack 'physicians.' They are ashamed to go to their family doctor. The glaring sensational advertisements of these quacks immediately appeal to them. They read their so-called 'guarantees to cure' and hypocritical promises, and are induced to believe that a remedy is within their reach. They fall into the hands of these medical pirates, because of the ignorance made possible only through the prudery that you are so ardently advocating.

"You, Mr. Comstock, in all your career, have vehemently advocated the policy of mystery in all matters appertaining to sex. If you are a conscientious man, even if you believe in the righteousness of such a ruinous policy, you must, at least, realize the necessity for protecting the boys and young men from these monstrous scoundrels, the quacks.

"WHY DON'T YOU BEGIN THIS WORK? Why don't you join hands with 'Collier's Weekly,' 'The Ladies' Home Journal,' with 'PHYSICAL CULTURE,' and other publications who are attempting to expose these scoundrels?

"I believe that the objects of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice are of such a nature, that they would heartily commend your every effort in the work of annihilating these medical charlatans.

"I would like to make you realize, Mr. Comstock, the higher characteristics of the human body. Your view of the human body is more sacrilegious than is that of the most hardened infidel. The most beautiful painting suggests nothing to you but that which is lewd, vulgar and obscene. Beauty in the form, in the features, and in the outline is lost upon you. Your mind is so impregnated with the obscene, vile and the vulgar, that no other conception, save such, can possibly be aroused in it even when you read the works of the most brilliant intellects or contemplate the divinest products of the sculptor's chisel or the artist's brush and palette.

"Anthony Comstock, the self-constituted Keeper of Public Morals, seeks to deny to the community afflicted with him, the right of free choice in questions of art and literature. That Mr. Comstock has neither a critical knowledge of the one nor a comprehensive acquaintance with the other, does not matter in the slightest. That his professional prudery often brings him into direct and disastrous conflict with the opinions of experts when the status of 'obscene' pictures or books is concerned, is of no account whatever.

"But even Comstock, king of the prudes, with all his beetle blindness of moral vision, will hardly deny to his subjects the right of free speech. His attitude in this respect is, however, probably a matter of necessity rather than choice. If he had his way, it is easy to conceive of every man having a modified phonograph attached to his mouth, the records thereof being submitted to his majesty, to be passed upon, and if not in accord with Comstockian standards, due punishment to be meted out to the offenders.

"Free speech being still in order then, not because of Comstock, but in spite of him, the editor of this magazine proposes to make a legitimate use of the fact by challenging Mr. Comstock to a joint debate, the subject to be discussed being 'Ignorance of the Form and Functions of the Body is the World's Greatest Curse;' I to take the affirmative and Mr. Comstock the negative.

"With all his faults, I believe Anthony Comstock to be a man of courage, although I pity him on the score of his convictions. He now has an opportunity of uniting courage and conviction by meeting me as I propose. The debate shall take place whenever and wherever he sees fit, and shall be conducted on the basis of 'fair play and no favor.'

"Is the Secretary of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice willing to meet me in verbal conflict? If not, why not? To be continued."

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

TWO WEEKS AGO it was said, in LUCIFER 1058, that the editor was still at home, and that the cause of the delay in executing the sentence of imprisonment was not known at this office. The same state of uncertainty still exists. The absence of Judge Landis in New Orleans may have something to do with this delay. Mr. Stedman, our lawyer, expects to have one more interview with Judge Landis before execution of sentence.

LUCIFER NO. 1058

Went to press on time, but when it was offered for mailing to subscribers we were told by Mr. Hall—the superintendent of second-class mails at Chicago—very promptly and decidedly we were told, that the edition was unmailable.

When asked for specific reasons he pointed to the letter of Annie E. K. Parkhurst, on page 455; also to the letter of Mrs. M. W. on same page, and to the comment of "L." at close of the column; also to the reviews of "Books, Old and New," beginning on page 457; also to the poem on page 459, entitled, "A Cathechism for Comstock;" also to article on same page entitled "Plato vs. Platt."

The condemned articles were so numerous and so long that we decided not to expurgate but to distribute the copies already printed, as best we could, at public meetings in Chicago and elsewhere, thus making one more protest against what we believe to be the wholly unwarrantable and tyrannical interference with our citizen rights, and with the citizen rights of our patrons, and then leave it with these patrons—who may have the means to do so—to prosecute the postoffice censors for robbing them of this edition of a paper for which they have paid, and also for many other editions for which they paid their money and were not allowed to receive within the past two or three years.

BUT NOW BEHOLD A CHANGE!

Hitherto whatever has been done by the censor at Chicago has been ratified and confirmed by the department at Washington, until we no longer looked for any relief from that quarter. It was with feelings of genuine surprise, therefore, that on opening LUCIFER'S mail this morning, February 14, we read the following official letter from the Chicago postmaster:

CHICAGO, Feb. 13, 1906.

Publisher LUCIFER, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago.

Sir:—The department at Washington has ruled that your issue of February 1 does not contain obscene literature, within the meaning of the law, and hence is mailable. Copies of that issue will be received at this office from you for mailing at the pound rate of postage.

Respectfully,
FRED. A. BUSSE,
Postmaster.

But now a dilemma confronts us. What is to be done? The type from which No. 1058 was printed has been thrown into the box for dead metal, and the forms are being prepared for whole No. 1059, which number will soon be due to our patrons. Only one way out of this dilemma presents itself; it is this:

We always try to keep a good stock of each edition in reserve for those who may want additional copies for their files or to send to friends; also for sample copies. We have such reserve of whole No. 1058, and now, on the principle "first come first served," we will send a copy of this reserve to all applicants so long as the supply lasts.

Those subscribers who fail to get a copy of this issue—which, by the way, we are assured is an exceptionally good one—can have their time paid for extended according to their loss.

How much the continued protests, the courageous, manly, cogent and convincing protests of our many patrons against the inquisitorial policy of the postal department have helped to break the hitherto unbroken chain of "hold-ups" for LUCIFER at the Chicago postoffice will perhaps never be known, but that they have been potent fasters in bringing about this desirable result is very probable, to say the least.

Whether light has broken in upon the heads of the department at Washington and whether the edict has now gone forth that henceforward LUCIFER is to be treated more fairly, more justly, more rationally and humanely we can only conjecture, but that such is the case we shall continue to hope until conviction to the contrary is forced upon us.

M. HARMAN.

NO MORE CONFISCATIONS.

Among the reasons that cause us to think that light has broken in upon the heads of the postal department is the fact that the policy of confiscation and destruction of editions of LUCIFER condemned as "obscene" has been formally abandoned. The copies deposited for mailing of Nos. 1056 and 1053, declared to be unmailable, have been returned to us by the Chicago superintendent of second-class mails, with the statement that the department now instructs him not to send such condemned copies to the dead letter office to be destroyed, but instead to return them to the publisher with the statement, simply, that they are unmailable.

The question now seems pertinent: If the department was wrong in destroying, by wholesale, previous editions of LUCIFER because condemned as "obscene"—such as whole numbers 1009, 1042 and 1043—have not the publisher and the subscribers of LUCIFER a lawful as well as natural claim to compensation for the numbers thus destroyed?

What say the lawyers of the Free Speech League to this question?

WAKEMAN'S LETTER TO ROOSEVELT.

The letter of Thaddeus Burr Wakeman to Theodore Roosevelt, who now holds the very responsible position of chief servant—not chief ruler—of the people of the United States of America, the publication of which letter was begun in number 1058, is completed in this issue.

As stated in No. 1058, Mr. Wakeman's letter is printed also in leaflet form for convenience in sending to public officials—to congressmen, to judges, to lawyers, to public lecturers, to editors, to clergymen, to press writers and to leaders of thought and opinion everywhere, for the purpose of securing a repeal—or at least a modification—of the laws authorizing a censorship of books, papers, pictures, etc., in this country.

The court of final appeal in this or any other country is the court of public opinion. Unless backed by public opinion no law, however just, can be generally and impartially enforced. That the censorship laws of the Federal government are not generally and not impartially enforced is evidence that they are not endorsed, not intelligently endorsed, by public opinion. The fact that they are partially enforced, unfairly and unjustly enforced, is evidence of a lack of understanding, a lack of enlightenment as to their real character, nature or purpose, on the part of the general public.

To enlighten the general public as to the real character, origin, purpose and legitimate effect of the censorship laws of the United States is the purpose of this letter of Wakeman to Roosevelt, rather than with the expectation that it will change the opinions or conduct of the distinguished individual to whom it is addressed.

Regretting our inability to print all, or the greater part even, of the letters to Roosevelt sent to us for publication we again earnestly request all who are in sympathy with the objects, the purpose of Mr. Wakeman's letter to help us in all possible ways to distribute—judiciously distribute—this exceptionally strong and carefully prepared leaflet letter.

We are spending considerable time, labor and money in getting this booklet printed in the best style of the printer's art, and therefore do not want any copies wasted, but on the contrary earnestly desire and hope that they will all be placed where they will do the greatest possible good.

Again we ask of each reader: How many copies can YOU use to advantage?

The leaflet consists of sixteen pages of closely printed matter besides the illustrated cover—illustrated by the half-tone likenesses of T. B. Wakeman and of the editor of LUCIFER. While we are loth to place a price on a document intended for gratuitous distribution, yet as a work of art, ten cents per copy by retail, and five cents per copy in quantity, would not be considered a high price by those who know the cost of such things.

Again we say, do not let the lack of ability to send money prevent any one from helping to put these leaflets into the hands of influential leaders of thought and opinion.

The leaflet is now ready for distribution.

LOOKING FOR CAUSES.

At this precise hour, in the city of Chicago if not in the whole state of Illinois, there is an unusual shaking up of the so-called reform elements. A special dispatch to the Chicago "Inter-Ocean" from Peoria, Ill., Feb. 6, will help to explain the causes of the aforesaid excitement in moralistic circles:

"The suicide to-day of the Rev. Dr. George H. Simmons, pastor of the First Baptist Church, following shocking charges against him by boys of his congregation, has resulted in the ruin of the People's Savings Bank, one of the two institutions of which he was president, and a severe run on the other, the Inter-State Savings and Trust Bank.

"The disclosures regarding Dr. Simmons and his tragic death, following so closely the downfall of N. C. Dougherty, superintendent of Peoria schools, through whose defalcations nearly $1,000,000 was taken, has thrown the city into another ferment and business is at a standstill. For five years Dr. Simmons had been outwardly a model of virtue and one of the most prominent leaders in the religious, financial and political life of the city. At the time of his death he was the Peoria manager of Richard Yates' campaign for election to the United States Senate."

The exact nature of the charges against Rev. Dr. Simmons is not given in any of the long and sensational statements given out to the public press, for the reason, no doubt, that under the present postal censorship laws the papers that should publish a plainly worded description of the said offense would be denied the mail, and the editors and publishers would perhaps be arrested and punished by fine or imprisonment or both.

An editorial paragraph in the Chicago "Chronicle" of Monday, Feb. 12, is a fair example of the way in which the city dailies have alluded to one of the recent occurrences that have stirred the clergy as well as the editors to call for stricter enforcement of laws against offenders, young as well as old. Says the "Chronicle":

"In the light of the atrocity charged and apparently proved against that syndicate of three young Chicago 'schoolboy' lechers what will the juvenile court do if called upon to deal with them? Is it anything short of nonsense to talk of reforming creatures such as these? How is it possible for one to imagine that the world would be any worse off if all such bestial devils, young or old, were stricken out of existence? In the study of lawlessness now in progress which is to be saddled with most responsibility for the development of such monsters—the heroizing of crime by the yellow newspapers, the emasculation of criminal procedure by tricky lawyers and hair-splitting courts or the whining snivel of sentimentalism?"

As in the case of the Peoria pastor the nature of the offense charged against the "three young Chicago 'schoolboy' lechers" is only hinted at.

In the news columns of the Chicago "Daily News" of February 10 appears a sensational account, from St. Louis, of the crimes of John Brady, "a waiter out of employment, arrested on suspicion of being 'Jack the Stabber,' who has stabbed a number of women on the streets during the past three weeks." Proceeding the report says: "Brady was closeted with Chief of Detectives Desmond for only a short time when he broke down and made his confession. On the chief's desk lay the pocket knife that had been taken from the young man when he stabbed several women on the street one night three weeks ago and had been released before it had been ascertained that he had stabbed the women. Brady identified the knife. * * * 'I just took that knife and stuck it into them,' said Brady, in a high, effeminate voice, and with no show of emotion or excitement. 'I don't know just how the idea first came to me. When I stabbed the women I delighted in it. Just one quick stroke and it was all over. I didn't pick out women particularly; it didn't make any difference to me, so long as they were women. I never thought of stabbing men. I think the first woman I stabbed was at Eighth and Olive streets. After that I was excited and didn't know how many I stabbed or just what I was doing.' * * * Brady was identified during the day by a number of the women who had been stabbed as their assailant. He looked at the women contemptuously, but said nothing."

Another item of news in the same edition of the "Daily News" reads thus:

"Judge Ben M. Smith to-day refused to grant a new trial to Mrs. Virginia Troup, found guilty of having murdered her husband, William C. Troup, of South Chicago, in August, 1905. The court sentenced her to the penitentiary for a term of fourteen years. A motion for an arrest of judgment, made by her attorney, Isadore Pletke, was overruled. * * * On being led from the court the woman gave way to an outburst of grief and her screams could be heard a long distance away. She tried to tear the hair from her head, but was prevented by the court officers."

The Chicago "Record-Herald" of Tuesday, February 13, contains a two-column article headed, "Wounded at a Hotel by Jealous Husband:

"Crazed with a desire for vengeance when he had found his wife in a room at the Grand Pacific Hotel with D. P. Padfield, supposedly of Cairo, Ill., George W. Durphy, of Chicago, shot the woman's companion twice last night and then surrendered coolly to the police. * * * Durphy is superintendent of the Chicago Dock Company. * * * Durphy and his wife, who is only 23 years old, have not lived together since last October, though they had been married less than three years. On leaving her husband the wife filed suit for divorce. * * * Padfield also is married. His home originally was at Belleville, Ill., and on the operating table he asked Dr. Fletcher to notify his wife there if he should die."

When firing the shots that dangerously if not fatally wounded Dr. Padfield, Durphy is reported to have said: "You cur! I'll teach you to let other men's wives alone." And when arrested for the assault he said to the officer: "You needn't hold me—I'll not run away. This man has ruined my home, and I did what any other man would do—I shot him down like a dog."

When interviewed the mother of Mrs. Durphy said: "My daughter's husband has a peculiar temperament. At all times he was insanely jealous without the slightest cause. * * * I am not surprised at the shooting."

These are a few only of the instances of sensational crime, given with greater or less detail, by the Chicago dailies within the past week or ten days. My object in reproducing these sample instances of what is commonly called "human depravity" is mainly to call attention to what I believe to be a great lack of thoroughness on the part of those who are now making special effort to cure, or to prevent, the social diseases that lend to the commission of crime.

Some one has said that "whenever an unusually atrocious crime is committed, search deep enough and you will find a woman at the bottom." A far more rational diagnosis would be something like this:

In all cases of exceptionally atrocious crime, search deep enough and you will find unhappy marital relations and ignorance of sex as a social factor at the bottom; and if woman is concerned in these crimes it is generally, if not always, as the victim of wrong rather than as the doer of wrong.

In the case of the Peoria parson and the boys of his "brigade," and in the case of the "Chicago school boy lechers," the lack of correct knowledge in reference to the use and abuses of sex as the creative principle of all life, added to abnormal sex desire, was doubtless the cause of the trouble.

In the case of the St. Louis "stabber": A friend just arrived from that city tells us that the mother of Brady declares that she was stabbed with a pair of scissors by her husband a few months before the birth of the boy, who cannot explain why he delights in stabbing women.

In the case of the insanely jealous husband, it is the old, old story of "body-ownership" of woman by man, sanctioned by the laws of church and state, that was the chief cause of the attempted homicide.

The rational cure and prevention of these social diseases, it need not be said, instead of the periodic "crusades" against vice and crime that have been tried time out of mind, with the result that these diseases are probably more prevalent now than ever before, is two-fold:

First—Honesty and truthfulness in diagnosing the disease or diseases. As in the case of "crookedness" in public affairs of all sorts the first need is "publicity"—exact knowledge of the facts in the case.

Second—The removal of all artificial legal restraints—that is, the abolition of all serfdom, all slaveries, chief among which is the "Sex-Enslavement of Women"—the denial to woman of the natural right to self-ownership, in marriage or outside of marriage. John Stuart Mill's saying that "the only serfdom now authorized by law is marriage," and Elbert Hubbard's definition of legal marriage as "a scheme for holding together the incompatible," indicate the direction in which reform is most needed in order to bring about healthier and happier conditions of social life. M. HARMAN.

OFFICIAL PERJURY.

Strong light is thrown upon the crime of crimes, the "crime of government," by the letter of Geo. A. Schilling, president of the Chicago "Local Improvement Board," to the "civil service commission," in behalf of a petty official named Haffner, who has been accused of committing the law-made crime of perjury.

Part of Mr. Schilling's letter, as reported in "Daily Tribune," is as follows:

"With respect to the charge for which he [Haffner] is now on trial, I have no desire to minimize the far-reaching influence for evil which perjury plays in our human affairs. I desire to call your attention, however, to the fact that this offense is practiced so generally by the so-called better element in society that it has become a disease.

"It is reported that every wealthy man in Chicago and elsewhere considers it his duty to make false returns as to the amount of property to be taxed, and one court in the United States held that no man's evidence could be impeached because it could be proven that he had made false returns on his tax schedule.

"The oath which every official takes on assuming his public duties is that he shall honestly and faithfully execute the laws and the duties of his position, and yet it is widely suspected that public officials, as a class, are not generally the best but the worst element in society. The wholesale peculations of officers of insurance companies, recently exposed, could not have been done had not public officials protected them.

"It is even charged that the majority of members of that august body, the senate of the United States, are nothing but lackeys and messenger boys for corporate wealth, and if this charge be true then I assume that the majority of the United States senate have committed perjury in its worst form."

If these government officials who "protect the officers of insurance companies" and other wholesale robbers were not demoralized by their own business—that of robbing people of their earnings through taxes, direct and indirect, to support "the government"—there would be little occasion or excuse for the wholesale charges of perjury made by President Schilling. M. H.

BOOKS OLD AND NEW.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood, by Agnes Nesbit Benham.

This book has been several years before the English-speaking public, but has never received the recognition its merits deserve. Written by a cultured English mother living in South Australia "close to the heart of Mother Nature," its manner, as well as matter, is straightforward and unconventional and yet by no means repellant to the healthy mind, even though trained according to modern standards of delicacy and refinement.

Throughout the book the author's chief aim appears to be to arouse women, especially mothers, to a sense of their responsibility as creators—as when she says:

"It is not too much to say that the regeneration of the race lies with her [with woman]. But to admit this, even in a limited degree, implies a tremendous alteration of conditions—an alteration amounting to an upheaval indeed. She must be supreme in the creatory of the race. Instead of being the toy, the plaything or the victim of man's sensual passions, she must be the mistress. It is her place to indicate to him when she feels that conditions are propitious for the conception of a new being whom Love alone must call into existence.

"Just think of the haphazard way in which children are generated now. They are very often not the thing desired but a MOST UNWELCOME ADJUNCT. And the mother's feelings of dismay at the impending visitation are frequently deepened by the reproaches and sneers of the husband, who, having sown in selfishness and lust the seeds of human life, is most unwilling to meet the consequences of his action. Thus the young life just launched, ere it has had time to build its human temple, finds hostility and difficulty, 'unaptness and stubbornness of ground, that will not yield unto her form's direction,' and the heavenly plan is marred, while the parents perhaps wonder in after life why that child is so ugly-tempered or so stupid.

"Remember, in the house-building of the soul, it is the child who builds the house; the mother's part is to clear away obstructions, to supply material and TO SUGGEST. Endless is her power in this direction, for HER SUGGESTIONS HAVE ALL THE EFFECT OF COMMANDS."

As clearly indicated in these paragraphs Mrs. Benham does not ignore nor forget the responsibility of fatherhood. While insisting upon the paramount right of motherhood to decide when conditions are suitable and when they are not, the author sees clearly that it is man's province, man's duty, to prepare conditions under which woman can do her best work, her perfect work, as builder—jointly with the child itself—of a new and better race.

Mrs. Benham has kindly offered to donate a number of copies of "Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood" for the benefit of LUCIFER'S defense fund against the assaults of the Postal Inquisition. The book is beautifully and substantially bound and will be sent to subscribers and patrons for 75 cents each while present supply lasts.

Institutional Marriage, as seen by a Marsite, or traveler from the planet Mars. By M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Astronomers tell us that Mars is much older than Earth and that hence we may reasonably suppose social conditions, social and political institutions on that planet, to have reached a higher degree of perfection than those to which we on Earth now submit—approvingly or under protest, as the case may be.

Many others have adopted this harmless fiction—that of making a Marsite, a Saturnite, a wanderer from Venus or Jupiter, to lecture us on manners and morals, as well as on politics, mechanics, physical or cosmic science, etc., etc., and therefore I claim no patent on this method of putting my own ideas before my readers.

This story or essay, first delivered as a lecture, was run as a serial in LUCIFER, a few years ago, then issued as No. 11 of "The Lightbearer Library," a monthly publication. For many months "Institutional Marriage" has now been reported "out of print," but quite unexpectedly, a few dozen copies have been discovered and are now offered, postpaid, at ten cents per copy.

The Moods of Life—Poems of Varied Feeling—By William Francis Barnard. A book of short poems, about one hundred in number, that will be sure to interest and please LUCIFER'S readers. Mr. Barnard has often written for our columns and some of these poems may already be familiar to older readers. Those who have not seen his handiwork can judge of the book by the following specimen, entitled "Love's Way":

Love wears no chains or fetters save its own,—
The golden bonds of homage and desire.
The steel-linked gyves of duty cold and dire,
It breaks in twain, and rule is overthrown.
Not in the will, but in the heart alone,
Love has its life; and if at last it tire,
'Tis fruitless work to blame its failing fire,
Or try with force to teach it to atone.

If love would stay, not all the woeful stings
Of direst fate could tempt it to retreat;
If Love would go, not all the wealth of Kings
In heaped gold could make its serfdom sweet.
Freely it comes; and bind not thou its wings,
Or lifeless Love will lie beneath thy feet.

"Moods of Life" is issued by the Rooks Press, the Rookery, Chicago; is beautifully bound in cloth and gold, and is sold for one dollar and fifty cents per copy. It can be ordered through this office. M. H.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE.

In LUCIFER 1058, page 457, quoting from R. W. Shufeldt in the "Arena," it was stated "that it is practically impossible to introduce into the United States the works of foreign writers of the highest authority on sexology." An instance of this despotic interference with citizen rights is the following, clipped from an exchange by a friend:

"Upon complaint of a citizen, Collector of Customs Busby, of Dawson City, visited the Carnegie public library and seized the collection of some two hundred works in French, chiefly fiction, on the ground that both the letterpress and the illustrations were indecent and contrary to law. The books have but recently arrived direct from France for the use of the French-speaking citizens of Dawson, and the library officials say that they were ignorant of the character of the works. The offenders are liable to fines of $200 without appeal."

What must these "French-speaking citizens of Dawson" think of the laws and customs of this boasted land of freedom?

"A STATE OF CHAOS."

BIGOTRY AND INTOLERANCE.

Speaking of "chaos" once more, I want to announce to the friends with yellow streaks down their backs that I do not need advice in the conduct of my own affairs. No government official can censor my work with impunity until he has been legally appointed and the writ of habeas corpus has been suspended. I have had numerous letters from tenderfeet who "endorse every word in 'The Ophthalmologist,'" but "doubt the wisdom of its course in attacking the elephant by putting your head in its mouth and then twisting its tail." I resent the insinuation that I print obscene things in my paper, and declare I am a part of the elephant, but not the tail.

One writer refers to the "Hull-sale indictment of the P. O. D." I hate a cheap punster. Paul Hull is a good fellow personally. He simply overstepped his official bounds when he began to argue morals with Editor Harman. It gave the appearance of personality to his act in holding up Harman's paper, which I know was only obedience to instructions from a higher power, that, when it comes to a showdown, will endeavor to use Paul Hull as a scapegoat. Then I'll be on Paul's side with both feet and "big stick."

It is not all in official life that intolerance is exhibited, however. I was talking to a very nice old gentleman the other day, one who is on the side of free thought and free speech, but he referred to Editor Harman as "an old free-lover." It is not the words, but what they imply, that I object to. He evidently used them in the sense that many others do—opprobriously, to discredit one of good intentions, and tell a lie about him, without actually charging licentiousness in so many words. That is an old habit among advocates of the Christian code; they seek to show that any who differ from them are lewd. It shows where their minds are. I do not know Mr. Harman, but I know his criticisms must touch tender spots or they would not want to suppress him. I do not know what he advocates, except as he is misrepresented by these fellows who want to judge but not be judged, and it increases my respect for him. The dirty Taggart case, dragging in little thirteen-year-old girls, who peeped through keyholes, is a disgrace to society, the army, the courts, the lawyers, the spectators and the principals, the press and the readers. The "powers that be" did not suppress the dirty press that printed it, and I dare them to try to suppress so clean a moral journal as "The Ophthalmologist."—"The Ophthalmologist," Chicago.

OUR MORAL GUARDIANS.

I have just been reading accounts of the wonderful results in Floriculture in the creation of new and beautiful species by select marriages. "Of course," said Luther Burbank, "as great results could be counted upon in the improvement of the human family were not the study of the subject impossible." The United States postal authorities consider the improvement of the race too obscene a topic for discussion. A woman physician attempted to enlighten prospective mothers on the care of their bodies during an important period; a quotation from her essay was declared unfit for print, and the paper containing it was cast out of the mails by a Chicago postman who is still in office.

Certainly women receive very cavalier treatment at the hands of their men superintendents; they are to be scorned if they do not bear children; they are obscene and disgraced except they be willing to bear them ignorantly; they are driven out of employment the moment they are married for fear they may not know enough to resign when they should. The editor has my address; I hope I may not be forgotten when the family go to the Tulare "sugarin' off."—Cousin Beatrice in the San Francisco "Star."

COURAGE THE VIRTUE NEEDED.

There was once a discussion between Mr. Pitt and some of his friends on what were the qualities most needed in politics. Was it knowledge, patience, courage, eloquence, or what was it? Mr. Pitt said, "Patience." We liberals have tried patience for twenty years. I vote we now try "courage." I say again, don't let us be afraid of our own shadows. We have principles we believe in, we have faith, we have great traditions, and we have a great cause behind us and before us. Let us not lose courage and straightforwardness.—John Morley.

We need mental as well as moral courage. We are becoming a race of sycophants, cowards and mental dwarfs, willing to take what others say rather than exercise our God-given reason, and too ready to take up and unthinkingly repeat any shibboleth or cry raised by conventionalism or by classes, which are in many instances beneficiaries of privilege or the children of ancient superstition and unreasoning bigotry, without boldly, bravely and conscientiously studying the whole question, as is our duty imposed by the Infinite who gave us the divine gift of reason that we might think for ourselves. On few questions is it more important for men and women to think bravely and independently than on those of marriage and divorce.—B. O. Flower, Editor of the "Arena."

THE LOGIC OF SUPPRESSION.

Miss Alice Robertson, who is postmistress at Muskogee, I. T., believes in the impartial application of the law. Newspapers containing advertisements of lotteries are not allowed transmission through the mails and, knowing this to be so, she excluded the Muscogee Daily Times because it printed a notice that some young women of the town were raffling off two boxes at the theater for the benefit of charity, and also threw out the Phoenix, another local paper, that reported the winners of prizes at a card party. This is righteous—if the law is—but what will Miss Robertson do with the New Testament? Matthew xxvii, 35, gives the particulars of a raffle for a suit of clothes, although the name of the winner is withheld.

Moral: The more instances like this the sooner there'll be a revolt. Postmasters may commit many nuisances, but when the supra-moral ladies begin and measure the press with their yardsticks, I think the day will come when the male worm will turn. X.

ON INFIDELS.

Infidels, as represented by the National Liberal League, are opposed to the Lord God Almighty, maker of us all; to Jesus Christ, the only son of God, the Savior of mankind, the sinner's best friend and the way of eternal life; to the word of God and all the precious promises therein contained, and to the ordinances and commandments of God made for the elevation of mankind, designed to advance the highest interest of the human soul; to laws and their proper enforcement; to moral purity; to the Christian Sabbath; to the sinner's using common sense, and being on the safe side, repenting of sin, believing in Jesus Christ and thus making sure of his eternal salvation. * * * I have arrested over four hundred of these creatures. * * * Then came the answer to prayer, vindication, light and joy, positive proof that it is better to trust God than put confidence in men. * * * By the grace of the Everlasting God the liberal's demand shall not be allowed.—Anthony Comstock in "Frauds Exposed."

A CHAMPION DAD.

McDade, Tex., is the home of a champion dad—a dad such as might delight a Roosevelt. Here is his record: Sixty-five years old; weighs 200 pounds; in perfect health. Married three times. Children, thirty-one. Twins, six sets. His last wife was a widow, and she has given him nine boys and three girls. Thirty-one children, and two wives killed in the process! Instead of a letter of congratulation this Texan should have a ring put in his nostrils and be adorned with a blue ribbon, as cattle are at fairs.—Springfield (Mass.) "Homestead," Dec. 20, 1905.

Find fault, when you must find fault, in private if possible; and some time after the offense, rather than at the time. The blamed are less inclined to resist when they are blamed without witnesses; both parties are calmer, and the accused party is struck with the forbearance of the accuser, who has seen the fault and watched for a proper and private time for mentioning it.—Sydney Smith.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

ELMER ELLSWORTH CAREY, Chicago.—I note your proposed visit to some government domicile, where you will be a guest of the United States and I know it will not trouble you any; it will raise up friends and strengthen the cause of progress.

JOHN BOULTENHOUSE, New York City.—I enclose a couple of dollars that you can use as you see fit in fighting your persecutors. I trust that your spirits are good and that you will soon be free from your tormentors. You certainly show great courage in sticking to the ship under fire, and some day your work will be appreciated. With my best wishes for your good health and final victory, I remain, sincerely yours.

CYRUS W. COOLIDGE, New York City.—I am very sorry to hear that stupidity and malice are triumphant, and that you must go to prison for the terrible crime of trying to do something for the emancipation of women. But what can be done? Words are of no avail. I regret very much that the struggle for existence prevents me at present from taking an active part in the fight for freedom. I enclose $1 to be used as you think best.

AUBIN F. HILL, Boston, Mass.—I regret to learn that you expect to enter prison again for immodest ideas pfinted on paper. What are we to do if our words and ideas cannot be printed on paper and sent by the United States mail service? Shall we start a private free mail service to and fro in this country? Equality and justice do not prevail under the present United States mail service. We ought to be ashamed of the men in charge of the United States mail service.

ARTHUR WASTALL, 3 Amalinda road, East London, Cape Colony. No. 1054 is such an excellent issue that it has stimulated me to further efforts in propaganda work. I have now by me quite a stocks of back numbers, slips, etc., and so will see what inquiries the enclosed copy of intended advertisement brings in. I am sending it to a weekly illustrated that circulates from one end to the other of this sub-continent. Should results warrant it I will then advertise in whatever leading daily papers throughout the land will accept it. I think it time British colonists knew how liberty of speech and press is being trampled on in what used to be known as the "Land of the free" forsooth!

[The above letter shows what one of LUCIFER's friends is doing in South Africa. If only one subscriber in each of the British colonies, and also in each of the states and territories of the United States of America would adopt the plan of campaign outlined by Brother Wastall a tidal wave of public opinion would soon cause the repeal of the postal censorship laws that now disgrace this falsely called "Land of the Free."—M. H.]

O. H. STONE, Baring, Wash.—Dear Comrade: LUCIFER 1056, enclosing notice of affirmation of sentence of lower court, reached me to-day. Of course, without a complete retrial, nothing else could be expected. The powers that be can be wonderfully consistent when they think their interest demands it.

Of all superstitions that regarding the institution of marriage is by long odds the best beloved. It is verily the apple of the eye. And the relative necessity or importance of the different reforms of the day can be measured by the degree of animus displayed in persecuting those who are bold enough to question the justice of the existing order.

Well, comrade, this is hard on you, but I suppose nothing will satisfy your misguided persecutors but your going to prison, though it is a dirty shame. The old saying, "Judge not lest ye be judged," is far truer than is generally supposed. A sentence is the reflex of him who pronounced it. The knowledge that you have the sympathy and good wishes of your many readers will undoubtedly be some consolation to you, but the best of all—and nothing can take the place of this—is the sweet consciousness of having done what you think is right. May your health stand it.

WOMAN'S SOURCE OF POWER.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

"Fanatic!" the insects hissed, till he taught them to understand
That the highest crime may be written in the highest law of the land.
"Disturber" and "Dreamer" the Philistines cried when he preached an ideal creed,
Till they learned that the men who have changed the world with the world have disagreed;
That the remnant is right, when the masses are led like sheep to the pen,
For the instinct of equity slumbers till roused by instinctive men.

It is not enough to win rights from a king and write them down in a book:
New men, new lights; and the father's code the sons may never brook.
What is liberty now were license then; their freedom our yoke would be;
And each new decade must have new men to determine its liberty.
Mankind is a marching army, with a broadening front the while;
Shall it crowd its bulk on the farm-paths, or clear to the outward file?
Its pioneers are the dreamers who heed neither tongue nor pen
Of the human spidom whose silk is wove from the lives of toiling men.

—From "Wendell Phillips," by John Boyle O'Reilly.

WHY FREE SPEECH IS NECESSARY.

Our present brutal and cruel civilization can only be made to give way to a higher, better and more refined one through the maintenance of the highest standard of health, both mental and physical, and by a universal knowledge among the people of the natural laws of sex. In this age prudery, begotten of a lingering superstition, an heirloom of savagery, unfortunately militates against this very desirable state of affairs.—Pacific Medical Journal, January, 1903.

A very large part of the widespread ignorance in matters of this kind (perversion and inversion) is to be found in the professions of law and medicine, and to a criminal extent (so far as the public is concerned) is largely due to laws that have been enacted in this country in regard to the publication and selling of works devoted to description and treatment of psychical and sexual abnormalities in our own species. Authors of works of this class meet with the greatest difficulty when they come to have them printed and sold. He or she is at once threatened with legal prosecution and fine and imprisonment. Not only is this the case in our country, but, through another most vicious system, works published abroad by authors in others countries, having to do with the psychology of sex and kindred subjects, are either denied introduction here altogether, or so heavily taxed in the custom house as to materially discourage their introduction. It is this miserable state of affairs that is responsible for the prevalence of so much ignorance in regard to sexology in general, both normal and abnormal.—Pacific Medical Journal, July, 1905.

Still another cause is to be found in the infernal system of laws that have been enacted and are now in force, having reference to the entire question of sex relations of every description, marital or otherwise. * * * We have permitted to grow up in this country, under federal protection, the most vicious system of censorship that has ever disgraced a civilization. Under its rulings, not only has it come about that it is practically impossible to introduce into the United States the works of foreign writers of the highest authority on sexology, but any one attempting to publish, either in the public prints or in book form, anything touching upon such vital subjects, not only places himself or herself in danger of fines at the hands of the courts, but of all other forms of legal persecution, including a term of years in prison. So, with suppressing the information on one side, and ignoring the matter of cruss ignorance on the other, of such matters, the result is precisely what the courts and the clergy are deploring.—Whipping Post, by Dr. E. M. Shufeldt, Arena, February, 1906.

In the early anti-slavery times a determined effort was made to exclude from the mails in the slave-holding states every denunciation of the sum of all iniquities—human slavery. The people protested against the espionage put upon the mails, against the interference of the freedom of the press. We condemn the attempt to interfere with the mails now, though it be with a very different intent, because it violates the same great essential principles of liberty. —New York Sun, December 23, 1878.

The power that is asked for is certain to be abused. We remember when southern postmasters refused to deliver the "Tribune" to subscribers, on the ground that it was "incendiary matter." Nobody needs to be told that, in any political campaign, every political party having control of the postoffices would use its power to hinder the other party, that the sacredness of private letters would be subject to the needs of partisans and the whims of ignorant or rabid postmasters. An inspected mail-bag is the sign of the vilest despotism. The thing became so vulgarly shameless in Italy, that travelers were unblushingly told that the office had not yet read their letters! * * * The evil must be reached in other ways. Liberty has evils of its own, but liberty is worth a hundredfold more than the best of despotism. The people who would like to suppress sin by main force believe that they would suppress only sin. Pius IX. believed that he suppressed only sin while ruling the most vicious and ignorant population in the Italian Peninsula. Despotism may mean well in its sources; it becomes wicked and corrupt long before it reaches the masses under it. You must meet sin chiefly by moral and religious restraint; a little can be done by a free country through its laws, and that little we shall always favor. But we are not willing to sacrifice, or even put in peril, a free correspondence and a free press for any purpose whatever.—New York Methodist.

At the public meeting of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, the Rev. Dr. Duryea, of Brooklyn, plead earnestly for the proper education of the young in the knowledge of their own bodies and of all their functions; and since his speech was extemporaneous and not reported elsewhere, we were obliged for the following quotations to snatch from irretrievable loss these few good points by the aid of the phonographic art: "There is no reason for hesitation or shame in the presence of truth. All that has ever caused a blush has been the destruction of truth, in the form of error, and the corruption of that which is natural, in the form of vice. I believe that God in his purity conceived the human form; God is his spotlessness devised the sexual organs; God in his holiness infused life in the sexual power, and God in his glory linked man with woman. I am not ashamed of what God has put in me. I will never blush for any power with which he has invested me. I believe that the father should teach the son his whole nature, that he should describe the use of all the organs, and tell the compensations, social and mental, of the fulfillment of duty, and the ruin of abuse and perversion. I believe that the mother, in the atmosphere which a mother can throw around her daughter, could open the mind at a proper age to the nature of herself, her powers and future relations. If God made our children as they are, we ought not to be ashamed to tell them how they are made and for what. * * * You think to keep your children pure and innocent by keeping them ignorant, but this society has told you you cannot keep them ignorant if you try. The devil will inform them, if you do not. He will not give them the truth in pure light, but in light that has passed through a medium of his own device."

There is the very widest distinction to be made between writings intended to debauch the mind and incite vice and those intended to produce the opposite results by the dissemination of knowledge and of sound ideas regarding the sexual nature. Classing the two together is a monstrous misjudgment. The suppression of any sober, candid discussion of questions that concern the well-being of society is not only a mistake as a matter of policy, but it abridges the freedom of speech and of the press which is guaranteed by the constitution of the country.—Beecher's "Christian Union," June 28, 1876.

There is a society in this city organized for the suppression of vice. The spirit and purpose of this society I take to be honestly and simply this: to suppress vice, to keep down the elements that are perpetually demoralizing and rooting out the best seeds of human nature. With the methods by which this society hopes to achieve these results I have no sympathy whatever. Indeed, I protest with all my heart against some of the methods which they conspicuously employ. * * * If the higher powers are to subdue the lower, it must be by open and honorable warfare. It is of their essence that they are dignified, elevated and pure, taking every advantage which nobleness gives, scorning all advantage which only baseness allows. * * * Again I protest with all my might against the inquisition into the mail service of the United States. If there must be one thing upon which a free people must plant themselves firmly, never to be moved, it is this principle that there must be no tampering with the mails, and that whatever is deposited in the mails must go to its destination. Let the harm be checked on the spot where it falls. If the injury is done, let it be repaired where it is done; not on the way, not after it has started. Meet it where it occurs. * * * Again, what honorable, high-minded soul does not blush with indignation when he sees the confusion that is made by people who insist upon it that liberty of thought, freedom of speculation, freedom of speech, involves license of conduct, and when war is openly made upon free-thinking on the ground that in that very movement and by that very process war is made against licentious doing. The two things are not only different, but absolutely and forever hostile one to the other, and when that society adopts such methods as it commonly does, methods of confusion, then it is difficult even to make allowance for the spirit with which the association works, and not doubt the heart of that society.—Rev. O. B. Frothingham, delivered March 3, 1878.

THE AMBITION OF PARENTHOOD.

Honor to parenthood is not yet extinct among us. The respect paid to those entering upon marriage has its origin in a feeling of social regard towards prospective parents. And we may observe many deliberately undertaking the cares of a family of two, three or even four in the face of what may seem almost prohibitive difficulties. The childless, whether single or married, have greater freedom to move about, and much the better chances of obtaining such prizes of competition as are going. Even house room is not always easy to get for a family, and owners of house property in towns frequently refuse to admit children as tenants.

But those who regret "the good old times" when ten, fourteen or even twenty to a family was no uncommon number have little reason for pride in the past. They rather resemble the mother of a large family who thought she had no need to learn anything of the care of children, for, as she triumphantly announced, "I've buried eleven."

Our Malthusian friends who pointed out the bad results of "the devastating flood of children" were quite right. Too rapid multiplication is still an evil, both to families and nations, where it occurs. A heavy infant mortality is an inevitable accompaniment of it; and besides those who die in youth there are often many who have to be "buried" in celibacy.

The idea that children should be like "leaves and friends—few and good ones"—is certainly gaining ground. It is possible that a scarcity of children may be ahead, as a temporary condition, but if so, this will probably result in a reaction and stimulate the ambition of those best fitted to be parents. The threat of President Roosevelt to close the means of livelihood against independent women, a threat which neither he nor any number of politicians can carry out, will probably, like all unfulfilled threats, have the opposite effect from that intended, and make women shrink still more from enforced maternity.

No vigorous nation need fear "race suicide." The forces which we especially have to rely upon are: (1) The love of children which is so marked a feature of the American character; (2) the ambition of women to be mothers of the best possible children, and (3) the growing feeling of national responsibility towards children, which takes form in such things as maternity hospitals, free kindergarten and national education.

PIRIE DEPEYSTER.

WHEN DIVORCE IS A BLESSING.

The next time the anti-divorce crusade starts I'm going to take the letter I hold in my hand and have it copied a thousand times, writes Winifred Black in the Chicago "Sunday American" of February 18. And I'm going to send one of those copies to every minister who tells his congregation what a wicked thing divorce is, and to every woman who refuses to call upon a divorced woman, and ask each one of these persons to be kind enough to answer that letter.

I'd like to see what they would find to say. It's too long and too intimate to be published in a newspaper; it's from a little town in New Jersey.

It is some thirty pages long. It is written with the heart's blood of a miserable woman, who feels it her duty to labor with me concerning my false ideas on the morality of divorce.

"When I met my husband I was the jolliest girl in my set. I was always laughing and having fun; but the very day I met the man I married he told me that I ought not to laugh so much. After that, whenever he came into the room where I was, I used to try to look serious, so as to please him; for, in spite of my laughing he seemed to think a great deal of me. He gave me beautiful presents, and took me out a great deal, but he never liked any of my family or any of my friends, and as soon as we were married he told me that he intended to make a different woman of me. It didn't take him long to do it. I've been married ten years now, and I don't think I've laughed for nine. I have not been to a place of amusement but once since my marriage, and that place was a saloon. My husband forced me to go there with him, and introduced me to a lot of women who were smarter than I was, he said, and who would teach me how to turn my good looks to some account.

"I didn't want to learn from these women, and he has never forgiven me for it. He drinks, neglects me, abuses me, and half-starves my children and myself. For the past seven years I have earned every penny I have had to spend for food or shelter for my children, my husband and myself. I have done washing, paper-hanging, whitewashing, scrubbing and gardening by the day. I was a pretty girl, and I am only thirty years old now; but I look like an old, old woman. If I had left my husband before I had had any children I would have been all right. I ought to have done it then, for he began to abuse me from the very day we were married. He has told me a thousand times that he thought he could make me earn money for him the very first day he ever saw me. But when my children came, what could I do?

"I could not leave my baby, so I stayed. Don't try to help me—no one can do that. All I want is for you to warn girls against marrying a man who shows the very first time he meets a woman that he intends to change her very nature just to suit his whims. I have four children now, and I must live it all out to the end. Divorce may do for childless women, but there is no such thing for a woman who loves her children."

There are four children now, this poor creature says, and if she had left the man when there was only one child—what then? She could not leave her baby, she says. What strange hallucination is it that can make a woman believe that she has to leave her baby just because she leaves her husband? This woman has had to earn her living anyway; her husband has been of absolutely no help to her, and now she has four children to support instead of one. What sort of reasoning is this?

One time I went to see a friend of mine who lives in a tenement house. She is an unmarried woman, who lives in the slums because she finds life interesting there. The evening I saw her we had a bad time trying to get a few moments alone together. A woman from across the hall, whose husband had broken two of her ribs for her the week before, and a woman from downstairs, whose son had blackened her eye the night before, persisted in spending the evening with my friend.

"Poor thing," said the woman from across the hall, "it must be awful to be alone in the world like she is!"

It never seemed to occur to either of these women that being alone in the world might possibly be a little more comfortable than having the benefit of the sort of company with which they were both afflicted.

What a lot of trouble and misery we should all save ourselves if we would only look at things and see them the way they are, instead of persisting in looking at them as they ought to be. This poor little woman in New Jersey had it beaten into her brain some time in her early youth that a married woman was a woman who had some one to take care of her, and she can't get rid of the idea that this excuse of a husband of hers is, in some way or other, helping her in the care of her children.

Can't leave her children, indeed! Why should she leave them? Who takes care of them while she is out scrubbing and whitewashing? What's going to become of them if he beats her too hard some high-spirited night, and she dies? Wouldn't you love to leave children to the tender mercies of a man like that?

There are two girls among these four children. What kind of women will they make with a father like that to influence them? Doubtless he is counting the years to the time when those girls will be marketable. Unpleasant word? Yes, it is. Some facts are unpleasant, aren't they? But they are, nevertheless, to be faced. Why didn't that poor, foolish woman face the fact that her husband was a merciless brute the very first time he brought that fact to her notice?

Why didn't she say to herself the first day she had to go out to work to earn money to buy food for her first baby:

"I shall have to support this family, I see; I believe I could support two better than I can support three or four, and I will bring up my little daughter in poverty, perhaps, but in peace and self-respect."

I wonder if she'd look like an old, old woman at thirty if she had done that! I wonder if she and her little daughter could not have grown up together, loving and cheery and happy, with no blight of a hideous terror casting a black shadow on their lives!

Has a woman any right to live with a man like this and bring into the world poor little creatures to be ill-treated by him?

"I believe you mean well," says the writer of the letter from New Jersey. "But you cannot be right, when you say that a woman ought to leave a man who ill-treats her, whether she has children or not; she cannot consider herself alone, she must consider her children."

Quite true. Her children, she must consider them. That's what I mean when I say that a woman has no right to live with a husband who ill-treats her, and I'm afraid this letter from New Jersey has simply confirmed me in my evil ways of thinking. How do you feel about that woman and her children, O most high and powerful shouters of the duty-of-submission doctrine?

A STORY OF REAL LIFE, WITH SEVERAL "MORALS."

Those who believe that human emotions can be regulated by the "Be it enacted" of statute law are strenuously struggling to obtain uniform marriage and divorce laws, and to enact legislation regulating the qualifications to be required of candidates for matrimony. They apparently believe that the legally separated couples who are forbidden to remarry, and those declared physically, morally or financially "unfit," will meekly accept their condemnation to celibacy. They seemingly forget that in the countries where the restrictions on legalized wedlock are most stringent there is to be found the greatest proportion of "illicit" relationships. The following pathetic story appears in the Chicago "Tribune" of February 26:

"This is to tell a story of Chicago life—a true story of the struggles of two unfortunate people and their happiness. It is a case that recently came to the attention of E. P. Bicknell, superintendent of the Chicago Bureau of Charities. Mr. Bicknell vouches for the truth of the story.

"The hero and heroine live on the northwest side. They are known as John and Mary. Some months ago John came to the neighborhood. He was a blind beggar with no home to speak of. He lived anywhere and depended upon the generosity of the people for his support. Mary lived with her mother in a little cottage with scant furniture and scantier provender. Mary was injured when a little girl and she never recovered. She sat in her chair the long days through while her mother provided for the two as best she could.

"Mary never was able to move a limb, but she always smiled hopefully and tried to make the little home life cheery. One day last summer the mother became ill and after a few days died. Mary, helpless and without money, was left alone. The friends of the young woman, who always had helped her during her years of suffering, brought her food for several days. But they knew the crippled girl could not exist comfortably in this way, so they advised her to go to some home.

"But Mary, although a cripple, was proud, and she loved the little cabin in which she had lived so long. She said she could not leave it; it would break her heart. While she was struggling with her emotions in the hope that somebody might help her to solve the difficulty blind John heard about her predicament and called on her in a neighborly way. John, blind and ragged, spoke words of sympathy to the cripple.

"'Mary,' he said to the forlorn young woman, 'I'm blind, but I long to do somebody some good, and perhaps I can help you. It may be that each of us may in some way provide for the comforts of the other.'

"She brightened up. Her loneliness was gone. Eagerly she offered to do what she could to make the blind man happier and the two formed a mutual help alliance. Mary read to John and John carried Mary wherever she wanted to go. John went out and got what work he could find to do. He furnished the food for the little cottage and bestowed every kindness possible on helpless Mary.

"Weeks passed and the two became indispensable to each other. Friendship ripened into love and John proposed. There was pathos in the tender proposal of the blind man. He spoke fervently. Mary answered with the joyousness of a young maiden. She accepted.

"John forgot his blindness. Springtime banished the haggard winter of his life. He went to the county clerk's office to get a license, but he couldn't get it because he was blind and because the young woman was a cripple. The county clerk said it would be best to bring the girl along to make sure the granting of a license would not entail unhappiness for both. John bravely went back to the cottage.

"'Mary, you will have to go downtown with me. Don't worry, I'll carry you,' said John.

"He put her on a car and then carried her to the county clerk's office. Lifting her up before the wicket, he said:

"'Here she is, Mr. Clerk.'

"John was beaming and Mary smiling. The clerk couldn't refuse under such circumstances and he gave them the license. But their happiness was marred when ministers and justices alike to whom they appealed refused to unite them in marriage.

"After they had tried in vain to get married they went back to the little cottage broken in spirit. But their love would not down. John thought over the matter and then spoke up.

"'I'll manage it,' he said.

"He set a day for the wedding and invited the neighbors in to witness the ceremony. When their friends had assembled, John put his hand on Mary's shoulder and said:

"'Friends, this is our wedding day. We want you to be witnesses of this, our marriage.'

"There were tears in the eyes of those who saw the happiness of the two cripples. John and Mary now are living in Chicago."

While the sympathy of the reader must almost inevitably be elicited by the loneliness and suffering of this unfortunate pair, the question inevitably arises: "What will become of the children?" Of course Mother Nature and Love may take care of them—may mock the preachers of prudence by giving to these lovers children endowed with perfection of limbs and faculties. Yet the prospect of the children being properly nurtured seems very slight. And since the "Thou shalt not" of Church and State are ineffective, it would seem that in rational enlightenment is the only hope. Through it only may the "unfit" for parentage find mutually helpful companionship without incurring the guilt of a denial of the natural right of the child to be well born.

TO THE READERS OF LUCIFER.

COMRADES: At my time of life one cannot expect a great deal more of this life, and there is a liability to go at any time. In view of this fact I am preparing a work that I propose to call "My Last Will and Testament; A Glimpse of Naturalism."

The price of the book will probably be a dollar. Will those who will take a copy—if I am able to get it published—please drop me a card and say so?

TO LUCIFER'S FRIENDS: GREETING AND FAREWELL

Cook County Jail, Chicago, Tuesday Morning,
February 27, E. M. 306.

Dear Friends All:

Again the expected has happened, and again I find myself behind prison walls.

Yesterday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, Deputy Marshal Wainwright called at 500 Fulton street and very civilly and gently informed me that his orders were to conduct me at once to the Cook county jail and thence at 10 o'clock (next day) to the state penitentiary at Joliet. After a hurried consultation with Daughter Lillian and other inmates of LUCIFER'S home the marshal and I boarded the Lake street elevated train and in less than one hour I saw and heard the heavy iron door close behind me, shutting me away from friends and the sweet light of liberty.

Cook county jail, presided over by Warden John L. Whitman, has the reputation of being the best conducted and best managed jail in the United States. How true this may be I am not prepared to say, but from my short experience within its walls I am inclined to credit the claim.

Spent the evening writing letters to friends at a distance and in jotting down memoranda touching the business of LUCIFER'S office, for though it is now nearly two months since all hope of a favorable verdict from the Court of Appeals has vanished, I was not yet ready to turn over the publication business to other hands.

For more than a week I had spent most of the time sending out copies of the "Administrative Process of the Postal Department" and writing letters to editors and publishers in regard to this leaflet, so that the work of getting LUCIFER No. 1060 to press was only fairly begun when I was told to stop work and go with the United States marshal. Several editorials were begun, but none finished; among these the one entitled "Ernest Howard Crosby in Chicago" was the longest and perhaps most important.

The chief aim of that article was to show that, great as was the work of William Lloyd Garrison as a reformer, as a destroyer of crystallized wrong, there still remains work to be done in the line of radical reform—the line of destruction of crystallized wrongs—more difficult and requiring even more courage than was ever required to fight the ages-old institution known as Chattel Slavery.

I had intended to trace some of the lines of resemblance between the enslavement of the African to the white man, and the enslavement of women in so-called Christian lands to her sexual master, masculine man, such as:

(1) The black man born of a slave mother was never supposed to reach an age at which he could be self-owning—the owner of his body and time. He took the name of his master, changing names every time he changed owners. So of woman. Until married her body is not her own to do as she pleases with. It belongs to her father, whose name she takes, or to society—that is, to the priest and

MOSES HARMAN,
At the age of 75 years and 3 months, January, 1906.

This is the latest portrait of the editor of LUCIFER, and is probably the most true to life of any in existence. It is only by chance that we have it. We wanted photographs of him and his infant grandson together, and after posing with the little one the photographers requested him to pose for them. Two negatives were taken and both were so good that we ordered photographs of each. The above half-tone engraving is the same that appears in the leaflet by T. B. Wakeman. I am sure the many friends of my father will be glad to see this portrait in LUCIFER. L. H.

judge, who will not allow her to be self-owning. When she marries, the most orthodox of the Christian churches require that some one must "give the bride away." "Who giveth this woman in marriage!" asks the priest—as when Alice Roosevelt, 22 years old, was married a few weeks ago. No matter how old, she has not reached her majority, as man reaches his majority at 21. Then, as in the case of the slave changing masters, she takes the name of the man to whom she is given, and every time she changes masters she takes the name of the new master. If she becomes a mother her children take the master's name.

(2) The crystals that hardened and solidified chattel slavery were partly theologic—that is, partly religious; partly economic or industrial, and partly "societary," or how tos. The clergy quoted "Scripture" in support of chattel slavery; the man who wished to live without work supported the institution that compelled involuntary labor, and the man or woman who wanted entrance into the charmed circle of the best society knew that the "Open Sesame" to that exclusive circle was the ownership of slaves or the ability to use the slaves of others, coupled with undoubted allegiance to the slaveholders' code.

And so likewise it is with the enslavement of woman. Marriage—legal marriage, canon law marriage—is partly theologic (religious), partly economic (industrial) and partly how tos ("societary").

The control of sex, of reproduction, is claimed by the priest and clergyman as preëminently their own province. They can show texts without number to prove that God ordained woman's subjection to man, from the time of man's entrance upon the earth, and since the clergy are the ministers of God, the ambassadors of God to man, of course, to know the will of God as to marriage the priest or clergyman must be consulted. He it is who must tie the hymeneal knot, and in order that his work be duly honored and respected there must be no untying of the hymeneal knot. "Marriages are made in heaven;" "Whom God hath joined let not man put asunder."

Marriage is also an economic institution. Wives have an industrial value, a financial value. Orthodox marriage makes man the "head of the house," "house bond" (husband), ruler of the house, while the wife is a "weaver," a producing servant, an "upper servant without wages." The husband holds the common purse and spends the common earnings as he sees fit.

Marriage is a societary institution—preëminently so. He or she who would have entrance into "good society," to say nothing of the best, must be orthodox in belief as to the sacredness of the monogamic marriage institution, however little his own conduct may agree with that belief. As in the case of belief and practice of religious creeds, while sins of conduct are easily forgiven, sins of belief are rarely or never forgiven. That is to say, man, the lord and master, is not held to strict accountability for sins of conduct touching marriage; but not so with woman, the servant, the slave. Orthodox belief as to the marriage code will not save a woman from social ostracism, from a social hell, if her conduct is not in line with the code. Yea, more. Not only must her conduct be in strict accord with the code, but there must be no taint of calumny, no suspicion that her conduct is not strictly regular. Innocence is not enough. She must not only be "strictly virtuous, but clearly above suspicion," else social damnation is her life sentence.

I have written much more than I intended when this article was begun. Expecting soon to be called by Marshal Wainwright to go with him to Joliet, and expecting a friend to carry these lines to LUCIFER'S office, I close this "Hail and Farewell Greeting" by repeating what need not be repeated to those who have been constant readers of LUCIFER, namely, that, next to the breaking of the chains that now prevent freedom of speech and of press, the object of LUCIFER'S publication is to help woman to break the chains that for ages have bound her to the rack of man-made law, spiritual, economic, industrial, social and especially sexual, believing that until woman is roused to a sense of her responsibility on all lines of human endeavor, and especially on lines of her special field, that of reproduction of the race, there will be little if any real advancement towards a higher and truer civilization.

Thus far I wrote before leaving Cook county prison. I now add a line on train. My seventeen hours' stay at the jail were not unpleasant hours. I slept but little, but it was not because of discomfort but because I wanted to write as many letters to friends and as much copy for LUCIFER as possible.

Once more, as during my incarcerations in Kansas, I want to ask, as a special favor, that all my friends, far and near, will do me the kindness to write me words of cheer and hope—not so much that I expect to be despondent if I do not get the words of cheer, but because I want to keep in close touch, close fraternal touch, with all who labor and wait for the coming of the reign of truth, of honesty and justice. You need not write long letters, and especially I prefer that you do not write in a vindictive or revengeful spirit in regard to my imprisonment or the men who have been instrumental in putting me in prison. I do not always agree with Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles, but I do enjoy reading the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians—I think it is—wherein he glorifies the spirit of love and forgiveness of injustice. "Love suffereth long and is kind; love endureth all things, hopeth all things," etc. Also when he says, "Count it all joy and gladness when men persecute you," etc.

Also I do not always agree with the Nazarene, but when he said, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do," he showed a commendable spirit.

And now goodby, goodby, dear friends all. I leave the work of LUCIFER in your hands, confidently believing you will not let the work lapse for want of energetic effort. I am not a William Tell, nor a Garrison, and yet I feel much as I think Tell felt—if the story be a true one—when he urged his friend not to let the common cause languish, whatever the result of that memorable day when he shot the apple from the head of his son; and I feel as I suppose Garrison did when he said:

"I am in earnest; I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retract a single inch, and I will be heard."

Again goodby; the train whistles down brakes; the Joliet station is here. All good things be yours now and evermore.

[Two members of the family and another friend accompanied the deputy marshal and the "prisoner" to Joliet. On arrival the turnkey greeted the deputy with the question, "What can I do for you?" "I have brought a prisoner," was the reply. "Which is he?" was then asked. It seems that the editor of LUCIFER has not yet acquired the "criminal countenance" sufficiently to be distinguished as a criminal by this official. The prosecuting attorney was more discerning. In his address to the jury he characterized the defendant as a "degenerate." (A study of the portrait in this issue will enable the reader to recognize a degenerate when he meets one.) The attitude of the officials toward my father seemed courteous and considerate, and he is calm, cheerful and hopeful as always. His body is confined but his spirit is untouched.—LILLIAN HARMAN.]

ERNEST HOWARD CROSBY IN CHICAGO.

Two weeks ago the Chicago Society of Anthropolgy at Corinthian Hall, Masonic Temple, listened to an address by this widely known and deservedly popular lecturer. Mr. Crosby's theme was "Garrison, the Non-Resistant," and was largely a synopsis of his recently published book by that name—a brief review of which book was given in LUCIFER No. 1057.

Mr. Crosby, though claiming membership in a popular and very conservative Christian church, is no worshiper of the dead past, no hero-worshiper, and how such a bold image-breaker as he can retain membership in an orthodox Christian church is evidence to me that allegiance to old-time creeds is no longer required by modern religious hierarchies.

Without doubt Mr. Crosby finds it greatly to his advantage to have been the son of a leading orthodox clergyman of New York City, Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby. The name alone gives him a welcome to many church organizations and platforms that would otherwise be closed against him. Evidence of this was seen in the fact that two evenings later he addressed the congregation of the Centenary (Methodist) Church, Monroe and Morgan streets, this city, on the "Church and Social Problems," in which lecture Mr. Crosby assailed our present systems of economics, land-ownership, etc., with a boldness and force of utterance that would have been called "revolutionary," "anarchistic" and "destructive to social order" only a few years ago, and even now would doubtless be so denounced if the speaker were not protected by an honored name and by affiliation with a highly respectable and conservative church—the Protestant Episcopal, if I mistake not.

In his Masonic Temple address Mr. Crosby, after giving due honor to William Lloyd Garrison as the most heroic leader in the movement against the enslavement of the African to and by his paler-faced brother, declared that the example and work of this great emancipator was and is chiefly valuable to us as pointing the way in which other crystallized wrongs are to be combated and overthrown. In the discussion which followed the opening address this thought was elaborated by several members of the society whose honored guest the speaker was. One of these members, whose name is unimportant, said—in substance if not in exact words:

"Mr. Crosby spoke truly and eloquently of the cruel tortures inflicted upon Savonarola, the distinguished religious reformer of the fifteenth century, by the Italian hierarchy. Lack of time, perhaps, prevented our speaker from mentioning the name of another Italian reformer, named Giordano Bruno, who suffered seven years' imprisonment and was finally burned at the stake for his persistence in maintaining the right to teach doctrines antagonistic to those taught by the fathers of the Roman church. Brother Crosby is, of course, aware of the fact that the spirit that animated those old-time inquisitors is not yet extinct. He does not need to be told that women and men are fined and imprisoned to-day because of their persistence in claiming their equal right to teach doctrines at variance with those taught by the leaders of public opinion in church and state.

"As in times of the Roman and Spanish Inquisitions, we have to-day an 'Index Expurgatorious' here in so-called free America. Books, papers and pictures are destroyed by wholesale without a semblance of public trial, and without compensation to the owner, by the postoffice officials and by the agents of a puritanic, semi-religious organization called the 'Society for the Prevention of Vice.'

"Mr. Crosby said that African slavery, as an institution, had been handed down to us from the ignorant and barbaric past, and said there were other forms of crystallized wrong that need the iconoclastic hand of the reformer quite as much as did the crystallized wrong to the abolition of which Garrison devoted the best years of his life. Our speaker mentioned a few of these, but not all. Among the crystallized wrongs omitted by him may be mentioned INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE.

"I am well aware that in calling marriage a crystallized wrong I am treading on dangerous ground, just as Garrison was treading on dangerous ground when he assailed American slavery of the African race. By the word marriage I must not be misunderstood as meaning the voluntary, equitable union of women and men, but what is known as canon law and statute law marriage—indissoluble marriage except by death, penitentiary crime or decree of the divorce court.

"In my opposition to these two crystallized forms of inherited wrong I do not claim originality. John Stuart Mill, the distinguished author of the essay 'On Liberty,' has said: 'The only serfdom now authorized by law is marriage.'

"Elbert Hubbard, editor of the 'Philistine,' known to all my hearers, calls legal marriage 'A scheme for holding together the incompatible,' and George Bernard Shaw, the foremost writer of plays with a purpose, has said, 'The one refuge left in the world for unbridled license is marriage,' and also that 'Marriage is popular because it unites the maximum of temptation with the maximum of opportunity.'"

ANOTHER JUDICIAL MURDER.

Thursday of last week I wrote a letter to the governor of Illinois, of which the following is a copy:

CHICAGO, ILL., Feb. 22, 1906.

To Charles S. Deneen, Governor of the State of Illinois.

DEAR SIR: Unless you interfere to prevent it another of the fearfully long list of judicial murders that have disgraced the people of this city and state will be committed to-morrow.

As a citizen of Illinois, a citizen of the United States of America, a citizen of the world, I hereby enter my most solemn protest against the proposed judicial murder of Johann Hoch, and call upon YOU as the executive of Illinois to use the civic authority delegated to you by your fellow-citizens to prevent that cold-blooded infamy.

I will not give reasons in detail now; may do so later.

Very respectfully your fellow citizen. MOSES HARMAN.

This letter was signed by five persons, comprising the members of the family at 500 Fulton street.

On Saturday, next day after the life was choked out of the body of Johann Hoch, I received the following reply to our joint letter:

State of Illinois, Executive Department,
SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 23, 1906.

DEAR SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd inst., and have to say that the case of Johann Hoch was passed upon by the Supreme Court, and Chief Justice Cartwright reviewed the case at length. You will find the opinion on page 265, vol. 219, of the Illinois Supreme Court Reports.

The new matter presented by Hoch's attorneys was carefully investigated by the board of pardons and by myself. There was nothing in it which justified disturbing the verdict rendered by the court.

I appreciate your courtesy in expressing your views. I believe any one who has a full knowledge of the facts would feel that the judgment of the jury should not be disturbed. Yours truly,

C. S. DENEEN.

Mr. Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

At the same time we wrote to Deneen I sent a letter, by special delivery post, to the sheriff of Cook county, couched in similar language to that sent to Governor Deneen; also a similar letter to John Whitman, warden of the Cook county jail, whom I had met at more than one public meeting in Chicago, and whose public talks on prison management I had been much interested in.

From neither of these did I get an answer, but on Monday evening, on my way to Joliet, and while a guest of Mr. Whitman, I had a brief conversation with him in regard to the hanging of Hoch. He had received my letter, and in reference thereto said, in substance, that, having taken the oath of office, he could not do otherwise than as he did—meaning, I suppose, that he could not refuse to prepare the gallows and adjust the cap and noose, and do the other work necessary to the execution.

"That is to say," I replied, "having taken the oath of office, you must either do or resign."

To which an affirmative answer was given.

Mr. Whitman appears to be a kind-hearted, generous-souled man, and while it is best, no doubt, that such a man should be the chief officer at the county prison, so long as prisons are necessary, it seems a great pity that in order to hold that position he must abdicate his manhood and become the obedient tool or slave of other men—of men who tell him he must kill his fellow men, whether he believes them guilty of murder or not.

It has frequently been stated in the papers that Jailer Whitman does not believe—did not believe—that Hoch was guilty of the crime for which he was hanged.

How, then, is it possible for him to settle with his own soul and clear himself of complicity in the crime of judicial murder?

Can his oath of office clear him at the bar of justice; the bar of judgment; of self-judgment, which, after all is said, is the most important of all tribunals, and the hardest to escape, or hide away from?

M. H.

We are printing a large edition of this number of LUCIFER, and will be glad to hear from those of our friends who can assist in distributing it. Please send in orders as early as possible. We would also like to hear from those who can take a regular number of extra copies to distribute at meetings or in any other way. Those who sympathize with the editor in his imprisonment can express that sympathy in no more effective way than in bringing his work to the attention of the liberty-loving people of the country and of the world.

SOME DEFINITIONS BY "FRA ELBURTUS."

Justice: A system of revenge where the state imitates the criminal.

Success: A subtle contrivance of Nature for bringing about a man's defeat.

Fortitude: That quality of mind that does not care what happens so long as it does not happen to us.

Law: A scheme for protecting the parasite and prolonging the life of the rogue, averting the natural consequences that would otherwise come to them.

Legal marriage: A scheme for holding together the incompatible.

Natural law: Merely a habit of the Unknowable.

"To suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency, is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all (religious) liberty: because he being, of course, judge of that tendency will make his (fallible) opinions the rule of judgment, and approve or condemn the sentiments of others, only as they shall square with or differ from his own. It is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order. And finally, that truth is great and will prevail, if left to herself. That she is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapon, free argument and debate."—Act of Virginia establishing religious freedom.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

E. K., Pomeroy, Ohio.—Enclosed find $1 for Wakeman's letter in pamphlet form. Glad to see the postal authorities are getting off their "high horse."

PAUL ROSTEL, Home, Wash.—Permit me to express my sympathy; but hard knocks should strengthen us. There never was a good cause which did not call for sacrifices of its advocates. Inclosed find renewal of subscription.

IRVING LLEWELLYN, Oyster Point, Va.—Kindly mail me several copies of Wakeman's Letter to the President, for which I enclose 60 cents. This letter is exceptionally forceful and capable of great good, rightly used. No. 1059 is good throughout. Am especially pleased to learn of the change in attitude of the postoffice department.

ALBINA L. WASHBURN, San Diego, Cal.—Those verses in No. 1058 by George E. Bowen, "A Catechism for Comstock," are splendid—just what is needed. Satire, criticism, ridicule will mow down rank after rank of the enemy, where reason, logic and entreaty sever "phase" them! And why? They do not understand the latter, while sleet and gnat-bites count! "A little more grape, Cap'n Bragg!"

THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, Coscob, Conn.—I think you had better leave my picture off [the leaflet reprint of the letter to Roosevelt]. It will detract attention from the real issue. Do it if possible. * * * I rejoice at the apparent dawn of something like law and common sense in the postoffice. Perhaps if you suffer enough and we all keep hammering day may break even there.

[The request about the picture reached us too late. The plan of having the cover of the leaflet adorned with the two pictures was not my suggestion, but that of friends and helpers here in Chicago.—M. H.]

C. H., Centocook, N. H.—I inclose $1 now for your use for any purpose you see fit. I could wish the day might not be fixed for your incarceration. The sex question has got to be discussed, "For nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest; neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad." (Luke 8:17, et al.) If you can send me "Man and Superman," "Mrs. Warren's Profession," "You Never Can Tell" and "Strike of a Sex" with "Zogassant's Discovery," with bill for the same, I wish you would, or if you will inform me of the cost, including postage, I will send it for them.

["Mrs. Warren's Profession" and "You Never Can Tell" are contained in the two-volume edition, "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," by George Bernard Shaw. The price is $2.50, and that of "Man and Superman," by same author, $1.25. All for sale at this office.]

Amicus, Mass.—It is not from lack of sympathy with LUCIFER, its objects and its editor, that I have failed to write before, but from lack of time, due to other duties and work. I am forced to write now, as my subscription to your brave little journal has run out and I want to renew it.

I have two lines of work that take up much of my time. The first is genealogy. I have often wished to write a short paper for LUCIFER on the meaning and importance of genealogy to those who believe in freer sexual relations. A genealogy should be not simply a list of consanguineous names classified and arranged as "hatched, matched and dispatched," but a real pedigree-book for human stock, in which to record and study the habits, diseases and other hereditary traits of our ancestors, with a view of improved selection and propagation of descendants.

My second line of work is zoology—my life study—and here again I have often hoped to find time to contribute an article to LUCIFER on the factors in heredity. I don't know as I shall ever get time for preparing such a paper, which ought to have popular as well as accurate scientific treatment, but I always hope for the maintenance of freedom of speech and press, so that the right to discuss such subjects and the allied subject of "race-suicide" shall not be confined to the President of the United States.

Apropos of "race-suicide," I enclose a clipping from a Massachusetts newspaper. Don't get into trouble by printing it in LUCIFER, for, although cut from a weekly supporting the Republican party, it might be dangerous for LUCIFER to publish it.

I enclose $5. Please put $2 towards continuing my subscription to LUCIFER and the other $3 on your defense fund. I hope and wish you success in your struggle with a censorship that, in many respects, especially in prudish directions, is more absurd and exacting than that of a monarchy like Germany. On this point I write not at random, having lived long enough in Germany to understand its people and their ideas.

T. F., New York.—Please count me in on your fight—at least to the extent of giving a few pennies now and then. I can help that way, which, perhaps, is reprehensible, for that is hardly activity, and we like to think of actual work as radicals rather than as money-givers. But radicals seem to get blasé, and though willing and anxious to do something find themselves begging off and feeding their souls by simply chipping in at times. The capitalistic system is pounding away so hard on us, day by day, that it is easy to be inactive and have time to do something else. The system is insidious, too, for one believes in doing something else; one is only preparing for better work in the radical field. Enthusiasm counts mightily, but enthusiasm cannot burn constantly in any one surrounded almost wholly by capitalistic or conservative ideas, people, institutions and events. The pounding and banging away at people by the system, with its sugar-coated ideas, peoples, institutions and events, breaks lots of would-be radicals down and seduces many who feel they are advancing in knowledge and not sliding behind. I must confess I've got to hear Eugene Debs talk once in a while; must go to some Socialist meeting now and then; must read Whitman and Shelley or see their works around the house; must have a picture of Bakunin, as well as of William Morris, Marat, Marx, Lassalle, Wagner to look at daily; must read LUCIFER, the "Truth Seeker," and pamphlets to keep up enthusiasm. It is easy to "die" in New York, for, Mr. Harman, the metropolis of the New World is pretty narrow for all its alleged bigness and greatness. The chase for the almighty dollar is keener and more vicious here than anywhere else, and any one at all radical knows perfectly well and to his financial detriment that if he fights for his ideal it will be costly. It is not development of character that counts for anything in New York; it is development in the ways of the world. Any one's advancement is almost bound to mean the latter and not the former. One's wealth is in inverse ratio to one's character.

There are many changes to be made before that ratio is changed. Meantime the system breeds and fosters vile and brutal and yet formidable institutions, one of the very worst of which is marriage. No epigram is ever true and yet it appears to be evident sometimes that the man who marries kills two persons. What the lover and sweetheart and the wife and husband call love dies, almost of a certainty, a few months after the ceremony is performed. Then worse than death—hypocrisy, lying, brothels, harems, bickerings and all the fearful evils attendant on the children in that "home." Children, perhaps the most precious things in our lives, so beautiful that they ought not to see a frown on the face of any one in the whole world, so good they ought never see anything but pretty things and great women and fine men, must live in "homes" like that.

But things will change, I'm sure, and the revolutionists will change them. The world "was built" for fun, and the best fun in the world is to fight the system and the institutions it engenders. Your fight is pretty lonely, apparently, but there's a whole lot of people with you. The system keeps them quiet or seduces them into uselessness. Men like you (pardon me) must keep at us or we'll "die." I wish I could see you some time and hope you will get around to New York and stop with me for a day or as long as you can. I wish you the greatest and best good luck in the world, and hope a smooth road is in front of you, even though it looks rocky just now. Write me once in a while and I'll respond with ammunition for the battles you're fighting; for you need ammunition, and the very least such as I can do, lazy as we are, is to supply some of that.

ANNIE LILLIAN SWEET, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—I presume there are times when you wonder if it is worth while to fight against the ignorance and prejudice in the world. I think that it is. Let me tell you something: The recent attack on you by the postoffice officials is advertising and helping your cause more than anything else could. There are many who never heard of your paper until they read the account of your trial and conviction. The most of them will keep posted in regard to you from this on. I am doing everything I can to spread a knowledge of your persecution. I tell every one about it, those who believe in marriage reform and those who do not; and I give them copies of LUCIFER. Among the list of names that I sent you to send sample copies to was one woman who is very well satisfied with things as they are in this world at the present time. A while after I sent her name in I saw her. She said to me:

"I have been receiving a lot of stuff from a man in Chicago named Moses Harman. Have you heard of him?"

"Oh, yes," I said. "I've heard of him." Then I added that some of the papers you published had been suppressed and that you had been sentenced to a year in the penitentiary.

"Well," she said, "I think his writings ought to be suppressed."

Then I told her what I thought about it. She went away with a little light on the other side of the question.

I presume that all the friends of free speech who have heard of your trouble are doing very much the same thing. It will all help. All the talk about your persecution, all the interest that it has aroused, and all the discussion that it will give rise to will act as a leaven in the mass of humanity. It will keep working and after a while there will be results from it.

The people of the United States could end all this trouble; they could keep you out of the penitentiary if they would. It does not do a particle of good—at least I do not think it does—to write to President Roosevelt complaining of the actions of the officials in the postoffice department. I do not suppose that he has seen one of the letters that have been sent him. If the people would flood him with signed circulars and write to their representatives and senators and demand of congress the repeal of all laws which make it impossible to discuss the question of sex in papers and magazines I think it would only be a short time before all such laws would be repealed. If that did not bring the repeal of the laws the women of the country could put in their ear.

Of course if the subject of sex is too indecent to be discussed in a clean, straightforward manner by periodicals then women who consider themselves "ladies" will have to stop getting married. There is nothing else for them to do. If the women of the land would say, "We will not marry until all the laws which prohibit and restrict the discussion of questions of sex are repealed" it wouldn't be long, to express it in the common vernacular, before there would be something doing. I do not expect though that the women will do anything of the kind, for the majority of them need just about as much enlightening on this subject as Comstock and Hull do.

But keep on with your work. Do not get discouraged. Surely there will be a way for you out of your trouble. Every person who thinks for himself in this world has to stand what you are standing, for the one thing that mankind generally cannot forgive is unconventionality of thought or speech. You are one of the few men in the world at the present time who are helping on a good cause. Your troubles may be hard to bear, but you have the consolation of knowing that you are putting courage into the hearts of many people. You probably will not live to see all the good results of your teachings, but future generations will reap in happiness what you are now sowing in sorrow.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Garrison the Non-Resistant.
BY ERNEST HOWARD CROSBY.

This is a sympathetic sketch of Garrison's career which considers slavery and the Civil War from an entirely original point of view. In the opinion of the author President Lincoln made a radical mistake to undertake to coerce the seceding states, and the enthusiasm for the "Union" of sections which hated each other he regards as immoral in itself and the source of prolific subsequent evils, including the growth of the sentiments of imperialism and militarism, together with the formation of the trusts and the aggravation of the labor problem. That the war failed to settle the race question is obvious. If the "erring sisters" had been allowed to go, slavery would, he thinks, have died a natural death, and the states would have reunited, the race question having been peacefully and genuinely solved.

Even those who fail to accept this view of history will find it interesting and full of suggestion, and the account of Garrison's life and the record of the personal observations of the author in the South of today are both vivid and entertaining. 16mo, 144 pages, with photogravure portrait of Garrison. Price, 50 cents (postage 5 cents).

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.
A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant.
BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

Published in two volumes. Contents Vol. I: Widowers' Houses; The Philanderer; Mrs. Warren's Profession. Contents Vol. II: You Never Can Tell; Arms and the Man; Candida; The Man of Destiny.

Mr. Shaw is the foremost dramatist who writes the English language. No other English playwright can properly be classed with Ibsen, Sudermann, Maeterlinck and Hauptmann. He has won supremacy by sheer force of originality and genius, in spite of the unanimous opposition of critics who condemned any departure from old dramatic canons. Shaw's dramas are great because of their significance. Price, $2.50.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Free America.
BY BOLTON HALL.

Dedicated "To Those Who Are Poor and Wish to Become Rich, or Who Are Rich and Wish to Become Richer."

The book shows, in an interesting and amusing way, the evils from which we suffer as individuals and as a society, the causes of them and their cure—which is liberty. The illustrations are by Dan Beard. Two hundred and fifteen pages, 18mo. Price, postpaid: paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Man and Superman.
BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

"Man and Superman" is perhaps the wittiest and most satirical of Mr. Shaw's dramas. It is astonishingly audacious, attacking fearlessly many of the absurd ideas in regard to love, marriage, government and social regulations which still enslave supposed civilized people. Price, cloth, $1.25.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.
BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the perception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

Proudhon and His "Bank of the People."
BY CHARLES A. DANA.

This is a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency, and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of Free and Mutual Banking. A series of newspaper articles written by the after-time editor of The New York Sun, he having been a Brook Farm experimenter in early life. Price, 10 cents.

HOMELESS.

I met today sweet Liberty,
Out on old ocean's strand;
She hailed me brightly, joyously,
And shyly reached her hand.

Then while she turned to go away
I said: "May I not come?
Take me, a lorn outcast, I pray,
With thee, to thy sweet home."

With trembling lip and tearful eye—
Compassion shining through—
Despondingly she made reply:
"Dear sir, I'm homeless, too."

THE PROPHETS OF THE THEATER.

Twenty years ago the novel was the chief instrument of popular education, and whoever wanted to get a hearing for any new doctrine had to write one. The theater was merely a place of amusement, looked down upon by many serious persons, and regarded by hardly any as a great engine of social and moral reform. Today all this is changed. The ablest writers in the world no longer write novels but plays, and it is now clearly seen that the drama will be one of the chief agents in the transformation of society. Eminent dramatists have arisen all over the world, the chief of them being Ibsen, Hauptmann, Shaw, Sudermann, Macterlinck, and D'Annunzio. It is a tremendously significant fact that all these men, except perhaps Hauptmann, are very advanced sex radicals.

Henrik Ibsen, born 1828 in Norway, is the father of the modern drama. He has been writing plays since about 1850, but his great importance lies in the series of social-problem plays which began in 1877 with "The Pillars of Society." The best of these are "A Doll's House" and "Ghosts," each of which contains a vigorous attack on our existing marriage system. Both are often played on the stage.

The heroine of "Ghosts" is Mrs. Alving, who has had the misfortune to marry "a fallen man," as she expresses it. He is drunken, brutal and generally dissipated. She is so disgusted that for some time secretly loved. Unfortunately he believes that the greatest thing in the world is duty, and that a wife's highest duty is to submit to her husband. Mrs. Alving lets him persuade her to return to her husband, and as a result she spends many years of misery and has a son by Mr. Alving. At last the husband dies, and the son promises to become a great artist; but, alas, his health goes to pieces, and it is discovered that he has inherited a disease which his father had imprudently acquired, and that he will soon be incurably insane. He reproaches his mother for giving him birth, but gets her to promise that as soon as he becomes insane she will poison him with morphia. The curtain falls just as his mind is leaving him and the mother is trying to nerve herself to fulfill her promise.

The heroine of "A Doll's House" is Nora Helmer, whose husband is an intolerably proper and respectable young man of excellent prospects. He calls her his "lark" and his "little squirrel," and takes all care off her hands, so that everything seems to be going well. Unfortunately a difficulty arises which shows Nora that her husband is really thoroughly selfish and that she is a silly ignoramus. She tells Helmer that she now realizes that she has been living for years with a strange man in a doll's house and that she must leave him and work for herself, so that she may learn what real life is. The horrified husband reminds her of her duties to him and the children, but she says she has discovered that a woman's first duty is not to her husband, nor yet to her children, but to herself.

Hermann Sudermann, born 1857, is the most eminent writer now in Germany. He thinks that women when in love are far more fearless and emancipated than men, whom he regards as poor, conscientious creatures. Two of his plays are well known in America—"The Joy of Living" and "St. John's Fire." In the former the heroine, Beata, is a married woman who has had a love affair some years before with an intimate friend of her husband. The lover has now cooled down and is conscience-stricken to think of his treachery, but Beata, who still loves him, has no scruples and can think of the affair only with joy and pride. In "St. John's Fire" we have a young man who is engaged to his cousin, but meanwhile finds that he is deeply in love with Marikke, an adopted child of the parents of his betrothed, who loves him in return. He is too conscientious to break off with his cousin, but Marikke will not submit to be cut out altogether.

Maurice Macterlinck, born 1862, is a Belgian. His earlier plays, such as "Princess Maleine," are worth very little, but he has written a splendid problem play in "Monna Vanna," which I described some weeks ago.

Bernard Shaw was born in Ireland in 1856. I have lately written so fully about him that I need say little now. He has just had a great triumph with "Major Barbara." On one of the first nights there were present the Prime Minister of England, Premier Jameson of Cape Colony, the famous raider, and many other celebrities. Evidently not all public men are so easily shocked as Police Commissioner McAdoo.

Gabriele D'Annunzio, born 1864, is easily the foremost name in the Italian literature of our time. He has written at least one important problem play, "Gioconda," which is sometimes seen on the American stage. A young sculptor has a wife who is beautiful, and who has also a beautiful soul; but she is not just what he needs to give him inspiration. "I am not a sculptor of souls," he explains. He meets another woman, Gioconda, whom he finds perfectly beautiful and who fills him with such inspiration that he makes a statue of her which is a marvel of art. But his wife is jealous and he is brought to such despair that he tries to commit suicide. He does not quite kill himself, however, and by the long and patient nursing of his wife he recovers. Then Gioconda writes that she will await him every day at the studio. The wife finds out that he has had the letter and goes herself to face Gioconda. The scene between these two women is one of the finest in all dramatic literature. The wife pleads priority of possession, but Gioconda pleads superior fitness. She says she is essential to the sculptor and that he would be nothing without her. As the wife is not sufficiently up to date to share the sculptor with Gioconda and is getting rather the worst of the argument, she loses all self-control and tells Gioconda a lie. She says her husband has decided to discard Gioconda and has sent her to say so. Gioconda believes it and in a fearful passion she rushes at the statue to destroy it. The wife then cries out that she has told a lie, but it is too late, and she just saves the falling statue by catching it with her hands, which are smashed to pieces. Her hands have to be amputated and Gioconda gets the sculptor.

With such plays acted everywhere before intelligent audiences Comstockery will not last long.

R. B. KERR.

THE CASE OF MOSES HARMAN.

"Prison for Aged Man.—Moses Harmon, 75 years old, for the third time in his life was taken to the Joliet prison yesterday. He had been arrested by the postal authorities because of matters contained in a paper he published, LUCIFER, the Light Bearer."

The above clipping is all the notice his case got from the Chicago "Record-Herald." The thing is significant. Briefly, the facts are these:

Moses Harman, 75 years old, was taken to the Illinois penitentiary at Joliet, Tuesday, February 27, 1906, to serve a sentence of one year for a technical violation of the laws of the land which prohibit the sending of so-called obscene literature through the mails.

"Served him right! Ought to be sent to the pen for that!" you exclaim. Be not hasty, my friends. Listen a minute and hear other facts. This old man has never tried to send through the mails anything half so objectionable as passages you will find in the Bible and in Shakespeare.

In the first place, he is not an obscene old man, but clean, kindly and cultured.

He has fought valiantly for many years the battle for the emancipation of women; for her political, economic, and, therefore, social freedom.

He has done this from the highest motives—the improvement of the human race.

Burbank improves potatoes, other vegetables and flowers.

Others devote themselves to the breeding of fine stock, and the world applauds.

Harman wants to have the human race improved, and the world says, "Sh-h-h!"

Are not human beings of as much consequence as pigs and potatoes? Is parenthood an indecent subject? Is the question of woman's rights and wrongs, of her freedom and her slavery, of no consequence?

I appeal to every woman who has a spark of independence in her makeup to use her influence in this case of Moses Harman!

Wives of workingmen, wake up, and do something!

Think, talk, act.

Have these obnoxious laws repealed. It is not Moses Harman alone, not the cause of woman's freedom, but the rights of humanity that are at stake. Free speech, freedom of the press, personal freedom, the rights of labor—all are involved.

This is not a struggle alone between Anthony Comstock and Moses Harman, but it is a struggle of the oppressed class against the ruling class for the right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness.

Material interests are at stake, and the ruling class is wise enough to understand this and act accordingly.

Let the ruled class also understand and act, or sink into greater slavery!—May Walden Kerr, in the Chicago Socialist.

[The "Record-Herald" erred in saying that Moses Harman "for the third time in his life was taken to the Joliet prison." The present is his first experience in Joliet.]

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM!

The assault on the freedom of the press and of the mails, involved in the prosecution of Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, Chicago, reached another stage on March 3, when Mr. Harman was sent to the penitentiary at Joliet to serve a year's imprisonment. If such things can be done under the shadow of the American eagle, the ægis of the constitution, and the protection of the Stars and Stripes, why does our department of state trouble itself about tyranny and oppression in the Old World?—Truth Seeker, New York.

A CRUEL OUTRAGE.

One day last week an old man, 75 years and 3 months old, was sent from this city to the penitentiary; the sentence was "one year at hard labor." The old man's name is Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER. Mr. Harman's work was very delicate, and also very unpopular with the "powers that be." He attempted to teach wholesome truths along sexual lines, but never coarse, lewd or degrading. But the government is determined that, so far as it can prevent it, the young shall be kept in dense ignorance of the laws governing the reproductive sphere of life. We admire the grand old man for his courage and fortitude—traits seldom found in one of his years. We hope to again grasp his unsteady hand and look into his noble eyes a free man, but we sadly doubt that we shall be accorded this pleasure. We fear that close confinement behind prison bars will finish his life's career, but we can have our consolation in knowing that it is to such noble souls as Moses Harman that the world owes its progress. America will become wise enough, clean-conscienced enough some day to be proud that Moses Harman lived, but, alas! that time is not yet. So we say fare thee well, dear old friend; your work will some day be appreciated and your history will be written upon the hearts of emancipated womanhood!—The Liberator, Chicago.

TWO GOOD PAMPHLETS.

We are pleased to note the activity shown by the Free Speech League, of New York, anent the outrage perpetrated upon Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, embodied in a sentence of one year's imprisonment upon the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails, the confiscation and destruction, by force, of one edition of his paper.

As one who has been compelled to face similar dangers, the "Blade" can extend a feeling of sympathy and regret—sympathy for the suffering such a sentence must entail, and regret that the bigoted cohorts of a brutish creed can obtain even a temporary victory in this enlightened age.

The Free Speech League is now engaged in the distribution of two pamphlets which discuss the all-important subject from which its title is taken, and they should receive a wide circulation. One is an open letter by Prof. T. B. Wakeman to the President of the United States, and the other is upon "Postal Censorship in America," by Louis F. Post. Each contains an array of interesting data interestingly told. For copies and information address E. B. Foote, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.—Blue Grass Blade.

THE BLIGHT OF THE SOCIAL EVIL.

The late Judge Arnold once remarked in conversation that in the course of many years of experience on the bench in trying criminal cases, and especially in listening to testimony concerning vice and immorality, he was profoundly impressed with the ignorance among men and women concerning some of the elemental conditions of their personal existence. The impression was formed chiefly on the many occasions when he had to deal with cases of betrayal, of infidelity, of divorce, and of illegitimate birth, as well as the vicious perversity of some species of juvenile offenders. It was his thought that much of the trouble and the crime into which many of the immature and the mature persons who thus came before him had fallen might have been avoided if the common sense in their understandings had been properly instructed as to the effects of vice. The Judge was a good deal of a believer in the old Adam in mankind, and any ideal proposition for reforming an ingrained inheritance of original sin never passed muster in his practical mind unless it could stand the rigid tests of experience. It was, therefore, with a knowledge of what he was saying that he remarked that one of the best ways in which vice might be checked would be to take care that boys when they are reaching out toward the years of manhood should be on terms of fellowship or confidence with their fathers and that they should be plainly informed on things which it is customary to permit them to find out for themselves in an irregular, haphazard and half-perplexed fashion.

I have just been reading a book which to some extent embodies the kind of ideas which Judge Arnold thus had in mind, although some of it would not, perhaps, appeal entirely to his sense of what is practicable or attainable. It is called "The Social Evil," is written by Dr. Robert N. Willson, Jr., and is devoted to a series of discussions of the possible preventive conditions which may solve the problem that has ever taxed the wisdom of moralists and philosophers. Dr. Willson, who is an instructor in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, and who is particularly known there for the zeal with which he has pointed out to its lads the mischief and folly of the "wild oats" doctrine, does not approach the question from the ordinary moral and religious point of view, although a very strong religious spirit is here and there discernible in its pages. His point of view is wholly the medical one—that is, of the physician who sees and traces the bodily effects of vice, its insidious workings, its contaminations, its disfigurements, its frequent destruction of the stamina of manhood, and its hardly less frequent destruction of life itself. But this class of facts is largely kept in the background in the training of youth, as if they were secret, mysterious or forbidden things even in the intimacy of the paternal relation. Indeed it is not unseldom that men who have long passed the majority may be found who seem to have only a hazy, half-innocent idea of the practical significance in the facts in question and sometimes of the facts themselves.

In his discourses on boyhood, clean living and the general conditions of the evil, Dr. Willson writes plainly, unhesitatingly and frankly. The central line of thought is at all times the physical wrong. A little anecdote which he tells, for example, of a country lad coming to Philadelphia for the first time and becoming in a few months a victim of blindness because of his want of knowledge when he joined some companions in dissipation, would probably be more effective in getting at the common sense of a boy than a baleful of homilies or spiritual exhortations. Yet total blindness thus caused is one of the not infrequent consequences of the ills which are incurred by not only the habitual but the occasional transgressors of the moral law. Indeed the pitiable extent of the impairment and of the ravages which thus result in the health and strength of a large portion of the population is known only to physicians, and it is a question whether if it were generally known and explained in an intelligent way the evil might not at least be greatly lessened. It might be a better method, at any rate, in the interest of permanent personal morals than the habit of chasing the women of the town about from pillar to post and endeavoring to reform them, and them only, at the hands of the police.

As regards the professional practitioners of vice, it is estimated that there are about 200,000 such women in the United States; that New York city has between 40,000 and 50,000 and that in Chicago, although accurate figures are not obtained, the number is greater than New York's. It is somewhat curious to note that the number for Philadelphia is set down as between 2,000 and 3,000. Mr. Richard Wells, of this city, who for many years has been a Christian worker among them, believes that there are about 2,000, but Dr. Willson thinks this is considerably below the actual number, even if it is limited to those who actually ply their trade as vendors of immorality. It is estimated that the average period of activity of the women at their trade is five to six years, but that as fast as death and decrease carry them off their ranks are replenished by an equal supply of recruits.

When he comes to the question of applying remedies, Dr. Willson can find no value in registration, licensing or in segregation. In France and Germany and other European countries where this kind of regulation and inspection is practiced, he believes that experience has found it to be worthless and that in a sanitary sense the same evils that prevail here are to be found there. He cites the example of the similar experiment made in St. Louis thirty years ago and abandoned after a four years' trial. Nor does he appear to have much faith in the efficacy of attempts at reclaiming the women by moral suasion. For every one that is saved a dozen slip away, and he refers to the experience of a noble woman who observed to him that after many years of work among the fallen members of her sex, she did not feel sure that she had done much good, so regularly had they returned to the ways from which they had been "reclaimed." He notes also the opinion of another worker who thought that not more than 3 per cent of the wantons were permanently reformed. He states, however, that in talking with a number of them from the simple viewpoint of their physical condition he found that the difficulty of gaining an honest livelihood at not more than $3 a week seemed to be one of the most active causes of the trouble.

But the zealous doctor is by no means a pessimist, in spite of all the ugly facts he produces, and only a few of which I have adduced. He does not think that the world is worse in these things, indeed even suggests that it is better than it has ever been, and that the attention which is now given to them is really a sign that it is. He is willing to admit, however, that the social evil is not curable at the present time, and that probably there is no prospect of its disappearing in the next generation. But he builds his hopes of the future on what may be done now in preparing a boy or a girl for coming into contact with the evil—the duty of the parent, re-enforced by an understanding of the experience of the physician and by a determination to eliminate the double standard of morality in discriminating between the sexes. The same care and vigilance with which tuberculosis, for example, is studied, he is disposed to believe, should be given to a physical condition even more dangerous and widespread. In his view, it is in a full, plain realization of those facts of vice which lie beneath the surface, that immorality may yet become extinguished. With his enthusiasm, however, he expects much more from his plans than is possible of fulfillment, but these are capable of producing considerable benefit to many individuals if rationally carried out, and they are somewhat refreshing and altogether wholesome when compared with the usual demands [illegible] for trade, entertainment and the like.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

THE DEBT OF LAW TO THE LAWLESS.

Under this caption the extremely conservative Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., writes in "Collier's":

"It is a curious paradox of history that the law often owes more to those who have defied it than to its appointed guardians.

"Doubt is the first step to a larger faith.

"Denial is the first step to a larger affirmation, and the traitor of today becomes the hero and lawgiver of tomorrow.

"Nearly all of the men to whom we owe the progress of the world were executed as criminals by the official guardians of society.

"Crime is a relative term.

"Real law is the crystallized expression of the organized virtue of the people. It can never be more than the embodiment of the total experience of the race, at the time, in its search for the secret of self-preservation. The first tendency of law when thus embodied is to become feminine—that is, to solidify into forms which shall bind the bodies and the souls of the unborn. This tendency brings inevitable conflict with the masculine principle of progress. When the published formulas of law have been outgrown by the race, or its forms for any reason have been perverted so that they no longer are the expression of the organized virtue of a people, it becomes necessary to break the law in order to keep it.

"Bruno, the pioneer philosopher and thinker of the modern world, was burned to death.

"George Washington was a traitor to George III, but his treason won, and Washington has been canonized."

HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW DISAPPROVED.

A fine of $19 and a real estate bond of $1,000 for one year was the judgment entered in a Louisville court recently against George Humphrey and Eunice Reed, charged nominally with disorderly conduct. The story related by Humphrey's wife was that they had agreed that one or the other must "get out" of their home at Woodland, Nelson county, and Humphrey left. Before going he gave his wife the key to the blacksmith shop he had operated for years, and bade her get a man to run it for her. Then he gave her the house and lot and $75. He agreed to take their thirteen-year-old daughter and the hired girl, Eunice, and provide a home for the daughter and keep Eunice as a companion for her. He also agreed to take any two of the remaining four children, except the seven-months' old twin girls, and care for them when the mother would send them to him. It was further agreed that the wife was to have a divorce and he to pay for it.

Humphrey came to Louisville, according to his story, corroborated by his wife, with her knowledge and consent. He went first to the home of his brother, then rented rooms at the home of Mrs. T. D. Gibson, 1216 West Broadway, and found employment at the tobacco factory at Twenty-ninth and Walnut streets.

All went smoothly enough for three days, when George D. Reynolds, of Fredericktown, Washington county, appeared. Reynolds is a brother of Mrs. Humphrey, and he did not approve of the contract and caused the arrest of his brother-in-law and the hired girl.

Humphrey has declared his intention of remaining with Eunice.

TO THE READERS OF LUCIFER.

COMRADES: At my time of life one cannot expect a great deal more of this life, and there is a liability to go at any time. In view of this fact I am preparing a work that I propose to call "My Last Will and Testament; A Glimpse of Naturalism."

The price of the book will probably be a dollar. Will those who will take a copy—if I am able to get it published—please drop me a card and say so?

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

The Philadelphia friends of LUCIFER will, we hope, communicate with Mr. Myers and assist in making the protest meeting, to which he refers in another column, successful. When such meetings are planned we hope our friends will notify us, so that we may send literature for circulation. Please give dates and places of meeting for publication in LUCIFER, when practicable.

In "The Public," of March 10, Louis F. Post has an exceptionally important article on "Our Despotic Postal Censorship." In it is comprised a correspondence with the local and Washington postal officials in reference to the case of LUCIFER and its editor. We expect to reproduce this article in LUCIFER No. 1062. It will occupy the greater part of the space in that issue, and we shall be pleased to receive advance orders from those desiring extra copies.

We are printing a large edition of this number of LUCIFER, and will be glad to hear from those of our friends who can assist in distributing it. Please send in orders as early as possible. We would also like to hear from those who can take a regular number of extra copies to distribute at meetings or in any other way. Those who sympathize with the editor in his imprisonment can express that sympathy in no more effective way than in bringing his work to the attention of the liberty-loving people of the country and of the world.

The portrait of Moses Harman is republished in this issue because the extra copies of No. 1060 were insufficient to supply the demand. Many have suggested that the portrait should appear in every number of his paper while he is in prison, that he may be seen though forced to remain unheard. The earnestness with which his friends are taking up the work of circulating LUCIFER seems to guarantee that with each issue many people will see LUCIFER for the first time, and to see the "criminal countenance" of its editor would interest them. But to do this would entail considerable extra expense, as a heavier and finer grade of paper must be used, and the half-tone cuts themselves, being of fine workmanship, are expensive. We would like to have the opinion of the friends who work to extend the circulation of LUCIFER. We hope as many as possible will let us know if they think that the portrait would help to awaken interest in LUCIFER and the cause it represents.

NO WORD RECEIVED FROM OUR EDITOR.

No word has been received from our editor since the prison doors closed behind him on February 27. It was erroneously stated in No. 1060 that he would be permitted to write one letter a month. He can write only once in five weeks, so we must wait three weeks more before we can learn anything of his condition.

Nothing from the outside can be sent to him or purchased by him. As fruit and brown bread constitute his diet, chiefly, when at liberty, this deprivation may seriously affect his health. It is only through the order of the prison physician that the diet of prisoners is ever changed. The mind of Moses Harman is strong enough to keep him from fret or worry over his incarceration. It remains to be seen whether his body can endure the physical deprivations and discomforts.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

ANIMUS IN SUPPRESSION OF FREE SPEECH.

DEAR LILLIAN HARMAN: Thank you for calling attention to the execution of your father's sentence. I would say that I should sympathize very much with both him and you were I not confident that neither of you regard this experience as a matter calling for expressions of sympathy. I am sure, however, that you will understand me when I say that, whatever points of disagreement exist between us, I thoroughly appreciate the devotion your father shows to his cause and the sincerity of his purpose in connection with it. I regard these prosecutions, the criminal as well as the postal ones, as having for their animus nothing in the world but the suppression of free speech.

There is little that I can do in a personal way, but if your father would care to receive an exchange copy of "The Public" personally, I shall be glad to forward it to him if you will favor me with an address that will make his receiving it reasonably certain. Very truly yours. LOUIS F. POST.

Chicago, Ill., March 3.

NOTHING TOO SACRED FOR SERIOUS DISCUSSION.

Even if I disagreed entirely with the sentiment of LUCIFER and its editor, I should feel it a duty to stand up for the rights of free speech. But believing as I do not only in the purity of thought and high purpose of Mr. Harman, but convinced of the shamefulness of the treatment accorded him, officially or otherwise, I shall be glad to have my protest recorded. There is nothing too sacred for serious discussion, and when questions relating to the sexes are treated with conviction and plain speech it is usually "lewd fellows of the baser sort" who throw up their hands in holy horror. I shall be glad to receive and read the paper.

We sympathize deeply with you and your dear, brave father. Bondage cannot touch his fine spirit, however, and for this we are glad. Yours most truly, PARKER H. SERCOMB.

EUGENE V. DEBS SENDS MESSAGE OF LOVE.

DEAR COMRADES: Love to Moses Harman and good cheer to you all. "The darkest hour is just before the dawn." Loyally yours, EUGENE V. DEBS.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

To-day Moses Harman is 75 years 5 months and 3 days old. He has served 17 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

LUCIFER No. 1042, June 22, 1905—a double number—was accepted, weighed and the money for postage received at the Chicago postoffice. The edition was then confiscated and sent to the dead-letter office at Washington, to be destroyed. No notice was given the publisher, and not until he received complaints of non-receipt by subscribers was he aware of the fact that their papers had not been sent to them. On being questioned, the superintendent of second-class mails at Chicago said he had been instructed by his superiors at Washington to read a copy of every issue of LUCIFER and confiscate all which were, in his opinion, unmailable.

LUCIFER Nos. 1043, 1045, 1046 and 1050 were held to be unmailable by Mr. Hull, the aforesaid superintendent, and copies deposited for mailing were destroyed. The higher officials in Washington concurred in the decisions in regard to these numbers.

Nos. 1053 and 1056 were held to be unmailable, but the department at Washington instructed the local officials that hereafter copies of "unmailable" issues should not be destroyed, but should be returned to the publisher.

No. 1058 was "unmailable" in the estimation of Mr. Hull, but it was a case of "when doctors disagree," for the Washington officials overruled his decision.

It should not be necessary to point out the dangers to the freedom of the press and the liberties of the people which are involved in thus making one man prosecuting attorney, judge and jury, with the power to deny the right of transmission to any publication which in his opinion is of a mistaken tendency.

And what are we going to do about it? Continue the publication of LUCIFER.

And what are YOU going to do about it? Shall we have your assistance? LILLIAN HARMAN.

WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR THESE CHILDREN?

Mrs. John Van Vorst has been investigating the "human documents in the case of the new slavery"—thus she entitles her article—and gives the result of her observations in the "Saturday Evening Post" of March 10. She wished to see for herself the condition of some of the child workers, of whom the census bulletins give the number as over a million and a half between the ages of ten and fifteen.

In this story she tells of her visits to the workers in cotton mills of Alabama. In that state there is a law prohibiting the employment of children unless "widowed mothers or aged or disabled fathers be dependent on the labor of such children." But the law was, of course, very generally ignored. Replying to inquiries, a woman who had been one of several who had worked for the enactment of that law said: "Why did we pass the law? Why not? What difference does it make? There are no inspectors, no school laws, no truant officers, and where there is nobody to enforce a law it can't inspire much respect." And she might have added that even where these officials were appointed and paid by the state the result to the children is about the same when the manufacturers think they can profit by the employment of children. For the census bulletin gives 2,000 as the number of girls under thirteen years employed at night work in Philadelphia, and 92,000 employed at this age or younger in New York state. Mrs. Van Vorst's woman informant was very solicitous that there should be no laws which would "frighten away capitalists and wreck our very surest chances of progress and prosperity."

"The cotton-mill 'folks' wear unwittingly a badge which distinguishes them far and wide. As I came along down over the hill-side I met a child hobbling in her arms another smaller child; both were covered—their hair, their clothes, their very eyelashes, even—with fine flakes of lint, wisps of cotton, fibers of the great web in which the factories imprison their victims.

"'Hello,' I said, 'do you work in the mill?'

"'Yes, meaum.' The voice was gentle and the manner friendly. She hitched the baby, who had a tendency to slip from her tiny, motherly arms, and showed me one of her fingers done up in a loose, dirty bandage. 'I cut my finger right smart,' she drawled, 'so I'm takin' a day off.'

"'How old are you?'

"'Twenty-five.'

"'Got any brothers or sisters?'

"'I've got him.' She straightened the piece of lemon stick candy in the baby's mouth as she thus called attention to 'him,' and continued: 'And I've got one brother in the mill.'

"'How old is he?'

"'Twenty-five.'

"'Twins?' I asked.

"She smiled and shook her head.

"'He's twenty-five in the mill and he's seven outside.'"

One boy who gave his age as "goin' on twenty-five," and who had been at work for four years, could earn "about $2.40 a week." Another, aged "seven-ten," earned twenty cents a day sweeping. And "a day" in the mills means twelve hours of work.

Though almost unbelievable that from the lives of even babies is spun the gold of the shareholders, yet here is Mrs. Van Vorst's testimony:

"Some of my Birmingham informants had told me that there were whole families of dwarfs who came down from the mountains and took work in the mills, greatly misleading certain visitors who supposed them to be children 'under age.' As I walked on now through the mills, talking with a twelve-year-old red-headed girl who had been four years at work, my eyes suddenly fell upon a strange couple (doubtless, I thought, some of the dwarfs against whom I had been warned). I could not take my attention from the tiniest of the tiny pair; the boy's hands appeared to be made without bones; his thumb flew back almost double as he pressed the cotton to loosen it from the revolving rod in the spinning frame; they no longer moved, these yellow anæmic hands, as though directed in their different acts by a thinking intelligence; they performed mechanically the gestures which had given them their definite form.

"The red-headed girl laughed and nodded in the direction of the dwarf.

"'He's 'most six,' she said. 'He's been here two years. He come in when he was 'most four. His little brother 'most four's workin' here now.'

"'Yes? Where?'

"'Oh, he works on the night-shift. He comes in 'bout half-past five and stays till six in the mornin'.'"

Many more were interviewed. I can quote but these few statements. When I read of these children, I picture my own suffering in such hopeless treadmills, and I wonder if any father, any mother, can be satisfied with this "best of all possible worlds" as long as such conditions exist.

In commenting on the million child workers, which the Hearst newspapers gave as the number employed in this country, Mrs. A. P. Warner well says:

"Would that President Roosevelt could have this rung in his ears when he talks of race suicide. Instead of slaughtering innocent dumb animals, why doesn't he evolve some manner of relief for these 1,000,000 helpless little subjects of his great domain?"

Does any one really believe that the mothers of these children desire to furnish babies as food for factories? Would they continue doing so if they had the knowledge and the power of self-ownership and self-control? But this is treading on dangerous ground. It is improper and "immoral" to suggest that women shall control their own bodies and be the mothers of welcome children, and welcome children only. L. H.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our home. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, La Grange, Ill.—Shall write to our martyr this evening. Trust the Liberals of the entire country will do all they can for his comfort, early release, and to express their indignation at this disgraceful act of one branch of this government.

ANNIE K. PARKHURST, 173 Gates avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.—March 1 issue of LUCIFER just received. I trust you are sending me some extras. Could use a dozen to advantage. The picture is fine! Glad to see it and to show it. And to think the original is behind prison bars at this very time! It is an eternal disgrace to those who put him there.

EMMA BOYER, New York.—On receiving LUCIFER No. 1060 and seeing your father's picture, and reading how at his age he is dragged off to prison, I feel and beyond expression. I am sorry the baby's picture did not appear with his grandfather's. I think your father's picture fine—the best I have ever seen. I hope he will not have to serve all the time allotted him. Give him my best regards and accept this dollar for any purpose needed.

JAMES MYERS, 9 Opal street, Logan, Philadelphia, Pa.—We are to have here in Philadelphia a big "LUCIFER meeting"—a protest meeting. We are going to have Pentecost and other speakers. It will be held in three weeks from now. If you can send any circulars or leaflets or copies of LUCIFER for free distribution, please do so at once. We are going to have several big meetings here for "free speech and press," and against "postoffice autocracy." Will try to dispose of many copies of LUCIFER and the Wakeman Letter.

EMMA ALBERTA ABBY, Wathena, Kan.—Our dear Comrade Maud Abby has gone to her eternal rest. She was of a very gentle and sensitive nature, beloved by all children and all who knew her. She was a member of the A. P. W. A. and a contributor to LUCIFER and other radical papers. She was one of LUCIFER's converts. The story of Hagar Lynden waked her to the truthfulness of its lessons. She was prevented by financial difficulties from publishing her poems and essays. We are powerless to say the sweet words she so often said of her friends as they passed away.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M. D., 578 East Sixtieth street, Chicago.—I am more pained than I can express. One can discuss the proper conditions for producing the highest forms of plant and animal life; until one gets to the crowning glory of all earthly products—man. Here investigation must stop. Would-be investigators must "go it Mind." The "matter must be discussed only between a physician and patient." An ignorant postal official can interfere with citizens' rights of free speech and press, which power the constitution denies. Congress and people submit to such dastardly tyranny. I would rather be in prison than to sanction such injustice.

W. C. COPE, Louisville, Ky.—When I saw they had put Moses Harman in prison again it stirred me up to subscribing. I have long read LUCIFER occasionally, but, like thousands of radicals, have been more or less smothered by the weight of conservatism in my environment and failed to encourage a heroic soul, who is fighting my battles. But the actual imprisonment was the needed whip to my soul, so here is my subscription. I suppose "Daughter Lillian" will edit LUCIFER during the interregnum. Well, the paper will not suffer in sprightliness and interest on that account, as I still remember the bright paper she got out in the "nineties," during a previous interregnum.

HENRY E. ALLEN, Benton Harbor, Mich.—If I may be allowed a brief reply to the letter by D. Webster Groh, I would say this: If our Hagerstown friend will question any socialist who fully understands the philosophy of socialism, I think he will find that not one favors anything like the political, tyrannous government we now have. In its stead we would have simple industrial administration. Of course, under any form of majority rule there will always be the danger that invariably accompanies ignorance. So the only way is to get rid of ignorance. There are many socialists, I regret to say, who are as ignorant as bats on the important question of sex ethics. But every socialist is something of an investigator, and the chances are that before we arrive at the gates of the co-operative commonwealth we will have mastered to a large extent the ignorance and intolerance now so prevalent. D. W. Groh will find that the average socialist is as much opposed to political rule and domination as he can possibly be. With the power of recall, the despotism now shown in the management of the postoffice would not be possible.

C. M. AND E. B. GREENE, Topeka, Kan.—LUCIFER came today. We had seen in the "Journal" (Topeka) that your father was again behind the bars and Mr. Greene wrote him that night. We wish several copies of this week's paper. We will show a few of our friends one of the "jail birds" of our nation. One would think our authorities would be stricken with shame to know that such a man is placed among the criminal class, but such a hold has superstition, graft and illegally-held power on those we have placed in command that their eyes are blinded and they see not the pitfalls they are digging for their own and their children's feet. Any one who looks upon Mr. Harman's features as shown in LUCIFER may be proud to call him friend. It is not necessary that we shall believe in all he does nor in all his methods in order to recognize his worth; and to think of his being treated as a criminal cannot but arouse indignation in the minds of his friends. Some time the work he is striving to do will come to its proper place and he will be recognized as one of the world's benefactors. Until then we can only work and wait. If money can keep LUCIFER going it must not be downed. We enclose a dollar.

F. W., Vevey, Switzerland.—I cannot express with what shame and indignation I read by recent numbers of LUCIFER to hand that the "free and enlightened" government of the United States of America is committing the crime, in the beginning of the twentieth century, of casting your most esteemed and venerated father into prison for daring to discuss, in an open yet perfectly decent and rational fashion, one of the fundamental problems of life—i. e., the sex relation and what it involves. It might well be called the fundamental problem. And his reward for attempting to pour in sweetness and light and expel darkness and corruption is one year's imprisonment with hard labor. Truly, there is much madness in this world and our rulers have their full share of the insanity. Your intrepid father bears this trial in a heroic spirit and with the dignity of an antique philosopher, but will his years enable him to bear the rigors of prison life? I do not know how humane or inhumane your prison system may be in America. It is a cruel thought that in the eveningtime of his life Moses Harman should be treated in this cruel fashion—a man whose services in the cause of Humanity will shed a lustre round his name now and through the more emancipated and enlightened ages to come.

MARGARET J. BENEDICTSSON, Winnipeg.—Just now I received the latest copy of LUCIFER with the picture of your illustrious father and his closing farewell before the prison bars shut him out from the life and sun and action and liberty. Be of good cheer yourself and keep him in such, for he is the martyr of our woman's cause—a great and grand man, whom the coming ages will worship, not as a god-myth, but as the incarnation of all the noblest elements known to mankind. Please let the few friendly words from a full heart of gratitude, and a foreigner who has grasped your and his teachings and is trying to teach the same to her country people through a small monthly magazine, and who knows what persecution is for the very same cause by her own country people's papers, reach your father in his prison, so he may know the (his) cause is being fought by many nations, in many languages. I used to be an inhabitant of the great United States for years, and I loved it as the land of freedom and justice. But now I am grieved to the very heart at this disgracing news, grieved to see Liberty bow its beautiful wings to such injustice as the courts of that great Union have meted out to one of its best and noblest sons—grieved beyond expression, for I fear that if injustice be so easily crowned in that land of liberty, it will still more easily ride on the ruling wings of power in other lands.

R. N. DOUGLASS, Postville, Iowa.—I want a few copies of the Wakeman Letter. I shall not tire in trying to induce friends and others to read this. It seems so much more effective than when in LUCIFER, and it creates a desire to see LUCIFER. I inclose herewith $1 to help pay the expense of the Wakeman Letter, or in any other way that you may see fit to use it. Am only sorry I do not feel able to make it a number of dollars. Can you furnish bound volumes of the last year's LUCIFER? I have given away nearly all of mine as soon as read. For myself I scarcely need last year's numbers for the reason that it seems to me I have read them with so much interest that I already possess them. I do not believe you will ever have to go behind prison bars, and if you do, the imprisonment will do more for the cause than would be accomplished in ten years on the outside. The world is moving with greater strides than ever before.

[In speaking of William Lloyd Garrison's early struggles, Ernest Howard Crosby said that Garrison had the fortune to acquire that which is needed by every good cause—a good, strong opposition. In the South the mails were searched by postmasters for copies of the "Liberator," and when these were found—and letters from Garrison and other abolitionists as well—they were confiscated and destroyed. But this was not done under cover of "postal regulations" by the "authorities," as in the case of LUCIFER. We hope and believe such tactics will be as ineffective in the case of LUCIFER as in that of the "Liberator." Mr. Douglass' prophecy was too highly colored by hope, but it is certain that, though the editor is imprisoned, his friends will do all they can to make that imprisonment of effective service to the cause of freedom.

We expect soon to have volumes of LUCIFER for 1905 bound, and would like to receive orders from those desiring them. The price, bound in cloth, will be $1.50. It is not necessary to send money with order, but we would like to hear from as many as possible, so we may know how many copies to bind.—L. H.]

ADELINE CHAMPNEY, Cleveland, Ohio.—I thank you for the leaflets, which came promptly. We have given out a few. One of our friends the other day read the letter to a group of lawyers and he reported that they were very much in agreement with it. A few have been sold; among others, one to Judge B——, of this city. One of the book-sellers has agreed to put a few in his window, but I have not heard whether any of them are sold yet. Horace Carr has a few; he can dispose of them where they will tell. I shall take some to the Civic Study Club this week. I hope soon to send for more. I see by the last LUCIFER that our dear Moses is at last in prison. I look at his picture and wonder! It is a fine picture. I should think those judges and his "keepers" would be ashamed to look him in the eye! F—— says, and I think the suggestion an excellent one, that it would be a good idea to print Moses' picture on the front page of every number of LUCIFER while he is incarcerated. It should be printed with a brief comment, such as "This is the man who is serving a sentence at Joliet for his earnest championship of the cause of freedom; especially the freedom of women." This is merely a suggestion, of course, and very likely our Moses is too modest to take kindly at first thought to the idea. But don't you think it would be a good thing, and would attract attention in a way that would help to interest people? His is such a noble face, so earnest, so refined—people would think, "Why, this man is not guilty of obscenity"; they would have to investigate further. In an unpopular cause personalities count. And surely modesty may be set aside when it stands in the way of gaining a hearing. To look at that face is to feel at once that here is a man with a purpose. I hope you may think favorably of the suggestion. How is his health? Do you think he will be able to keep up under the strain and the confinement? I know nothing of the management of Joliet. Is it possible that they will carry out the sentence of "hard labor" literally? I will assuredly write to him in his martyrdom—and it seems as though for once it would not be a vain martyrdom; that it must make people think at last.

B. M. JACKSON, M. D., Omaha, Neb.—I know that most of our political "rulers" are rascals, not from choice, but from ignorance inculcated by still more ignorant theologians; hence, when one of them "ruled" that "Any and all discussion of the sex question is obscene and so unmailable," and he added voluntarily that "The only occasion for any talk on such questions is in private conversation of physicians with patients," I marveled at his hopeless ignorance. For I am correct when I say that ninety-nine physicians out of a hundred are as ignorant about matters pertaining to sex as he and Comstock are. Physicians, unless they themselves choose to buy and read literature treating on the subject, live and die ignorant about it. There is not extant a medical college which imparts such instruction, or even refers to the subject. The few physicians who know something about it have acquired that knowledge from non-medical sources. I am almost certain that even the few physicians who have written books treating on sex matters have also acquired their knowledge from individuals without the pale of medicaldom.

The very "quack" doctors, most of whom have read sex literature, take advantage of their ignorant medical brethren ("family" physicians) by means of glaring advertisements, which bring to them the hordes of discouraged, diseased and ignorant mortals who are slaves to the vices of the flesh, and to whom "family" physicians can render no aid. I have had charge of boys, whose ages ranged from twelve to fifty years, who were "treated" by their "family" physicians for every kind of an imaginary ailment, without either the physician or the patient being enlightened as to the real cause of complaint. The average physician shrinks from the "knowledge of self" just as his ancestor, the priest, has shrunk from time immemorial. Forsooth, do not theologians mold the faculties of the would-be physicians, while they are yet in a sufficiently elastic condition—in other words, during childhood? Men and women who do not know themselves—who depend upon priests to "save" their "souls"—who depend upon physicians to "save" them from sickness or death—who depend upon teachers to "save" them from ignorance—who, lastly, depend upon politicians to "save" them from poverty and all its consequences—must be and will be hopelessly diseased physically, intellectually, socially and politically.

'Tis safe to lay your cares aside
And rest awhile each day;
Be sure no other man will come
And steal your load away.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.
Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 3 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

HEROES.

[NEW YORK, Feb. 12, 1906.—My Dear Brother Harman: The announcement of your incarceration makes most painfully realistic your heroic life story, and my sympathy and loving admiration find something of expression in the following lines copied from a clipping lately sent me and which most truly picture your pure and noble spirit. Reveringly yours, ERNEST WINNE.]

When I think sometimes of what wondrous fame
Hath fallen upon men of noisy deeds,
Of laurel flung for every drop that bleeds
And grateful nations busy with a name,
I think of those who, deaf to praise or blame,
Labor in silence for their brothers' needs,
Sowing in darkness those immortal seeds
To one day blossom in men's souls like flame.

Ah, these unrecognized, unhailed, denied!
These heroes, of what land or age they be,
Who mutely anguish at the task undone—
These wonderful, strong Christs, not crucified
On a high place for all the world to see,
But striving on unnoted and alone!
—Theodosia Garrison.

OUR DESPOTIC POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

We recur with much reluctance to the despotic censorship which is growing up in the postoffice department under cover of well-meant congressional legislation for the suppression of vice and fraud. The subject cannot be neglected while that crude and careless legislation remains upon the statute books unamended. For this censorship, already destructive of some of the legitimate postal rights of some persons, is becoming more and more expansive in scope and despotic in execution.

The particular instance regarding which we are about to submit the facts, relates, as did a previous one, to the Chicago periodical known as LUCIFER, which the postoffice department is endeavoring to suppress on the manifestly false pretense that it is an obscene publication. On the same pretense and by the same influence, the editor, Mr. Moses Harman, has been imprisoned through the machinery of the federal courts.

LUCIFER is devoted in good faith to the propagation of its editor's opinions regarding sex relationships. Although these opinions are contrary to ours, we conceive that they may nevertheless be entitled to respectful consideration, and we therefore demand for them the same freedom of expression that we enjoy for our own. They are, indeed, hostile to the perpetuation of certain ecclesiastical and social conventionalities, but only a false witness or a moral pervert would deliberately pronounce them obscene. The product of a philosophical and not a salacious mind, they present for rational thought questions of human welfare which demand uncensored expression.

But the vital question presented by the particular circumstances to be here considered, is not whether LUCIFER'S opinions and ours, or its opinions and anybody else's, are at variance. It is not whether one kind of opinion or another shall be suppressed. It is not whether obscenity shall be excluded from the mails, nor even whether LUCIFER is actually guilty of obscene utterances. The vital question to the American people in this and all similar cases is whether any person shall, upon any pretense whatever, be deprived of his liberty or his property, so far as either depends upon the use of the mails, without a fair trial and in accordance with public law and unconcealed precedents. It is the old question of "administrative process" in a new form.

That the right to use the mails depends, under the act of Congress as it now exists, upon the mere whim of administrative officers we have already proved. We purpose now to confirm that proof with additional evidence. At the same time we shall demonstrate specifically the following assertions:

1. Any periodical, though it contains nothing obscene, is subject to exclusion peremptorily from the mails as a purveyor of obscenity, upon the mere order of administrative officials of the postoffice department.

2. Exclusion orders are made ostensibly in accordance with precedents of the department created by rulings in particular cases upon what constitutes obscenity; but these precedents are secret, and by refusing to define their limitations upon request the department prevents publishers from guarding against the penalties of orders of exclusion.

3. Publishers whose periodicals are so excluded are accorded no protection by the courts against unjust exclusions, not even though the exclusion be made in manifest bad faith. As the law stands, the postmaster general's dictum, right or wrong, and whether with good intent or evil intent, is absolute.

4. In practice the postoffice department excludes periodicals from the mails for publishing articles denounced as obscene, which in fact are not obscene.

5. The law as it now stands affords officials of the postoffice department a degree of opportunity for corrupt discrimination in excluding periodicals, which it is unsafe to repose in any official and which ought to be carefully guarded against by Congress.

I.

About the middle of August last we were advised that the issue of LUCIFER of August 3 had been excluded from the mails by postal order. According to our information, the matter specified as objectionable was in a paragraph of each of two indicated articles.

The first of these paragraphs was clearly not obnoxious to the law, unless President Roosevelt's observations on race suicide were obnoxious to it; the second was no more so, unless a book it named by title is on the postal index expurgatorius. We should have no hesitation in republishing both paragraphs for the purpose of showing their innocence, were it not for the fact that the postoffice department has them now on its index expurgatorius. This fact alone, were we to republish them here, would subject this issue of "The Public" to the risk of exclusion from the mails by order of the postoffice department, and without possibility of protection from the courts.

Upon examining the articles in question we wrote, August 12, 1905, to the Chicago postmaster as follows:

> Mr. Moses Harman, the publisher of LUCIFER the Light-Bearer, which is entered at the Chicago postoffice, writes us to the effect that his issue of August 3d was submitted to your office for mailing; that your office advised that the first two articles of the issue were unmailable under section 497 of the "Postal Laws and Regulations"; and that the question is now before the department at Washington awaiting its decision, the issue of LUCIFER for August 3d being meanwhile practically denied circulation through the mails.
>
> The first article he indicates is signed . . . and the second purports to be an article in the . . . . by . . . . . I have read the articles with a good deal of care, and fail to find in them anything that can possibly, either in thought or phrase, fall within what I should suppose would be considered a fair interpretation of the section of the "Postal Laws and Regulations" referred to above.
> If the articles were in harmony with my own views, I should never think of refusing them admission to my columns, although I am extremely careful, entirely apart from any consideration of the postal laws and regulations, to avoid giving offense with reference to the general subject with which these articles are allied. I can see no reason whatever for refusing them admission to any publication on any other ground than that, as in my case, they are out of harmony with its editorial policy. I am therefore constrained to believe that there must be some mistake or misunderstanding. It does not seem to me possible that your office would take the action which the publisher of LUCIFER tells me has been taken respecting these articles.

May I therefore respectfully ask you to inform me of the facts so far as your office is concerned?

The reply of the Chicago postmaster, promptly made and bearing the date of August 14, was as follows:

Replying to yours of August 12, concerning the publication LUCIFER, the issue of August 3 contains obscene literature, judged by the precedent set by the department at Washington in its rulings on this publication. The alleged objectionable matter is found in the . . . . paragraph,* beginning . . . . In the . . . . column of page . . . . also in the . . . . paragraph from the bottom of the same column, beginning . . . . In this paragraph a pamphlet is advertised which contains obscene matter.

If the matter is not obscene in the meaning of the law, the ruling of the department at Washington will render the matter mailable, and no damage will result to the publication.

There has been no misunderstanding on the part of this office in its action on this issue of the publication. This action is entirely within the departmental instructions, and so far in the history of this publication the action of this office has been upheld by the department.

The paragraphs specified in the postmaster's letter, the specific reference to which we omit for reasons explained in the footnote, were the same paragraphs as those to which our attention had been originally called. The second one was held to be objectionable only because it named a book which is on the postal index expurgatorius.

This letter from the Chicago postmaster throws some light on the indifference of the postal authorities to personal rights. "If the matter is not obscene," calmly writes the Chicago postmaster (doubtless by the hand of a bureaucratic subordinate), "the rulings of the department at Washington will render the matter mailable, and no damage will result to the publication." No damage will result to the publication! A whole issue of a publication may be stopped while a bureau at Washington leisurely considers whether it contains obscenity, and if the bureau's decision is favorable, "no damage will result to the publication"! This discloses a queer notion of the nature of newspaper property. However, as to our inquiry the Chicago postmaster's letter was as specific as could be required, and we awaited the final action of the department upon the postmaster's order of exclusion.

Meanwhile the Chicago postmaster had found it necessary, in accordance with the precedents of the department, to exclude also the issue of LUCIFER of August 17.

In this instance the accusation, as reported to us, was plainly imaginary. It rested in part upon the republication of an editorial from the "Woman's Journal," of Boston, the national woman suffrage organ, and one of the purest and most reputable periodicals in the United States, and in part upon an extract from an official report of the agricultural department of the United States government.

We, thereupon, wrote this letter, dated August 26, to the Chicago postmaster:

Thank you for your prompt, courteous and full reply of August 14 to mine of August 12, in which I had inquired relative to denial of mail service to the edition of the paper LUCIFER of August 3.

In one respect you misunderstood me. It was not my intention to imply that your office is acting recklessly with reference to the policy of the department, or contrary to departmental instructions. I was only seeking information as to the policy, rulings and instructions of the department as applied by you in a particular case.

And now I must trouble you again in the same way. I am informed that the issue of LUCIFER of August 17 also has been refused mail service, and that the refusal is based on the charge that an article reproduced in it from the "Woman's Journal," of Boston, and written by one of the editors of that paper, Alice Stone Blackwell, is unmailable under section 497 of "Postal Laws and Regulations." As the "Woman's Journal" is the principal journalistic representative of the woman suffrage movement in the United States, and is everywhere respected as a pure and able publication, and Miss Blackwell is a woman of national reputation with a stainless character, this action of your office is of peculiar importance and of exceptional public concern.

The matter also concerns me personally, for in entire good faith I also have reproduced an extract from Miss Blackwell's article. Whether the part I have reproduced includes any of the article to which you are said to object I cannot positively know until I learn definitely from you the particular part or parts of that article (the whole and every part of which seem to me a thoroughly clean and just criticism of the present postal administration) to which postal objection is made and for the republication of which the mail service is denied to LUCIFER of August 17—if such service has been denied on account of anything contained in Miss Blackwell's article.

Both for my own guidance, therefore, and also for legitimate public use, will you kindly indicate to me specifically, in such way as you think proper, what are the grounds for the exclusion from the mails of the edition of LUCIFER of August 17?

The postmaster's reply, bearing date of August 29, was as follows:

Replying to yours of August 26, three pounds of the publication LUCIFER, of the issue of August 17, were offered for mailing at this office, and the copies are held, awaiting decision by the department at Washington as to whether or not they are mailable under Sec. 497, P. L. & R.

The matter to which the attention of the department has been especially drawn by this office is the article at the head of the . . . . column of page . . . . and the . . . . lines at the . . . . of the . . . . column of page . . . .†

Judging by precedent, this matter is in violation of section 497, and under postal instructions it is the duty of this office to submit the matter to the department at Washington for a ruling.

Owing to the indefiniteness of this letter from the postmaster, we made the following further inquiry, in a letter to him bearing date of August 30:

Thank you for your reply of the 29th to mine of 26th, in re issue of LUCIFER of August 17.

You say that "the attention of the department has been especially drawn" by your office to "the article at the . . . . of the . . . . column of page . . . . and the . . . . lines at the . . . . of the . . . . column of page . . . ." As you qualify your statement by the word "especially," may I further ask whether you acted also on any other part of the article on page . . . . or on any other article in the issue in question?

And if it would be proper for you to give it, I should like the following additional information regarding the objectionability of the article at the head of the . . . . column of page . . . .‡

1. Does the objection apply to the use of the title of Dr. ——'s book in the . . . . line of that article?

2. Does it apply to the language of the comparison between mankind and horse kind in lines . . . . and . . . . of the text of the article?

3. Does it apply to the quotation in line . . . . of the text of the article, purporting to be from page . . . . of a "Special Report on Diseases of the Horse," prepared under the direction of Dr. D. E. Salmon, and issued by the bureau of animal industry in the United States department of agriculture?

4. Does it apply to the quotation in lines . . . . and . . . . of the text of the article in question, purporting to be from the text of the above described report of the agricultural department?

5. Does it apply to the use of the title of Dr. ——'s book in the . . . . line of the text of the article in question?

Noting what you say to the effect that the articles in question are in violation of section 497 according to precedent, and that it is your duty under postal instructions to submit them to the department for a ruling, I wish to assure you of my absolute confidence in your good faith and that of your office. Permit me also to apologize for presuming to interrogate you so minutely as I do in this letter. Believe me, I am far from desiring to annoy you, or your office, or the department. But it seems to me of the utmost importance that editors and the reading public should know the extent of the limitations that the rulings of the department are imposing upon editorial discussion, quotation, etc., and it is only to this end that I trouble you.‖

Following was the the Chicago postmaster's reply of September 1 to the foregoing letter:

Replying to yours of August 30, relative to the publication LUCIFER, I cannot answer your specific questions with a direct "yes" or "no." I see no necessity for this office to explain its objection to this printed matter in the manner you have prescribed. The article in question may be "obscene," within the meaning of the law. That is for the department at Washington to decide. To quote your statement, it may be "of the utmost importance that editors and the reading public should know the extent of the limitations that the rulings of the department are imposing upon editorial discussion, quotations, etc.," but it is not within the province of this office to interpret the law. That is the prerogative of the department at Washington. This office can only refer you to the statutes and to the rulings of the department in specific cases.

In answer to the first question of yours of August 30, all references to the book ". . . .‡‖ were marked in the copy sent to the department by

*We omit the specific references made in the postmaster's letter, because their inclusion here might subject this issue of "The Public" to suppression by order of the postal censor. The same act of Congress by authority of which LUCIFER was censored for publishing those articles provides also that "notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where or how, or of whom or by what means an "obscene . . . . publication of an indecent character" "may be obtained" is itself "non-mailable matter." Since the censors have already decided that the articles in question are obscene and indecent, they might decide that the naming of them by title and page, in connection with the name of the publication in which they appeared, is a notice making the paper publishing it also guilty under the statute and therefore subject to suppression. Were they to so decide, they could suppress this issue of "The Public," and we should be without protection or redress or any power to get a judicial trial.

‡Specific reference omitted for reasons stated in previous footnote.

‖Name of book omitted for reasons heretofore given. The book mentioned in the postmaster's letter is not the United States Agricultural Report, but Dr. ——'s book entitled ". . . ."

this office. These references are not necessarily objectionable. The quotation from the book may be.

Having been refused in the preceding letter the information we sought, and referred therein "to the rulings of the department in specific cases," we addressed the postmaster general in the following letter, dated September 6:

Will you kindly examine the inclosed correspondence between myself and the postmaster at Chicago and, if in your judgment proper to do so, favor me with the information which the Chicago postmaster does not regard it proper for his office to furnish?

To facilitate your examination of the inclosures, I describe them as follows:

1. My letter of August 26 asking (for legitimate public use) for a specification of the grounds for the Chicago postmaster's exclusion from the mails of the edition of the Chicago periodical LUCIFER, of August 17, 1905.

2. The postmaster's response of August 29, indicating the matter to which the attention of your department was "especially drawn" by the Chicago postmaster as furnishing grounds for the exclusion.

3. My reply of August 30, asking specific questions, with a view to ascertaining exactly, and all, the matter objected to in the edition of LUCIFER in question, the postmaster having qualified his response to my former letter with the word "especially," as you will observe by reference to the copy of his response inclosed.

4. The postmaster's reply of September 1, stating that he sees no necessity for explaining his objection to the printed matter in question in the manner I have requested, and referring to your department.

My specific requests of your department are:

First. Whether the Chicago postmaster, in denying mail service to the issue of LUCIFER of August 17, noted as objectionable any other part or parts of that issue than the parts described by him in his letters to me of August 29 and September 1. If so, what part or parts?

Second. Whether the objections he noted applied to the issue of LUCIFER in question, as indicated by any or all of those questions in my letter to him of August 30, which are therein distinguished by the numerals 2, 3 and 4.

As I stated in my letter of August 30 to the Chicago postmaster, it is no part of my purpose to annoy your department, or any branch of it, with impertinent inquiries. I may add that I have no intention of soliciting any information that the general public have no right to know. But I shall be greatly obliged if your department will give me the information solicited above, so far as it may be within the bounds of propriety, and, to save further inquiry from me, will be sufficiently specific with reference to any of my requests that you may think improper, as to assure me that the failure to reply is because they are improper and not because they are accidentally overlooked.

The reply to the foregoing letter was dated September 13, and came from the first assistant postmaster general, who wrote:

In reply to your letter of the 6th instant to the postmaster general, you are informed that this department cannot undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter appearing in the issue of the periodical LUCIFER, of August 17, 1905, which caused the exclusion of that issue from the mails.

This reply was so obviously an attempt to evade responsibility, and so manifestly indicative of a disposition to censor the mails not only arbitrarily but secretly, that we renewed our inquiries. This seemed necessary in order to make sure that the foregoing letter was deliberately in execution of a policy of secret censorship instituted by the department, and not merely the irresponsible act of a careless first assistant.

Our letter renewing our previous inquiries was also addressed to the postmaster general. It bore date of September 18, and as will be noted from its reproduction below, it sought the information on the special ground that the department's decision had made a precedent, the limitations of which ought to be divulged upon application by persons likely to be affected by it in conducting their business:

I am in receipt of reply of the 13th by the first assistant postmaster general to my letter of inquiry of the 6th, in which the first assistant postmaster general advises me that your department cannot undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter appearing in the issue of the periodical LUCIFER of August 17, 1905, which caused the exclusion of that issue from the mails."

Since receiving that letter I am informed that your department has sustained the postmaster at Chicago in his exclusion of the issue of LUCIFER of August 17, and that this has been done because in that issue it published an editorial entitled ". . . . . " * and an article copied from the "Woman's Journal," entitled ". . . . " Inasmuch as the matter has been finally decided by your department, and is no longer under advisement, I wish to ascertain the extent of your adjudication, for the purpose of understanding its effect as a precedent.

As to the article from the "Woman's Journal," your adjudication is sufficiently specific in one respect, namely, the . . . . lines at the top of the . . . . column of page . . . . of LUCIFER of August 17, and as to that I have no question to ask.

As to the other part of the same article, the matter about . . . . way down the . . . . column of page . . . . of LUCIFER, which you have adjudicated to be objectionable, will you kindly inform me whether or not your adjudication rests only or at all upon the naming there of the title of a book?

I should like also to know whether your adjudication as to the "Woman's Journal" article in LUCIFER rests upon anything else than the name of that book, and upon the . . . . lines at the . . . . of the . . . . column of page . . . .

Finally, as to the article in LUCIFER entitled ". . . . . ," it seems to me especially important, since the postmaster at Chicago advises me that he acts in these questions upon the precedents your department establishes, that I should know the full bearing of the precedent established with reference to this particular article. The article, as you will recall, mentions the title of a book, and quotes from an official report of the United States department of agriculture. Will you kindly inform me whether your adjudication as to this article rests upon the naming of the book, or the quotation from the agricultural department's report, or both?

Please understand me. I am not endeavoring to probe the mental processes whereby the conclusions of your department were arrived at. All I am asking for is the extent of the conclusions themselves, in so far as they go to make a precedent.

Regretting what seems to me to be the necessity for further troubling you in this matter, I am, etc.

The reply of the department to the foregoing letter confirmed the indications of the first assistant's letter of the 13th. It showed that arbitrary and secret censorship is a deliberate policy of the department; either that, or else that F. H. Hitchcock, first assistant postmaster general, deliberately misrepresented the department. For the reply, signed by F. H. Hitchcock as first assistant postmaster general, and dated September 27, was as follows:

Your letter of the 18th instant, addressed to the postmaster general, has been referred to this office for reply. With reference to your questions relative to certain objectionable articles which appeared in the issue of the publication LUCIFER, of August 17, you are informed that the position of the department in the matter was stated in a letter to you bearing date of the 13th instant.

We invite attention to the bureaucratic superciliousness of this reply to proper questions respectfully asked. The department refuses to answer further than by reference to its prior letter. In its prior letter it declined to "undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter," etc. Now what had we asked? Observe the substance of our questions and the department's reply:

Question: Did the department's adjudication as to a certain part of a certain article "rest only or at all upon the naming there of the title of a book?"

Answer: The department "cannot undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter."

Question: Did the department's adjudication as to the "Woman's Journal" article rest upon anything else than the name of a book and certain indicated lines?

Answer: The department "cannot undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter."

Question: One of the indicated articles "mentions the title of a book, and quotes from an official report of the United States department of agriculture. Will you kindly inform me whether your adjudications as to this article rests upon the naming of the book, or the quotation from the agricultural department's report, or both?"

Answer: The department "cannot undertake to specify in detail the objectionable matter."

Soon after the foregoing correspondence we learned of the censorship by the postoffice department of a subsequent issue of LUCIFER, the issue of October 12. According to a still later issue of LUCIFER, the circumstances of this censorship were these: One of the articles in that issue of LUCIFER, to which the postoffice department was understood to have objected, was merely a catalogue of books. Among the authors were John Stuart Mill, August Bebel and other thinkers of reputation; and none of them is apparently obscene unless every serious discussion of the philosophy and physiology of sex is to be considered as in that abhorrent category. The other article contains a quotation from the London "Fortnightly Review," which includes one from Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman," proposing pensions as a preventive of what President Roosevelt calls race suicide.

Upon learning of the suppression of this issue of LUCIFER we addressed the following letter of inquiry to the postmaster general, under date of October 20:

I am informed that the Chicago postmaster has excluded from the mails the issue of the Chicago paper named LUCIFER, of October 12, 1905, and that the exclusion is based upon an article on page . . .† first and . . . columns, containing a descriptive catalogue of books, and upon an article on page . . . second column, containing a quotation from Bernard Shaw's

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

The article on "Our Despotic Postal Censorship," by Louis F. Post, occupies so much of the space in this issue that much other matter to which we should like to give place is crowded out. But we feel that Mr. Post's able presentation of the case is of such importance that it should be given completely. "The Public" has published it in a neat and convenient shape. We have ordered a supply and are sure it will be circulated. The price is 3 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen. But as in the case of the Wakeman Letter, the money, though important, is not of first consideration. If the pamphlets are placed where they will awaken thought and action the work will be well done, even though a part of the money invested is lost. Let those who can pay for the literature do so, but let no one refrain from assisting in the circulation because of lack of money. The work must go forward. Progress is being made and will continue, we are sure. Though forced to silence, the spirit of the imprisoned editor is felt by an increasing number, who would never have read his words had he remained at liberty.

A PIONEER IN THE CAUSE OF FREEDOM FOR WOMEN.

Susan B. Anthony—whose name, once so widely ridiculed and execrated, is now praised and honored—lived to see the cause for which she had labored a lifetime become respected. She experienced the petty persecution of the public press, such as that now endured by Emma Goldman and others. Her views on the equality of woman in the home and the nation, once so startling, are now so commonly indorsed that she has seemed almost to belong in the ranks of the conservatives. Nevertheless, she had experienced arrest and condemnation, and has had her writings censored by postal officials—and was not convinced of the erroneousness of her views by those weighty arguments.

In the presidential election of 1872 Miss Anthony cast a vote and for this crime, for this attack on the foundations of society, she was arrested, tried and sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and costs. "May it please your honor," she said, "I shall never pay a dollar of that unjust penalty." Nor was it paid by herself or any other person.

During a visit in Berlin she posted letters in the official envelopes of the suffrage association, which bore the motto, "No just government can be formed without the consent of the governed." In a few days an official brought back a large package, saying, "Such sentiments are not allowed to pass through the postoffice."

"In the quarters of one of the devotees at the old monastery of the Certosa, at Florence, there lies, on a small table, an open book, in which visitors register," says Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in her "Reminiscences." "On the occasion of Miss Anthony's visit the pen and ink proved so unpromising that her entire party declined this opportunity to make themselves famous, but she made the rebellious pen inscribe, 'Perfect equality for women, civil, political, religious. Susan B. Anthony, U. S. A.' Friends who visited the monastery next day, reported that lines had been drawn through this heretical sentiment."

Miss Anthony was a woman of "one idea"—so the world would say. I believe that she accomplished great good for women, and therefore for all humanity. "Who will rock the cradle when the women go to vote?" was sneeringly asked of the suffragists. It was claimed that if a wife had the right to legally register an opinion at variance from that of her husband, the family would be disrupted, the home destroyed and society thrown into a state of chaos. Just as those who oppose a still wider freedom for women, their prototypes held that the love of father and mother for each other and for their children could not exist in freedom, unconscious that thus they most bitterly assailed human nature, and ignoring the fact that the home and the family can exist in their highest and their best only in the pure, sweet atmosphere of freedom and love. DENIAL OF FREE DISCUSSION AN OUTRAGE.

It was with sincere sorrow that I heard of your father's being sent to Joliet. He goes there with a good conscience, however, which will probably make him happier, even in prison, than his persecutors deserve to be; and if anything can be done to soften his material hardships, I hope you will let me help.

The "Woman's Journal" will have an account of the matter this week, and will invite all who may be interested in helping to get a pardon, if possible, to communicate with the Free Speech League.

We do not agree in our theoretical ideas, but the denial of the right of free discussion of all sorts of theories is an outrage, and it is only a question of time when that right will be fully established. And I can heartily admire your and Mr. Harman's courage, even while differing with you in opinion. Yours with much sympathy,

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

A SAD CIVILIZATION.

MY DEAR LILLIAN HARMAN: The imprisonment of your father is an outrage. Is there no way that the friends of free speech can unite to urge his release? Like many another guiltless prisoner, he has the comfort of a clear conscience and of obedience to his sense of duty. It is a sad civilization that must incarcerate men like him. As the son of one who found happiness in prison walls, I congratulate you on a father worthy of such distinction for the sake of freedom and justice. Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

Boston, Mass., March 20, 1906.

SAYS EDITOR'S PICTURE ADDS INTEREST.

By all means keep Mr. Harman's benign countenance in LUCIFER. If it takes extra fine paper, here are $2 toward it, and I trust you will find many other contributors for this same purpose. Its presence in LUCIFER will not only add interest, but show to the world what kind of a man is in prison in the state of Illinois for upholding the most sacred rights of women. Very truly, E. B. FOOTE.

Great is Democracy! Under its palladium even the humblest of us has a voice. We are permitted to vote. We elect our public servants. Then we permit our good masters to select a committee to watch our appointees. Then we have a voters' league to keep an eye on the committee. Then we have a society to watch the voters' league. And so ad infinitum.—Selected.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 5 months and 17 days old. He has served 31 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

* * *

The Free Speech League has issued a slip containing the following matter. It is designed to circulate in connection with the Open Letter, by T. B. Wakeman, and in other ways as well:

One year in prison, beginning March 1, 1906, is the sentence being served at Joliet, Ill., by Moses Harman, aged 75 years, teacher, preacher, editor, reformer; an earnest, honest, steadfast, brave, unflinching, Garrison-type of man—the last victim of ill-defined, misconstrued, much-abused obscenity laws; the last martyr for free press; the last to suffer "for opinion's sake."

The United States government ought to be letting him go, and asking his pardon for so gross a mistake in forgetting its fundamental constitution and principles, but this is "too much to expect," so the friends of the prisoner, for the sake of the government, to save their respect for it, will now ask a pardon for the prisoner who has committed no real offense. To this absurd extremity have we come at last that we must ask for a pardon for Harman.

All who can and will aid in the effort to atone for one of the first mistakes of a "free government" in the twentieth century will communicate with the Free Speech League, 175 Broadway, New York.

"Straws show how the wind blows." Here is the first sign that a storm is brewing. In the "New York American's" February 22 report of the senate debate on pure food bill, by Mr. Julian Hawthorne, occur the following lines:

"At this point Mr. Bailey, of Texas, arose and immediately lifted the discussion from the level of dictionary definitions to that of statesmanship. He challenged the right of the federal government to interfere in what should (as he contended) be a matter proper to the state police.

"'I believe the rascal who sells poisons to the public is a public enemy, and should be sent to prison; but I believe that state and not federal law should be the instrument. . . . I say that one criminal state prosecution would do more to correct abuses than any bureau. . . . Take the postoffice; no such despot was ever legally created as the postmaster general. He can destroy any man's business simply by saying, on his private responsibility, that it shall stop; and there is no appeal for the victim, save to the officer who condemned him. . . . It is un-American. . . . The entire federal government cannot take away a man's horse; but a single individual may take away his business and reputation without recourse or compensation.'"

How much longer will the press of this country remain silent in the face of such facts?

A VISIT TO THE PRISONER.

On Monday, March 26, I had a short interview with my father. His health has suffered from the confinement and prison diet, but in spirit he is cheerful and hopeful. He feels, however, that if present conditions continue he will probably not outlive his term of imprisonment. There is a great deal of consumption in the Joliet penitentiary. He is confined in his cell nearly all the time, and his cell-mate, who sleeps in the lower bunk with his head about three feet below father's, coughs a great deal of the time. I did not understand whether he is a consumptive or not.

Father was compelled to submit to vaccination—the first time in his life in which he has undergone that operation. Because of trouble resulting from the vaccination, and the coughing of his cell-mate, he has not yet been able to obtain proper sleep. The general prison diet is better than in some other prisons, but is not suited to him, and he cannot have the food to which he is accustomed and which consists principally of fruit. The prisoners are permitted to eat while they are talking to their visitors, but can carry nothing to their cells. He had eaten nothing that day, hoping we would come. We took him some of the finest apples (his favorite fruit) that we could find. It was hard to be obliged to bring away all he could not eat while talking, when we knew he so needed them.

He wrote a letter, about two weeks ago, but it was not permitted to be mailed, owing, I understand, to the fact that those through whose hands it passed considered that it contained criticisms of the management of the prison. Unless he obtains a special permit from the deputy warden he cannot write another letter until five weeks from the date of that letter.

He is allowed to receive magazines and books that are not considered improper by the officials through whose hands they pass. He has received "The Public," "Tomorrow Magazine," "Everybody's," Shaw's "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," the Chicago "Daily Tribune" and the "Record-Herald," and other publications. He cannot receive LUCIFER, the Chicago "Daily Journal" is barred, and I understand the "American" and "Examiner" are classed with the "Journal." LUCIFER is barred because of its criticism of acts of government officials.

He has no employment, and is not allowed to have paper or pencil in his possession.

Some of the letters sent to him have not been delivered, owing to the fact that the writers have criticised the acts of officials or have attempted to "make a hero" of the prisoner. The prison officials feel that they have had nothing to do with sending prisoners there, but that, once there, all are to be considered equally guilty. The letters which are not delivered to him now will be retained and given to him on his release.

Letters from the following named friends were addressed to the prison and received by him: W. C. Cope, Otto Wettstein, Thomas J. Griffiths, George B. Wheeler, Thaddeus B. Wakeman, J. R. Price, M. D.; Mollie A. Price, A. Wangemann, Mattie Day Haworth, Loretta Mann Hammond, Viola Richardson, Ed. W. Chamberlain, Henry Bool, George Harman, Annie E. Parkhurst, Sara Crist Campbell, Emma Greene, C. N. Greene, C. J. Zeitinger, Ella Slater, H. W. Boomer, Leonard D. Abbott, Lily White, Mrs. A. C. Zimmerman, Walter Hurt, Frank Weller, Dr. Leverson, M. Florence Johnson, Mrs. Katherine Buck, Mrs. H. M. Lyndoll, Parker H. Sercombe.

Letters forwarded through LUCIFER office: S. J. Gill, James Myers, Parker H. Sercombe, the Rev. John V. Potts, Mrs. Olive Clifford, Allen Haddock, Ollie M. Steedman, Joshua Harman, Eugene V. Debs, Walter Hurt, Louis F. Post, William Lloyd Garrison.

The foregoing is a list of the letters which father handed to me. It is possible that he did not give me all that he had received. Some that I sent him were not included.

I have received a considerable number of letters which I have not forwarded. Some I wanted to copy before sending, and will send later. Others I did not forward because I felt sure they would not be given to him.

He is very glad to receive letters. In writing please let the penmanship be as clear and distinct as possible. Do not ask questions which require reply, as he cannot answer. Such questions should be sent to this office. All letters received will be acknowledged from time to time in this way. I hope no one will be deterred from writing by the limitations to expression which it is necessary to observe. Now that reading is practically his only occupation letters will probably be more welcome than at any other time in his life.

I believe that this statement of facts is sufficient, and that comment is unnecessary. I have no desire to make an appeal for sympathy. Understanding as I do the feeling of love and admiration for him which so many of the readers of these lines share with me, I will only express the hope that those feelings will be embodied, not in a "suffering sympathy," but in a "working sympathy." Life is sweet to Moses Harman. Liberty of body is dear to him. But the work to which his life is devoted is more to him than life itself.

LILLIAN HARMAN.

NOTABLE ACTION AT THE SUNRISE CLUB.

NEW YORK CITY, March 19, 1906.

At the one hundred and seventy-third dinner of the Sunrise Club, tonight at the Café Boulevard, the opening speaker was Theodore Schroeder, and his subject, "From Sacramental to Secular Marriage." The topic suggested to Horace Traubel, editor of "The Conservator," that it would be timely to enter the club's protest against the persecution and imprisonment of Moses Harman. Accordingly, the chairman, the writer of this, very briefly referred to the facts and the vital issues involved, leaving to Mr. Traubel the task of showing to whom the reference was made and the immediate connection of Mr. Harman's work with the theme of the evening's discussion.

Whereupon, astonishing as it may seem, there were calls of "Who is Moses Harman?" and "What is it all about?" After Mr. Traubel had expressed his conviction that there should not be any man or woman in any progressive society in America under the necessity of asking such questions, the chairman gave a short sketch of Mr. Harman's fight of a quarter of a century for the opportunity to calmly and sanely investigate the relations of the sexes. He outlined the various prosecutions which LUCIFER and its editor have undergone, and gave a succinct description of the administrative process as it has developed in the postoffice during the past few years. Then he called for a rising vote of protest, which was given with practical unanimity.

To put the protest and condemnation on record, Mr. Benjamin Franklin offered the preamble and resolution which follow, and which, stenographically taken by Mrs. Bertha W. Howe, went through with a rush:

"WHEREAS, Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, of the city of Chicago, has been incarcerated in the penitentiary by reason of the fact of the exercise of the right of an American citizen in publishing his views on questions of importance to the present day and generation; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the members of the Sunrise Club of the city of New York, that we, as a liberal organization, protest against the high-handed and autocratic measures of the postal department and other departments of the government, and that we look upon these actions as a menace to the rights of free speech and a free press."

Mrs. Florence Fairview Wieland said that talk was well; but that it needed tangible backing, and led with a banknote. The plate was passed and the sum of $27.15 collected for the defense of LUCIFER and to help in the enlightenment of the people.

Mrs. Marie Halpern suggested that all present affix their signatures to the resolution, and at the close of the meeting Mrs. Grace Potter obtained the list inclosed, about two-fifths of the diners having left before the collector could reach them.

TOMORROW MAGAZINE FOR APRIL.

"The Culturist," of Cincinnati, Walter Hurt, editor, having consolidated with "To-Morrow Magazine," of Chicago, the combination of these two "think" publications has resulted in a most unusual output for April. Besides adding Walter Hurt and Margaret Warren Springer to its regular editorial staff, "To-Morrow" has also acquired Charles A. Sandburg, whose "Views and Reviews" and an illustrated "Appreciation of Jack London" are notable contributions.

"To-Morrow" continues the serials, "The History of Human Marriage," by Lida Parce Robinson; "Rights," by Herman Kneka; "High Finance in Mexico," by Parker H. Sercombe, and "Reservations and Government Aid to Indians," by Dr. Carlos Montezuma. In the "Culturist" section, by Walter Hurt, is published a notable personal letter from Eugene V. Debs, and an "Appreciation of Moses Harman," with frontispiece portrait (Moses Harman and grandchild); "Plutocracy's Murderous Plot," referring to the Colorado miners on trial for murder; "Our Judicial Criminals," etc. The regular comments by the editors will be of unusual interest to thinkers, and contain "The Need of Friends," "The Psychology of Hate," "Human Interest in the Marriage of Others," "The Author-Hero of the New Revolution" (Thomas W. Lawson), "The Cause and Cure," "The Human World Problems." Altogether, the combined "To-Morrow" and "Culturist" for April is a hot shot into the world of thought and will find many an echo in humanity's progress towards democracy among those who take the time to understand. "To-Morrow Magazine," 2238 Calumet avenue, Chicago. One dollar a year, ten cents on all news stands.

A NEW RADICAL MAGAZINE.

"Mother Earth" for March is the initial number of a new magazine, published by Emma Goldman and edited by Emma Goldman and Max Baginski. "The aim of 'Mother Earth,'" we are told, "will be to present to its readers every phase of liberal thought and activity throughout the world, whether in the realm of pure literature, in the whirlpool of revolutionary struggle, or in the somber depths of silent preparation. Recognition is given, however, to the newly awakened desire on the part of vast numbers of those, on the outside of the liberal movement, to know the meaning of the universal unrest in which the whole world shares, but which is directed by scattered groups of workers. 'Mother Earth,' therefore, will be at once informing and educative, and to these ends will enlist the services of the leaders of both thought and action in the various parts of the world."

Among the articles in this number are "The Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation," by Emma Goldman; "Without Government," by Max Baginski; "Comstockery," John R. Coryell; "Don Quixote's Revenge," Turgenieff; "The British Elections and Labor Parties," H. Kelly; "The Mine Owners' Revenge."

"Mother Earth" is a valuable addition to the literature of advanced thought and should receive a hearty welcome. Ten cents a copy, $1 a year. Address Emma Goldman, Box 217, Madison Square Station, New York City.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

AMY ORELL, St. Paul, Kan.—I inclose 25 cents and should like to help circulate the Wakeman Letter. You have my sympathy—also my congratulations.

ANNIE LILLIAN SWEET, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—I am sending you 25 cents to pay for some literature for distribution. I would send you as many dollars if I could. I will willingly distribute anything you may send me.

DR. T. MORRIS, Columbus, Ohio.—I received a copy of LUCIFER No. 1061 and was sorry to see that in this so-called land of the free a man should be placed in prison for nothing. This seems hard, and yet it is one of the means toward an end, and that end will be the destruction of a form of government that will permit such an outrage. I remember having seen a copy of the issue that was confiscated by the postoffice department and there was nothing in it that any clear, clean minded man could find fault with. I feel that it is and has been just a matter of spite work, caused by fanatical prejudice. Find enclosed $1. Send me the worth of one-half of it in Wakeman's Letters and LUCIFER for the rest.

O. CARLTON, 402 Fifth avenue, Seattle, Wash.—I am pleased to be a reader and student of LUCIFER and wish to meet friends of this paper. A LUCIFER club is what is needed for strength. I inclose 50 cents on subscription and 50 cents for sample copies of LUCIFER and copies of the Wakeman Letter.

DR. S. A. WEST, Rock Port, Mo.—The latest copy of LUCIFER has just been read and passed on to a friend. It is good. Will you please mail me another copy? Also send a copy to each of the names on inclosed list. The picture of your father is splendid. By all means keep it in LUCIFER. There is not a reader of the little paper but will welcome this move and be proud of it.

ED HAYES, Brooklyn, N. Y.—For the inclosed dollar kindly send me a photograph of your noble father. He is to be congratulated. At 75 he is at the fore-front of the battle for human freedom. He is alive and the red blood of the struggle flows in his veins; whereas the majority of men of 50 are gaping their lives away in futile, idiotic and stupid pursuit of money, without an idea or thought above the most sordid and mean affairs. You should be proud.

MRS. BERTHA MOORE, Portland, Ore.—Here is to the man who dares to stand for the right; who dares to face prison bars for Freedom's sake. Victory already is waving for him a crown. Hundreds are now reading the LIGHT-BEARER who never read it before, and many are hearing of Harman, America's Grand Old Man, who never before heard of him. American spirit will rouse; Comstock shall not write our epitaph. Enclosed is $1, for which please send me copies of the Wakeman Letter.

E. J. ERNST, Olathe, Kan.—The old Labor Exchange still keeps racing about in my mind. I often feel like starting up the "Progressive Thought" again. I also think of writing for LUCIFER, but keep putting it off. I think short letters, with full names and addresses, would be an interesting feature of the paper.

[We give full name and address when we have reason to believe that such publicity is not objectionable to the writer of the letter. But when in doubt as to the wishes of the writer we think it best to omit the name.]

ADELINE CHAMPNEY, Cleveland, Ohio.—Here are a few stamps, representing the distribution of a few of the Wakeman Letter. The extra copies of LUCIFER No. 1061 came to hand. I am trying to put them in the hands of people who will read them.—I am glad to see that Louis F. Post is on the right side, and his articles are good, too. His influence ought to count for much, for his known disagreement with the ideas advocated by LUCIFER make his championship of Harman and LUCIFER in the fight with the censorship more significant, and should call the attention of people who are not even interested in the sex movement.—Emma Goldman gave two fine lectures in this city last week. One was given in German, the other in English, and she had good audiences both evenings. I hope that some of those "who came to scoff, remained to admire," or at least to ponder. Emma is much broader than I expected to find her. I am delighted with her. The initial number of her magazine, "Mother Earth," promises well. I hope it will have a large circulation. "The Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation" is excellent.—I am anxious to hear from your father, and to know how he bears up under his imprisonment. Of course I know I cannot hear from him personally, but you will let us know all that can be told the public about his health, etc. I feel that he has gone to jail for me. It is my battle he is fighting, and I wish I could do more to help along the work. I shall try to write him often. That is the least I can do to show my appreciation. You say the letters "pass through the hands of the chaplain"; does that mean that the chaplain reads all letters? If so, I think this ought to prove a liberal education for the chaplain. Perhaps he may awaken to a saving sense of his position yet.

[All letters are opened and presumably read before being delivered to prisoners. Friends should avoid criticisms of officials of the government or of the prison, for such references would probably prevent receipt of the letter by the prisoner.]

OUR DESPOTIC POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

"Man and Superman." I am also informed that your department has sustained this action of the Chicago postmaster.

As your decision constitutes a precedent by which the Chicago postmaster, as he has informed me relative to your decisions in similar cases heretofore, will be governed in future cases, will you oblige me with the following information:

1. Has your department decided that LUCIFER, of October 12, is unmailable, and if so, for what cause?

2. Is it because on page ... that paper names and tells where to obtain any unmailable book or books?

3. Is it because of its quotation on page ... from Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman"?

4. If "The Public" in commenting upon this decision of your department were to reproduce the said catalogue of books, or the said quotation from Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman," would the postmaster at Chicago be required to consider this decision of your department in the LUCIFER case as a precedent and accordingly to exclude that issue of "The Public" from the mails?

I make this request as responsible editor of "The Public," for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent, under precedents made by your department, I shall be at liberty, in criticising your decision in the LUCIFER case, to state the facts, without subjecting "The Public" to exclusion from the mails by your department.

To this inquiry we received the following response from the office of the first assistant postmaster general:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, to the postmaster general, in reference to the publication LUCIFER.

In reply to your inquiry you are informed that the postmaster at Chicago was instructed to decline to accept for mailing copies of LUCIFER, of the issue of October 12, 1905, for the reason that such number, which was submitted to the department, contained matter of an obscene character.

As you were advised under date of the 13th ultimo in reference to an earlier issue of LUCIFER, it is not practicable for the department to attempt to point out all the offensive passages upon which the exclusion of the issue from the mails was based, nor can the department undertake to state what would or would not be unmailable, in advance of the matter being actually presented for transmission in the mails.

A reduction of this correspondence also to questions and answers produces the following rather remarkable result:

Question: Does the department exclude the issue of the paper in question because it "names and tells where to obtain any unmailable book or books"?

Answer: "It is not practicable for the department to attempt to point out all the offensive passages upon which the exclusion of the issue from the mails is based."

Question: Is it because of the quotation from Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman"?

Answer: "It is not practicable for the department to attempt to point out all the offensive passages upon which the exclusion of the issue from the mails is based."

Question: If "The Public" were "to reproduce the said catalogue of books, or the said quotation from Bernard Shaw's 'Man and Superman,' would the postmaster at Chicago be required to consider this decision as a precedent and accordingly to exclude that issue of 'The Public' from the mails?"

Answer: The department cannot undertake "to state what would or would not be unmailable in advance of the matter being actually presented for transmission in the mails."

Now, why was it impracticable for the department to state whether or not the exclusion of LUCIFER was because it printed the names and places for procuring certain books? The department was not asked "to point out all offensive passages."

And why was it impracticable for the department to state whether or not the paper in question was excluded because of its quotation from "Man and Superman"? To do this it was not necessary "to point out all offensive passages."

Finally, why couldn't the department undertake to inform us whether the postmaster at Chicago would be required to consider the decision in the LUCIFER case as a precedent? What is the meaning of refusals by the department to state in advance of mailing whether matter excluded from the mail when published by one periodical would be unmailable if published by another? This last question almost answers itself.

II.

We have now proved our assertions. But that there may be no reasonable question of our having done so, let us summarize the assertions and the proof in support of them.

First. We have proved by the foregoing correspondence that any periodical is subject to exclusion from the mails as a purveyor of obscenity, upon the mere arbitrary order of administrative postoffice officials.

Second. We have proved, also by the foregoing correspondence, that exclusion orders are made by the postoffice department ostensibly in accordance with its own rulings as to what constitutes obscenity, and that these rulings, though treated as precedents by postmasters, are kept profoundly secret by the department.

Third. We have proved, by reference to a previous article on this general subject, which is too lengthy to be reproduced here, that the courts hold decisions of the postmaster general in these matters to be absolutely beyond the power of the judiciary to override or restrain, even though he decides without evidence and in manifest bad faith.

Fourth. We have proved by the above correspondence, supplemented now by the best testimony possible, in view of the necessity the department imposes upon us of proving the negative of an issue on which it holds the affirmative and possesses all the affirmative evidence, if there be any, that in practice the department does exclude from the mails for obscenity periodicals which in fact are not obscene. The correspondence proves the first part of this contention—namely, that the department excludes periodicals alleged to contain obscene articles. As to the second and essential part of the contention—namely, that the articles are in fact not obscene—the department refuses to indicate the decisive facts, which are within its own control and in the nature of things cannot be known to outsiders. The several articles indicated above by the Chicago postmaster as cause for exclusion are clearly not obscene. The fact that the department refuses to particularize should raise a reasonable presumption that there is nothing which it can particularize. And in support of this presumption we now positively testify, after reading the excluded papers through, that they in fact contain no word, phrase or thought which can with any show of reason be characterized as obscene.

Fifth. It is not necessary to prove that these circumstances afford dangerous opportunities for corruption in the postoffice department. When the law permits postal officials to exclude from the mails any periodical, arbitrarily in their own discretion, with no appeal to the courts, upon the bare pretense that they contain obscenity, but without any requirement that the alleged obscenity be particularized with sufficient definiteness to permit of a judgment upon the good faith of the exclusion, and when the department passes upon the question not only arbitrarily, but in secret, the opportunities for secret corruption are so enormous that only the corruptible official in the place for corrupting possibilities is necessary to produce a regime of corruption.

We submit, then, that we have established all that in this article we set out to prove. Any periodical may be peremptorily excluded from the mails as a purveyor of obscenity, though it contains nothing obscene, and this upon the mere order of administrative postal officials; exclusion orders are made in alleged accordance with secret precedents, the limitations of which are withheld from publishers seeking to adapt their editorial rights to postal rulings; the courts declare themselves powerless to interfere, even though exclusions be made without evidence and in manifest bad faith; the postoffice department does in fact in this arbitrary manner exclude from the mails as obscene, periodicals which in fact are not obscene. Therefore, as the law now stands, it affords a degree of opportunity for corrupt discrimination and oppression which it is unsafe to repose in any official and which ought to be guarded against by Congress.

III.

The remedy for this fungus growth upon the postal service, a service originally intended only for a national convenience, but now turned into a national police system which operates through irresponsible "administrative process" and from a "star chamber" tribunal, lies with Congress.

Shall the right to mail service in the United States, now become a necessity of the common life, depend upon the caprice, the bigotry or the corruptibility of one man at the head of a Washington department or his subordinate at the head of a bureau?

That question is distinctly raised.

The courts have answered, Yes. What has Congress to say?—The Public (Chicago).

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

MODERN REFORMERS.

The world had reformers, men who were sternly just,
Who smote the thrones of wickedness and laid them in the dust.
Meek, tender men, made mighty by mankind's blood and tears,
Strong men with words like thunderbolts to smite the wrongs of years.

Were all these reformers of a breed too weak to last?
Did all the great wrong-smiters wane and perish in the past?
Did they fight a losing battle? Were they conquered in the fray?
Why are there no reformers fighting in the world today?

Well, 'tis but a thing of labels; the reformers have not gone,
But they're mixing with the people with misleading placards on;
For we placard them fanatics, visionaries, cranks and fools—
Men denounced by clubs and churches, by the journals and the schools.

There are men who wear these placards daily in the market place,
Heroes of an ancient lineage, kings and saviors of the race;
But we never see their greatness through life's trivial events,
But our children's sons will read it on their granite monuments.

WOMAN AND THE BALLOT.

Rejected by the Chicago Record-Herald.

To the Editor:

After reading in the "Record-Herald" of March 27 the objections of the Illinois Association Opposed to the Extension of Suffrage to Women, submitted in their protest to the new charter convention against the granting of municipal suffrage to women in Chicago, I am moved to make some comment upon what appears to me to be their most ridiculous and contradictory position. In the name of common sense what excuse can they offer for the existence of their association if their own statements are true that "in the twenty-two states where school suffrage is extended to women the average vote, except in Massachusetts, has been less than 4 per cent, and that in many states the right has been almost entirely neglected, whole townships and even counties failing to register a single woman voter." Also that "in Chicago the number of women voting has dropped from about 80 per cent of the 29,815 registered in 1894, the year of the first exercise of the ballot by women, to about 1,000."

This is equivalent to saying that women do not want the ballot, and while we question the authority of the Illinois Association Opposed to the Extension of Suffrage to Women to make such a positive statement, we wonder at their frequent hysterical agitation of the subject, for if granting school suffrage to women has not met with enthusiastic response, is it likely that granting municipal suffrage to them will stir up any greater activity among them?

The logical reasoner would answer in the negative and would therefore consider that the question of woman's suffrage was dying a quiet and natural death, and that an association of "anti-suffragists" was premature to say the least, and like everything else of that nature is an evidence of an unhealthy and morbid condition of mind, which those affected by it ought to get themselves rid of.

Further commenting upon their objections, as to the "lack of success on the administrative side in women as members of school boards," it would appear that the Illinois association in this criticism pays an unintentional compliment to the women they are opposing, in view of the fact that they virtually acknowledge they expect more of women in the short time they have been serving as members of school boards than they have ever had accomplished by men in all the long years of unrestricted time and opportunity in these same positions. Is it not possible that women, given the same time and opportunity in which to qualify themselves that men have had, may fulfill the expectations of even their opponents? At any rate such criticism from them at this early stage of women's efforts upon school boards is unjust and ill-timed, especially when it is taken into consideration that the women on the school boards find themselves face to face with most difficult situations that men have been and are responsible for, and in nearly every instance where the women have tried to administer reforms they have been met with the subtle political schemes or the out and out determined opposition of men, both of which were intended to defeat the proposed reforms and generally succeeded in doing so.

This result should not be charged up to any lack of administrative ability in women, but rather to their lack of comprehension of the subtlety and general perversity of men. Referring to their statement that "in Kansas, where they have municipal suffrage for women, the temperance situation has not been improved," we could wish that the Illinois association had expressed itself more definitely as to why (in their estimation) "the temperance situation had not been improved," and what percentage of the women of Kansas exercised their right of municipal suffrage.

They have left the public to question in their own minds if it is not quite possible that the women of Kansas, like themselves, are anti-suffragists and therefore did not exercise their right of suffrage by means of which they could have accomplished any necessary temperance reform. The women who did vote might well criticise the anti-suffragists for not coming to assist them in whatever effort they made in the line of temperance reform instead of standing afar off and crying "failure" at them.

This argument is submitted in case the women of Kansas generally did not take advantage of their right to municipal suffrage, and on the other hand if they did vote then our good sisters of the Illinois association will have to "back water" on their statement that women do not want the ballot or are indifferent to it. Referring to the exercise of suffrage by the women in "red light" districts of Chicago the anti-suffragist association says: "It is estimated that there are in this city not far from 15,000 women of openly immoral life, who are known to the police and more or less under their protection or persecution, as the case may be, all of whom must be enfranchised if municipal suffrage is given to women." This seems to be about the weakest argument the anti-suffragists could advance. It seems never to occur to them that the women of the "red light" districts are there because men who live "openly immoral lives" and still have the privilege of the ballot require the services of that class of women, and worse yet, those men by the exercise of the ballot have helped to establish such economic conditions as to make it impossible for those women to gain even a living existence in any other way.

Away with such cant and rot, and down with the double standard for men and women.

Give women the ballot and let the women of the "red light" districts have a voice in municipal affairs and see if they will not be as glad as any one to help bring about the possibility for better conditions in their own lives as well as to throw off the control of grafters and corrupt politicians generally. At any rate let us not pass judgment upon them until the experiment has been tried.

ANOTHER JUDICIAL MURDER THREATENED.

On March 26 Mr. Hugh O. Pentecost spoke at Lyric Hall, New York, on "The Arrest of Moyer and Haywood." A condensed report of his lecture follows:

On December 30, 1905, ex-Governor Steunenberg, of Idaho, was assassinated in a most brutal and cowardly manner. Some time afterward a man by the name of Harry Orchard was arrested, charged with this murder, or with complicity in the murder, and another man by the name of Steve Adams has since been arrested. This Harry Orchard confessed that he had killed ex-Governor Steunenberg, and that he had been instigated to the crime by Charles Moyer and Mr. Haywood, respectively the president and secretary of the Western Federation of Miners, and that a Mr. Pettibone and a Mr. St. John, officials of the Western Federation of Miners or members of its board of directors, had formed a conspiracy with the purpose of killing Mr. Steunenberg, and that in compliance with that plot Orchard and Adams had carried out the will of the Western Federation of Miners as expressed through their principal officials.

Acting upon these confessions, the governor of Idaho, by a secret arrangement with the governor of Colorado, secured signed and sealed extradition papers, and Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone were arrested in Denver, in the night time, dragged from their homes, denied the right of counsel and of a writ of habeas corpus, put upon a railroad train which made no stops at stations, and rushed a distance of seven or eight hundred miles to Idaho.

They were arrested and transported to Idaho in violation of the laws of the land. It is customary and legal, if a man charged with a crime committed in one state is to be arrested in another state, that he shall be arrested and held to await the action of the governor of that other state, and have the right of suing out a writ of habeas corpus upon which he would be taken before the court to have the question determined as to whether or not he was legally detained. The poorest, meanest criminal in the land has the right to go before a high court on a writ of habeas corpus and have that question determined, because this writ is the foundation of all the liberties supposed to be enjoyed by English-speaking peoples. So that when Moyer and Haywood were dragged from Denver and rushed to Idaho, under extradition papers that were signed before they were arrested, they were deprived of this right to the writ of habeas corpus, and the act was a gross and dangerous violation of the fundamental laws of the United States.

The arrest of these men grew out of the troubles between the miners and the mine owners in Colorado and Idaho in 1903 and 1904. These troubles arose in this way: In 1902, a new constitution was adopted in Colorado, and as the result of many years of strenuous agitation on the part of the working people a clause was inserted in the constitution making it mandatory upon the legislature at its next session to pass an eight-hour law, controlling all persons operating in the mining district and certain other occupations. An eight-hour law had previously been passed by the legislature, but had been held unconstitutional by the courts that were owned by the mine owners. So to remedy this defect, provision was made for it in the new constitution. But the legislature, with the impudence of the class which owned it, refused to pass such a law. At this point the Western Federation of Miners went on strike.

That strike was broken by the power of the mine owners. How? By immediately calling into the strike region troops, against the protest of the sheriffs of the counties affected, who told the governor that there was no disorder and no necessity for troops. But the governor sent the troops, suspended the operation of habeas corpus, contrary to law, declared all that section of the country under military rule, contrary to law, and then began such a state of oppression and persecution as never before was seen in this country. Bull-pens, old cattle pens were used as jails, and everybody who would not submit to the official force controlled by the mine owners was thrown into them. Mr. Moyer was arrested and held for a long time without any charge against him. Other labor leaders and some of the miners were given this option: You will go into our mines and work as scabs, leave this state, or be shot. Men, women and children were arrested and marched across the mountains in the snow, or put on railroad trains and sent out of the state—every crime that you could imagine in a disturbed state of society was committed by the governor, by his adjutant-general, and by the troops. They simply overthrew the constituted authorities. That was the way this strike was broken.

After all this warfare and trouble, the union came out sound and strong, largely through the fidelity of Moyer, Haywood, Pettibone, St. John and men of that class. They were bold, calm, brave, peaceful representatives of labor, and while they were not strong enough to fight the powers that were against them, they were strong enough to hold the union together, and it is as strong to-day as it ever was.

That is the reason, possibly, that Orchard and Adams have made this confession. Mind you, the assassination of ex-Governor Steunenberg occurred in Idaho. Those men who are now charged with complicity in that murder lived in Denver. But it is necessary in some way to break up that union, and if these men should be imprisoned for life or hanged, that will get out of the way some of the strongest and best men that the labor movement in this country has ever produced. The evidence against them is the confession of this man Orchard, who has not only confessed that he killed Steunenberg, but that altogether he has murdered thirty men. It is said that he himself was in the employ of the mine owners and that he has been a Pinkerton spy and detective, and by his own confession he is thirty times a murderer. That is the man that accuses these people, so that it is not impossible to imagine that Orchard and Adams have made these confessions to suit the purposes of the mine owners.

I will tell you why. During the strike there were three startling crimes committed. One of them was the pulling out of some spikes which held the rails of a railroad track in place, apparently for the purpose of wrecking a train. Curiously enough, the engineer of the next train that came along had a suspicion that something was wrong, and stopped his train! It is natural to suppose that he was told. A number of union men were arrested and charged with pulling the spikes, because a man by the name of McKinney and another man confessed to having pulled the spikes at the instigation of the officers of the union—just such a case as this. On the trial, under cross-examination, both these accusers confessed that they were lying. McKinney himself said that he had been told by a representative of the mine owners that if he would lay that charge to the officers of the union, they would give him a thousand dollars in cash, immunity from punishment and transportation for himself and family to any part of the world that he wanted to go. Carroll D. Wright reports that to the president; it is not my story. So there is one case where the mine owners hired men to make exactly this kind of a charge against the officers of the union. If they would do that in one instance, is there any reason to believe that they would not in another? There were two other occasions of the same nature, and in all three instances the labor men were acquitted.

Do you say it is inconceivable that great and reputable financiers could be guilty of putting up such a plot as the accusing of Moyer and Haywood and the others of the crime of murder? Standard Oil is a large owner in those mines. J. P. Morgan, George Gould, Meyer Guggenheimer and western capitalists, they are behind the capitalist end of this controversy. We know that in one case I have already detailed to you they did hire men to make accusations against innocent men, charge them with a crime that would have sent them to the gallows. And anybody that will read the history and growth and development of the Standard Oil Company will not have much difficulty in believing that they would be guilty of anything whatever to accomplish their purpose.

Now, mind you, I do not pass judgment. I am talking about probabilities. I ask you what motive these splendid men (for they really are great men, high-minded, peace-loving men), what motive would they have to assassinate ex-Governor Steunenberg? The troubles were all over. Steunenberg was no longer governor of the state. What motive could they have had for this savage, cowardly, contemptible assassination? Just hare, bald revenge for something that was past and gone? It is inconceivable! On the other hand, what motive have the mine owners for arresting these men? The motive to break up the union, for until the union is broken up they cannot reduce the miners to abject submission. So I say, that these men are guilty is inconcelvable. It would be not only an act of insanity, but an act of stupidity.

Would any sane person believe the word of a man who says that he has committed thirty murders, and of another man who is, to say the least, a cur, for a man who will commit a crime with another man and then "peach," is unworthy of belief. Would you take the word of these two men against the word of these labor leaders, whose characters are stainless and whose lives are known and read of all men?

One of the interesting things about this case is that it very closely parallels something that happened in this country in 1886 and 1887. In 1886 there was a strong agitation, centering in Chicago, for an eight-hour day. In the course of this agitation a meeting was held in Haymarket square. The meeting was a peaceable one, and the people were dispersing at its close—there were only three or four hundred left in the square—when a squad of policemen came running from the Desplaines street station for the purpose of dispersing them with their clubs. Then somebody in an alley near by threw a bomb and it exploded and killed one policeman and wounded a number of others. Then the policemen began firing into the crowd and the crowd began firing back and there was a riot in which seven policemen and four or five working people were killed and twenty or thirty wounded.

That circumstance set this country on fire, and there was a crusade against the Chicago anarchists, as they were called. The leaders of the agitation, Spies, Parsons, Engel, Lingg, Schwab, Fielding, Fischer, were arrested. If my memory serves me, Fielding was at the meeting, but aside from him, I think none of them was on the scene. Those men were arrested, tried and convicted, and on the 11th of November, 1887, Spies, Parsons, Engel and Fischer were hanged. Louis Lingg would have been hanged if he had not put an explosive in his mouth and killed himself, and Schwab and Fielding were sent to prison. Though these men had nothing to do with thruwing the bomb (nobody to this day knows who threw the bomb), they were convicted upon extracts from their speeches and from the paper which they published, upon the theory that they had in a general way inflamed the minds of the people, with the result that this bomb was thrown. They were prejudged by the authorities and the public, and there was no more chance for them than there was for a witch in the old days.

Here is the same kind of a situation—a parallel, but a parallel with a difference. That was eighteen and one-half years ago. Do you tell me it is useless to use what power we have for the awakening of the people and for their freedom from the curse of poverty? Oh, no, it is not useless! In twenty short years see what has happened. Then every newspaper in the United States was full of matter against the Chicago anarchists. Now have you seen anything about the arrest of these men in the papers? There is a great conspiracy of silence. Instead of bruiting their arrest and threatened hanging abroad, they are trying to conceal the whole thing, and it was not until yesterday evening that the "Evening Journal" had a word to say about it. The "Journal" has heard from organized labor, and at last has spoken! Then the citizens of the United States, labor unions and all the other working people, were in a state of mind where nothing could be said to them on the subject of the anarchists. They were crazy.

There is no such sentiment in this country against Moyer, Haywood, Pettibone and St. John, though the crime committed was worse than the crime that was alleged to have been committed in 1886. On the contrary, the sentiment is the other way. When the Chicago anarchists were hanged, so far as I know (and I want to be corrected if I am wrong), I was the only public man in the United States that protested from the platform against the murder. [A voice: Mr. George Cumming spoke in protest from a platform in San Francisco, guarded by a cordon of police.] I am glad to hear it. At that time I was pastor of a Congregational Church in Newark. What business I had as a minister to know anything about it, I don't know, but in some way I did know about it, and it preyed upon me so that I nearly went into nervous prostration. But after I made my protest, you may know that my connection with that church was severed as soon as they could sever it!

Now, how different! A thousand public men, better known than I was then, or than I am now, are shouting in denunciation. An article by Eugene V. Debs, which you will find in the labor papers, will show you the language which an intelligent man dares to use in connection with the arrest of these men. In 1886-7 there was not a protest meeting held, except by a few foreigners who could scarcely speak the English language. Now, all over the United States, wherever there is a labor sentiment, protest meetings are being held, and they are being attended by thousands of people, and the governor of Idaho has heard from it, too. Then, nobody sent the anarchists any money. The lawyer appointed by the court to defend them spent his time and labor for nothing, and his practice was ruined. Now, Moyer and Haywood and the others can have a million dollars for their defense, if they want it!

The whole working population is rising up and saying to the capitalists, "Beware! Don't do that again!" Understand me: If these men are guilty, and fairly tried and fairly convicted, on credible evidence, by an impartial jury, in an impartial court, and hanged, nobody has the slightest reason to find any fault. They knew what the laws of this country were, and if they chose to be mixed up in a sneaking, cowardly assassination like that, it would be unworthy of anybody to complain.

But on the other hand, if they are not guilty, if they are going to be tried unfairly, with a packed jury, and without any evidence at all, believe me, the class that hangs them in that way will have to pay the price to the very last farthing.

TREADING RUSSIAN PATHS.

Moses Harman is in prison again. On the afternoon of the 26th of February he was taken to Cook county jail, and the next day transferred to Joliet penitentiary to serve a year's sentence, for what? Nothing, absolutely nothing.

What Mr. Harman printed we have forgotten. We read it at the time—and forgot it. If it had been anything very much discolored we would have remembered it. We presume there is not one of the readers of LUCIFER who can, off-hand, tell what he said that has caused his imprisonment. One thing we do remember, and that is that there was nothing in the matter printed which deserved more punishment than a passing criticism from those who disagreed with him, and who cared for such matter sufficiently to take the trouble to correct any errors the editor might have made.

Followed as this prosecution has been by a censorship of his paper by the postoffice officials of Chicago, this imprisonment is the starting point of a despotism so odious, so mean, so bigoted, so dangerous to the rights of the citizens of this country, that every man should protest to the utmost against it, and protest in quarters where it will do good. Theodore Roosevelt cannot afford to keep this old man in prison for a year. The Republican party cannot afford to do it. And, most emphatic of all, the American people cannot afford to do this great crime, for they will be keeping themselves in prison. American principles are walled in with this old man; everybody outside of his jail is a slave. Falling over each other in their eagerness to worship wealth; trending each other down in their mad desire to imitate the plutocrats, the American people have lost sight of the fundamental principles of this republic, and have fallen into the coma of death. Their indifference to crimes committed by their representatives encourages the accidents of office who live on the people to make their rule more and more strict, and to take one by one the rights so hardly won from George the Third. It was said a few years ago that the railroads itched for an empire; that desire seems now to have been transferred to the officeholders and acquiesced in by the people. The insolence of our jacks-in-office is only less surprising than the subservience of the people.—Truth Seeker (New York).

ANOTHER COMSTOCK CONVICTION.

Bernarr Macfadden, editor and publisher of "Physical Culture," one of the few really beneficial magazines published in this country, was found guilty on March 21 of the charge of exposing to the public improper pictures. It is hardly necessary to say that the charge was preferred by Anthony Comstock, for not one other man in a thousand would feel his base nature aroused to "unholy passion" by the pictures of splendid physical manhood and womanhood which Macfadden displayed as advertisements of the physical culture show which he gave in New York last October.

Comstock's agent, Bamberger, seized 800 of the posters and exhibited a half-dozen of them in court as evidence against Macfadden. The exhibits were pictures of finely formed men and women in tights and were no more immodest than the pictures displayed in dozens of newspapers and magazines as advertisements of union suits. They did not approach in suggestiveness the posters which are used throughout the country to advertise spectacular plays and burlesques. Yet Justice McKean and Justice Deuel said they considered the pictures extremely indecent and harmful to public morals. The third magistrate, Justice Zeller, dissented from their opinion and said he could see nothing indecent in the pictures.

Gomer Reiss, business manager for Macfadden, was a co-defendant in the case. Justice Deuel announced that the defendants were found guilty by a divided bench and that sentence would be suspended.

Comstock became quite noisy in his denunciation of Macfadden and was working himself up to a high pitch of excitement, when Justice Zeller interrupted him and said:

"Your opinions differ from mine, Mr. Comstock, but I think my standard of decency is quite as high as your own."

CIVILIZATION HAS BEEN SAVED.

ROCKFORD, ILL., March 25, 1906.

Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, Madison Square, New York.

REVEREND DEAR SIR: It is with much regret that I read a newspaper report of your expression of dissatisfaction with the Roosevelt administration. What are a few More men and women more or less to us?

There are so many admirable factors to consider in the operations of Mr. Roosevelt's administration that its friends should not embarrass it by any sort of criticism at all. It is a representative administration. Even though it fall short of our expectations here and there, it really represents the dominant sentiment of the country. We are a conservative people and we naturally prefer that haste be eschewed, hence we do not cavil at an administration for lack of performances, so long as its promises are in keeping with the nobility of character which we so greatly and justly admire in our president.

And though, as yet, the administration has achieved but little, we must not lose sight of the fact of what it has indeed accomplished.

Were there no other accomplished fact to the credit of Mr. Roosevelt's administration (and at the present moment I recall no other) than that under his regime one of the most notable malefactors this country has ever produced has been safely stowed away in a penitentiary, under the sentence of a federal court, we should count that as a sufficient gain, and it were only justice that we forgive any shortcomings in other departments of administration.

When the history of the nations shall have been written, the one bright spot in the records of this age and time will be the condign punishment which was visited upon Moses Harman. That aged scoundrel (he is 76, and ought to know better) has been publishing a little paper called LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER. The publication is devoted to a discussion of human stirpiculture. Think of it! No wonder that our pure-minded postal department and our virtuous federal court held his publication to be obscene. Could anything be more obscene than any reference to the sex operations involved in the borning of human offspring? This lecherous Lothario of 76 is now safely behind prison bars and civilization has been saved from its deadliest peril. All honor to our noble president that under his exalted guidance our nation has thus declared itself for purity. You and I, reverend sir, who admire purity above all our other virtues, should give to Mr. Roosevelt the full meed of praise that is due him for his wise selection of postoffice officials, not only because of their efficiency in collecting campaign contributions that enabled us to escape the hideous peril of a change of administration, but because of their watchful guardianship of the morals of the people.

With all due respect, very truly,
HERMAN KUEHN.

LUCIFER'S CO-OPERATOR IN FRANCE.

One of the most valued of LUCIFER'S exchanges is its valiant co-laborer "Régénération," founded by Paul Robin in August, 1896, as the organ de la Ligue de la Régénération Humaine (The League for the Regeneration of Humanity). It is published monthly at 27 Rue de la Duee, Paris XXe, France; price, postage paid, 50 cents a year. For those who read French this interesting little paper is recommended without reservation as one of the ablest publications in existence devoted to the science of eugenics, or race improvement.

"Régénération" has an extensive circulation and it has established many branch leagues in other European countries for the study of prenatal culture and rational parentage. From the March issue we quote the following, translating it into English:

"It has been suggested that a Regeneration group might be formed in the United States. We would be pleased to have our American subscribers and readers give us at once their opinions and let us know if they can form a center for the propaganda in America. Notices will be given in 'Régénération' of the replies received and the decision taken.

"Meanwhile the atrocious sentence passed upon our valiant and venerable friend, Moses Harman, condemning him to imprisonment for one year at hard labor, has been confirmed and a rehearing of his case refused by the Federal Court of Appeals, to the great delight of the puritanic band of Comstock & Co., and to the famous Roosevelt. The intrepid warrior (for the right to be well born) must undergo his punishment in the country already made illustrious in 1887 by 'the Chicago martyrs' who were recognized by the governor (Altgeld) as victims of a police conspiracy. This time it is a conspiracy of hypocrites.

"We sent a communication on this case more than a month ago to many of the most 'advanced' journals in France—this infamy committed beyond the Atlantic in the 'classic land of liberty.' The communication was never published."

KNOX'S CRITICISM FITS POSTAL DESPOTISM

Former United States Attorney-General Knox, in an address to the United States Senate on March 28, criticised the Hepburn railroad rate bill as unconstitutional because, among other reasons, "it deprives the carrier of its right to a judicial investigation, by due process of law."

"It is not possible," he said, "to find in the bill a single word conferring jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit of any party aggrieved by any order of the commission."

Senator KNOX is an excellent authority on constitutional law and if his criticism of the Hepburn bill is correct the same criticism may be made of the power of the postoffice department to condemn and confiscate an entire issue of a newspaper or any other publication without the publisher having any redress. Several issues of LUCIFER were confiscated in this manner.

The following extract from Senator KNOX'S speech, without the change of a word or a syllable, will apply to the confiscation of LUCIFER by an arbitrary act of the postoffice department as well as it applies to the Hepburn bill:

"Mr. President, men of our inheritances repel summary and arbitrary methods, and none the less if these proceed from acknowledged power, accompanied by the mere empty professions and forms of law. Judicial review of every substantial controversy affecting persons and property is a right. This right was painfully won from tyrannies of the past, and is established now beyond the power of any present tyrannies to destroy, in whatever guise they may come, and even if masquerading in the name of the people. This right is to have the rights of the parties in every controversy determined by the courts."

The art of government is the organization of idolatry.—G. B. Shaw.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years and 6 months old. He has served 45 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

ANOTHER VISIT TO THE IMPRISONED EDITOR.

George Harman, son of the editor, and George O'Brien went to Joliet on Thursday, April 5, and found the prisoner in good spirits and in somewhat improved health, though thinner in flesh than when seen the week before. He is to be assigned to a cell alone, and though he is not allowed to have writing materials nor the food to which he is accustomed, there seems to be a disposition to treat him as well as the rules of the institution will permit.

He is very glad to receive letters from friends and would like to answer them if it were possible for him to do so. Following are the names of friends from whom he has received letters since last report:

J. William Lloyd, J. H. E. Witte, Annie E. Parkhurst, I. Candy, A. Wangemann, Thomas J. Griffiths, Ada M. Morley, Flora Fox, Lois Waisbrooker, Thirza Rathbun, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Fox, Lois Waisbrooker, Thirza Rathbun, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph and Hilda Heller, D. R. Bryan, John P. Paulsen, Henry C. and Fannie Hansen, George B. Wheeler, Hulda L. P. Loomis, Dr. G. A. Willett, Mattie Day Haworth, Louis Berger, James P. Morton, Jr., and Dr. Robert Greer.

MOSES HARMAN: AN ANALYSIS AND AN APPRECIATION.

This is a plea to the public for a better understanding of the most misunderstood and misrepresented man of his time. It is an appeal to popular opinion for justice and vindication for the misjudged and maligned.

His enemies have said Moses Harman is immoral. Why he should have enemies I do not understand, as I never knew him to harm any by act or speech, and always his words are filled with gentleness and charity and ever he outreaches to his brother a hospitable hand.

Why they should say he is immoral is quite as much a mystery. Never have I heard from him, in speech or type, an unclean utterance. Per contra, he pleads insistently for a greater purity in our social relations and strives incessantly to make such improvement more easily possible.

In every generation has appeared some lofty soul, thinking in advance of his age, whose lips could not be smitten to silence. These brave ones, for the good of their brothers, pass into prison and tread Golgotha in patient pain, bearing the cross of the world's brutal curses. No ingratitude can influence them, no discouragement can make them to despair.

These are the immoral ones.

To the orthodox, all heterodoxy is highly immoral. It matters not if the heresy be religious, social or scientific. To the orthodox view, that is necessarily vicious which opposes the established order, which contradicts convention, which antagonizes the accustomed, which would improve by innovation.

Galileo was immoral, so he was imprisoned and tortured; yet the world moves, and with it the mind of man. Bruno was immoral, and was given as a "burnt offering" to a loving God; yet his name is written in luminous letters on every starry expanse of the empyrean. Ingersoll was immoral, and I remember well the time when, a child, as a result of my rigidly orthodox training, I regarded him with abhorrence such as Abaddon might inspire; yet few today are so ignorant as to refuse their reverence to the memory of this great and gentle man. Moses Harman, also, is immoral; yet the impartial years may be relied upon to yield to him an ample victory and abundant vindication.

These, my friends, be the immoral ones. Is not Moses Harman in goodly company?

In my opinion, the two greatest apostles of advancement this generation has known are Robert G. Ingersoll and Moses Harman. Ingersoll made Freethought respectable. What Ingersoll did for Freedom of Thought, Harman is doing for Freedom of Sex. But of the two tasks, Harman's is the greater. Sex superstition is much more stubborn than simple religious superstition. It is grounded in an intensified ignorance. And not only is it anchored by every tentacle of religious superstition, but it possesses a special tenacity of its own. It is the last superstition which man leaves off. Humankind clings to it more fatuously than the Christian clings to the cross. It is the Rock of Ages of the average mind.

Harman's only offense is that he is a heretic. And, pray, what may a heretic be? A heretic is one who perceives an error earlier than most other men and courageously endeavors to correct it. Invariably he suffers at the hands of Ignorance. He finds Truth a thing most difficult to teach. When rarely fortunate, hard work and few honors are his reward; otherwise, persecution and the prison. Yet Harman has succeeded to a surprising extent in popularizing a despised doctrine.

Harman has probably the largest, and certainly the most devoted, personal following of any liberal leader. This fact is not due to his doctrines, for among his most loyal friends are not a few persons who do not accept his sociological theories. He is an accurate thinker and an able writer, but this does not sufficiently account for his influence. The possible explanation is to be found in his superb sincerity and a personal character as white as his hair.

The science of sex, the most neglected of all studies, is fundamental to all that is vitally related to the welfare of human society. For proclaiming these tremendous truths, Harman has been persistently persecuted and repeatedly imprisoned. Yet has he gone to prison with the tread of a prince, and therein worn his chains grandly to the emancipation of others.

It is over the bodies of the world's martyrs that mankind advances to its emancipation. Massive jails are not the mausoleums of Liberty, but are the stepping stones upon which humanity will leap into the light of a fuller freedom.

Every prison preaches the lesson of liberty.

Ever upon the ruins of the world's bastiles has the fabric of freedom been builded.

Harman's tormentor, the postal inquisitor, is an anachronism in this somewhat enlightened age. His presence in the present is as incongruous as would be a hideous idol set up in the heart of a civilized capital. His methods are not compatible with the spirit of modernity; they are demoralizing to democratic thought. He is an ugly ulcer on the limping limb of Progress—a foul suppuration on the body social. He is a disease, a disgrace, and a danger.

"This, too, shall pass away."

The difference between Comstock and Harman is that one searches for obscenity and the other searches for truth. And each finds that which he seeks. But not in LUCIFER, I think, does Comstock find the obscenity, but in his own pitifully perverted mind. Nothing in Nature can be obscene unless it be considered with obscene intent. There is no possible obscenity in a philosophical discussion of the more important phases of the sex question.

Harman is a practical philosopher who applies his own theories. The self-mastery he exhibits under extraordinarily trying conditions is altogether admirable. He has been vindictively attacked and viciously insulted in public assemblage, but always has he remained sublimely serene; his fine forbearance and calm dignity of manner bring confusion to his foes. On one such occasion, when the attack was particularly atrocious, he simply said, "The brother has answered himself." No wealth of words could have been more effective.

It is the fate of nearly every great soul to feel the pangs of crucifixion. Moses Harman has not suffered at the stake nor literally been "nailed to the cross," but he has been crucified by all the pitiless persecution known to modern inquisitorial methods. It is an ironical commentary upon our vaunted civilization that Harman should be imprisoned for seeking to bestow the highest benefit upon his fellows; for imparting the vitally important—aye, imperative—truths regarding the sex question.

So this gentle-mannered and white-maned old lion of Liberalism has again been deprived of his freedom and made to don the stripes.

Oh, blind—blind! How long will a mad world sacrifice its saviors and build monuments to its murderers?

His contemporaries have made of Moses Harman a martyr.

History will write him a hero.—Walter Hurt, in Tomorrow.

THE POSTOFFICE VS. FREE SPEECH.

Our readers will remember that last summer the "Woman's Journal" had several editorials criticizing the action of the postoffice in repeatedly refusing the use of the mails to a Chicago paper called LUCIFER, on the ground that some article contained in it was indecent. In a number of cases these articles seemed to us not to be indecent in any fair sense of the word. An editorial on this subject in the "Woman's Journal" was allowed to pass by the Boston postoffice as unobjectionable, but when it was copied into LUCIFER, that issue of LUCIFER was promptly suppressed by the Chicago postoffice, on the ground that our editorial was indecent; and, on appeal to the higher postal authorities at Washington, this decision of the Chicago postoffice was sustained.

The editorial in question has since been submitted to Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Jane Addams and other persons of good repute, including a number of clergymen, all of whom say that they cannot see the slightest impropriety in it. It contained no discussion of sociological questions whatever, but was simply a criticism of the methods of the postoffice.

Mr. Louis F. Post, editor of the Chicago "Public," is a staunch advocate of free discussion. He took the matter up, and has had a prolonged correspondence with the postal authorities of Washington, trying to get them to tell him just what passages they regard as indecent in the article from the "Woman's Journal," which he calls "one of the purest and most reputable publications in the United States." The postal officials give evasive answers and when he presses for more definite information, they refer him to their former evasive letter. . . .

Meanwhile, Moses Harman, the aged editor of LUCIFER, has been sentenced to a year's hard labor in the penitentiary for publishing two communications which are offensive to good taste, but which seem to the present writer, and to a number of other persons not in sympathy with LUCIFER'S opinions, not to merit so severe a punishment. If the case called for a legal penalty at all, which is doubtful, it ought not to have gone beyond a moderate fine; and the editor of LUCIFER has already been subjected to pecuniary loss equal to a very heavy fine, by the suppression of seven issues of his paper by the postoffice in seven months—many of them for articles which, like the one copied from the "Woman's Journal," were not obscene literature in any fair sense of the term.

There seems to be a deliberate purpose to crush LUCIFER out of existence if possible. This suspicion is confirmed by the fact that the sentence pronounced against Mr. Harman was not carried out for some weeks, and it was intimated to his friends that if he would cease publishing his paper and give up advocating his heretical views on the woman question the sentence never would be executed. Mr. Harman refused to surrender his principles, courageously preferring to go to prison; and he is now in the penitentiary.

No doubt the postal authorities think they are doing the community a service in trying to suppress a paper that advocates objectionable doctrines. We agree that some of LUCIFER'S doctrines are highly objectionable; but it is a thousand times more objectionable that the right of free discussion should be denied to any opinions, however erroneous.

Those of our readers who would like to sign a petition for Mr. Harman's pardon, and those willing to work for a change in the present law, which allows the postoffice to suppress anything it chooses, without the possibility of appeal or redress, are invited to communicate with Dr. E. B. Foote, of the Free Speech League, 120 Lexington avenue, New York City.

Observe that these are two distinct questions. Some persons who do not sympathize with Mr. Harman may nevertheless disapprove of the arbitrary and unlimited powers now given to the postoffice, and may wish to work for a change in the general law.—A. S. B., in Woman's Journal.

DON'T WHINE.

I am wondering why people shed tears over Mr. Harman's conviction and imprisonment for doing what gave him pleasure to do. Do they not realize that they make his life harder to bear and really are adding to whatever discomforts he may have in his imprisonment?

I do not imagine he suffers very much except disappointment in not being able to live at home and print his paper for self-expression.

But so far as his propaganda is concerned, he is doing more by being imprisoned and calmly and persistently reiterating his views than were he to meet no opposition and the authorities simply laughed at him.

He is an intelligent man and knew well enough that the cohorts of repression, of tyranny, of prudery—aye, of positive hypocrisy—would not stand for the theories he wrote and printed.

He went into the thing with his eyes open.

He'd had experience before that told him emphatically that he was taking big chances in going up against the unspeakable Comstock, Comstockery, the hypocritical and dastardly government that never did and never can, at the risk of its own life, stand for freedom in speech, press and non-invasive individual conduct, especially in the realm of sex relations.

He got what he certainly had a right to expect, and I firmly believe he'll be the last one to whine over the results.

And I suspect that he does not favor the ministerial whine and holy horror attitude which some of his friends assume.

Who goes into a fight can't certainly expect to come out of it without a slug in the lug.

And if the knockout blow is given, why, this is part of the game, and gamely it ought to be taken.

I asked Adolph Fischer, one of the prisoners resulting from the Haymarket affair, while in prison, what he thought of the outlook. "Oh, I guess they'll hang us," he replied. "Well, we'll be worth more to the cause killed this way than to live."

This was the truly philosophical attitude.

We've only one death to die, so far as any of us know, and is it not better to die for a good cause than to go out into the darkness leaving no light behind?

Moses Harman is still a beacon light.

The fools who believe they are pulling him down are simply adding fuel to the flames that guide the troubled mariners safely into port.

Don't whine. You give the enemy too much satisfaction. Hopefully,

JOSEPH A. LABADIE.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

N. J. B. HAILEY, Eveleth, Minn.—I have received three copies of LUCIFER. Having the "Constitution of the United States of America" in my possession, I am grieved to learn that a citizen of this great nation should be so cruelly imprisoned to gratify the wishes of a lot of prudes. May heaven's richest blessing rest upon your dear old father while in prison, and may God in love cheer and comfort your hearts. I herewith send you $1 so that my name may be entered on your list of subscribers; let the same begin with next issue.

L. E. HUGGINS, Omaha, Neb.—Your father will reach more minds from Joliet than from Chicago. We know that attempted suppression has always in the end brought truth into more prominence. It surprises me that Church and State will persist in such measures when they cannot help seeing the tendency of former efforts. I presume it is because they have always kicked out their brainy men. I cannot think that LUCIFER and its friends have anything to fear. The people are demanding liberty, "a word without which all other words are in vain," and they will eventually secure it.

AGNES BENHAM, South Australia.—I am saddened by the thought of your incarceration; to me it seems terrible, but I do not doubt you are upheld by more than human strength. The realization of your oneness with all those noble saviors of humanity who in times past have bled and suffered, tortured by those "who know not what they do," will be your comforting thought in times of deepest gloom. The sacred grain of truth that your persecutors think they are obliterating by trampling on you, they are only treading deeper in the minds of men. It will spring up and bear rich harvest. Bear in mind, also, that there is no barrier to thought, and our strong vibrations of love and grateful remembrance shall reach you in your prison cell.

WALTER HENRY MACPHERSON, Minister of the People's Church, South Chicago.—Mr. Moses Harman—DEAR SIR: My attention was first called to your case through the columns of "The Chicago Socialist," and later an article in the "Physical Culture" magazine, and when I tell you I am a lover of our dear comrade, Walt Whitman (is he not your comrade?) you will have some idea of the mental makeup of one who now asks in what way he can be of service to you. I am only a young teacher of the religion of the Christ and my following is insignificant, but I hope the time is not far distant when you will consent to stand in my pulpit and tell that same following why you have been persecuted. My soul to yours, dear brother! for I also know what it is to be "despised and rejected of men." Some day mothers will shrine you in their hearts as the patron saint of the new childhood.

MRS. M.—Please continue my subscription, which expired this month. I cannot do without LUCIFER and value it more than any other paper. We're expecting the advent of a wee babe soon. If you do not hear from me by June you may discontinue my paper, as there is no one here who would read it, to my knowledge, were I not to survive the ordeal. Though my husband is bitterly opposed I will send you the money when I am again on my feet. I will risk a separation before giving up LUCIFER. Its contents are as vital as life itself. I am lonely and do not get much to read. I know of no congenial spirit in this city, and if my dear friend of 1901, Whatcom, Wash., is still living I would be glad to have a letter from him. If I can't get missing copies I am thankful for the ones I do get, for I know you are persecuted by the postal authorities. Am getting anxious to hear more of my father-friend, Moses Harman. Though not personally acquainted with him, he lives over in my heart as the best friend of woman I have ever known.

FRANK L. POLAND, Kirksville, Mo.—I received copy of LUCIFER containing Mr. Harman's photograph. It seems to me it should appear in every issue while he is in prison. Many persons would, on seeing LUCIFER for the first time, read it because of the picture, when they would otherwise throw the paper away. To all who can read character by the face it would speak eloquently, and this is the most influential class. For inclosed stamps please send me twenty copies of Letter to Roosevelt. I think we would better check our efforts in disseminating other LUCIFER publications for a while, so as to have more money to spend on this letter. Do you think it would be wise for each friend of the cause to write a short letter, inclosing a copy of the Wakeman Letter, to the representative in Congress from his or her district?

[It would doubtless be well for each friend to write letters as suggested by Mr. Poland. They probably would not bear immediate fruit, but all this agitation must have good results in the future.]

THOMAS J. GRIFFITHS, Secretary-Treasurer Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, Montreal.—I received No. 1060 of LUCIFER today, with your father's portrait. It seems to me inconceivably brutal that an old man, 75 years of age, can be sent to prison, for life practically, for giving expression to opinions that happen to be objectionable to the ruling majority. Not wanting to understand any other phase of the relations between man and woman than marriage, not believing that any other conditions can be better, they vainly imagine that intimidation and brute force can stop the progress of ideas and the dissemination of germinating thought among society. The very imprisonment of your father will arouse people who have never thought before to inquire into the reasons that have led to such an action. I send 50 cents, for which send me a dozen copies of No. 1060. I have written your father also. I feel a profound indignation that he should be compelled to suffer such treatment in the land of the free.

PETER GRAHAM, Sydney, N. S. W.—I have before me No. 1029 of LUCIFER, published December 22, 1904. I shall be glad to know if you are still publishing LUCIFER or whether you know of any publication of similar character. I am very much in sympathy with the aims of this journal, but I feel it is impossible to change the thoughts of the rock of polite society. A man in an assured position could, but that man can afford to live his own life, which may be in sympathy with your ideas, only he doesn't see why he should sacrifice his position in society by honestly stating his convictions. I don't believe in being a martyr to any faith, for the end in view of any particular belief is happiness—directly or indirectly. Martyrdom and persecution—i. e., ostracism from society (which, after all, is one's daily life, if not daily bread, for in a small town business men all know each other socially as well), means ruin and defeats its own object. After all, how much simpler it would be for me if I believed that to die for my country or have a leg blown off in war was the height of duty and bliss, but I am not made that way, so it can't be helped.

MARGARET J. BENEDICTSSON, 530 Maryland street, Winnipeg, Manitoba.—I thank you for the extra copies of LUCIFER. I shall try to place them to good advantage. I advise that the picture of your father be published in every copy of LUCIFER as long as he remains in prison, with his age and days, weeks and months of his imprisonment, as that will keep people in touch with him. I am sorry that the cut in the paper is scarcely clear enough to get a cut from for another paper. If you will kindly send me a photograph I will have a cut made here and will print it in my magazine, with the facts pertaining to his imprisonment. I am fighting against the marriage laws, or at least for an easy accession to divorce—for our people are even horror-struck at the idea of divorce—yet they divorce themselves when absolutely necessary, for in Canada there is no divorce possible, except when the parties are "untrue" to each other. "Freyja," the name of my paper, means the goddess of Love. In the old Norse mythology she was the daughter of Odin.—Dear Lillian, how I wish I could speak a word of comfort and kindness which you could feel, so you might know the deep sympathy which is really yours and your good and grand father's. We feel that he is our father also. Such men cannot be confined to few. They belong to the people, even when the power of the multitude prevails and they in their blindness crucify them.

LUCIFER'S SUSTAINING FUND.

W. W. Miller, $1; W. S., $4; M. J. Benedictsson, $1; Mrs. A. C. Zimmerman, $1; Dr. Stockham, $1; Harold L. Wood, 50c; Dr. L. M. Hammond, $2; Mrs. Bertha Moore, $1; E. J. Sayre, $1; Ed. Secrest, $1; Sunrise Club, New York City, $27.15; W. L. Lightbown, $1; C. S. Darrow, $10; Dr. J. H., $5; O. H. Ballou, $1.50; R. B. Kerr, $1; John Ostrom, $1.50; Annie B. Fish, $1. These sums were contributed to assist in the publication of LUCIFER, and to pay for extra copies of LUCIFER and the Wakeman Letter for free distribution.

WIRELESS MESSAGES.

He who attends strictly to his own business will never be idle.

When we so signally fail to decide what is best for ourselves how shall we advise others?

The bad man is the one who belongs to the other party or church, or does that which we do not do. The ignorant man is one who does not speak our language.

It has been discovered that there is a much larger amount of bribery, defalcation and graft among bankers, law-makers, office-holders, trust magnates, insurance officials and "business" men in general than there is among "workingmen, trades union or walking delegates." "Comparisons are odious"—to the business man.

A principle is not changed because this or that has been written about it and printed in books or statutes. Nothing can be made right or wrong by legal enactment. Principles are eternal verities, or truths, and not dependent upon the whims of aldermen, police judges, legislatures, congresses, presidents, postal censors or supreme courts. Law cannot be made; it eternally exists and, patient as a mother, waits for recognition. DR. GEORGE W. CAREY.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

A Child of Love.

BY MARGARET GRANT.

The life history of a girl who comes into the world marked by the Bar Sinister of Love Out of Wedlock, and who makes a brave fight for existence without asking any favors from the world because of her sex. Some of life's problems are brought home to her and she is compelled to try to solve them.

Which is Nobler, Motherhood in Love or Legal Prostitution? Must a Girl be a Weakling Just Because She Is a Girl? Is a Man a Woman's Natural Enemy, or Her Natural Friend? Must a Woman Traffic in Her Body in Order to Live?

These and other questions come into her life, as they come into the lives of all women; and bravely, nobly, she tries to solve them; bravely and nobly she tries to live a sweet, pure life.

Her story is a romance, full of temptation, trial, danger. Born in a workhouse in New England, of a union unsanctioned by the law, she is left an orphan at a tender age and puts on boy's clothing in order that she may earn a living.

A sea voyage and a shipwreck take her into old Japan before the days of its modern civilization. There startling ideas of NUDITY, MARRIAGE, DIVORCE are brought to her attention; and she is taught to see that many of the ideas prevalent in her own land lead to impurity instead of purity.

Finally, filled with notions which are in direct variance with those of her own country, she returns home to fight for her existence, friendless and endowed with that beauty which is considered the lonely girl's curse in our land of boasted civilization.

But she is well equipped for the struggle. She is physically as strong as a boy, so that if need be she can give blow for blow. LOVE MAY LURE, but she walks through dangers with a firm step, guided by a LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE. Sex has no mystery for her; she is pure and strong because SHE KNOWS.

Three young men, fighting like herself for life, become her companions. She shocks them. They live alone without a chaperon. They try to force their moral system on her; she teaches them hers. MORAL HEALTH contends with MORAL DISEASE.

The adventures of little Margaret in old Japan, being authentic, hold the reader entranced. It is a strange and new story she tells of the startling ways of a race which within twenty-five years has leaped from world obscurity to a first place in the ranks of world powers. She found herself in a land where all the men were gentlemen, all the women ladies; where marriage and divorce were private affairs; where children were never struck in anger; where sex matters were no more mysteries than food matters.

Bound in cloth, stamped with gold. $1 a copy, postpaid.

The Story of Ijain.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

The British aristocracy has produced some strong and independent souls. Literature and science bear the imprint of their touch. Social reform has also given some of them an opportunity to make a reputation for something which is generally alien to their class—useful work. But it remains for Lady Florence Dixie to redeem the name of the Douglases by literary work which is truly revolutionary in character. Revolution has been in her blood since she could think. Neither the aristocratic environment and traditions nor the efforts of clerical and monarchical influences have succeeded in blunting the keen perception of her mind. And her indomitable spirit has always clung close to the love of truth. Only a truly brave and sincere soul could walk upward without any assistance on the steep and stony path of religious evolution as she has done. She met the dogma of the ruling class with open eyes, and dissected it mercilessly, until she had satisfied herself that it was cold and hollow, and without any redeeming power. No one can read her story of IJAIN without a deep compassion for the lonely child that fought its mental battles so determinedly and found the way through the tangled maze of creed to a purer and more human conception of what religion should be and ought to accomplish. This story should be read by all who wish to answer the questions that arise in the minds of little children on religious subjects, and who wish to take part in the mental evolution of the souls that grow up under their care.—E. Untermann, in "Appeal to Reason."

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

TO MOSES HARMAN.

Because you hated falsehood, loved the truth,
Denounced foul unions mating Age and Youth,
Unveiled the monster Vice, showed Love is pure,
And that no moral serfdom can endure;
Claimed that no loveless code can bind the soul,
That 'tis not Law man needs, but Self-control,—
They sent you to a prison! But in vain
Does Power attempt to conquer Truth by pain!
Though Galileo suffered, the earth moves!
Though Bruno died, a ransomed world approves!
We yet have much to learn, we yet must see
How blind are those who strangle Liberty;
Who with concealment cloak the deeds of sin,
And hope by prudery Virtue's crown to win!
Surely what Milton, Rousseau, Shelley thought—
That by no bridal gifts can Love be bought—
Cannot be wrong? And this, then, is your crime?
Oh, suffer, fearless Spirit! 'Tis sublime
To pay this penalty for doing right,
To be struck down because you loved the Light!

CULTIVATE CHILDREN LIKE FLOWERS.

Which has the more influence in building the life of a child—heredity or environment? And are acquired characters inherited?

My own observations prove that all characters that are inherited have once been acquired, and that heredity is only the sum of all these past environments, which, if impressed on the heredity long and strong enough in any specific direction, will become part of heredity itself, and this new heredity, already slightly changed by these late environments, will have to meet new environments as before, which will, by repetition, become fixed in the ever new and constantly fluctuating heredity.

Did you ever think what is the most pliable and the most precious product of all the ages? It is not pigs, mules, books or locomotives, cotton or corn—but children. Children cannot all be treated alike; each has his or her special individuality, which is the most valuable of all endowments. If all were alike no progress could be made, and right here comes the weakest point in the present educational systems.

I have long been studying on the intricate complexity of the action of hereditary and environmental forces on life, both in plants and in man, and these comparisons and deductions came clearly, and in man, and these comparisons and deductions came clearly, sharply and naturally. It has been said that to improve a child we should begin with the grandparents. This is only a half truth, which perhaps had better never have been said. Do not waste any of your time on grandparents unless you commence on them in earliest pliable childhood. If we hope for any improvement of the human we must begin with the child, as the child responds more readily to environment than any creature in existence. The change may come in the first generation, and it may not. It may not show at all for many generations, but patience and constant attention will finally be rewarded in the survival of the most beautiful, the most precious, or the fittest, whichever you may wish to call it.

In child rearing environment is equally essential with heredity. Mind you, I do not say that heredity is of no consequence! It is the certain hereditary tendencies are almost indelibly ingrained, environment will have a hard battle to effect a change in the child, but that a change can be wrought by the surroundings we all know. A child absorbs environment. It is the most susceptible thing in the world to influence, and if that force be applied rightly and constantly when the child is in its greatest receptive condition the effect will be pronounced, immediate and permanent. There is no doubt that if a child with a vicious temper be placed in an environment of peace and quiet the temper will change. Put a boy born of gentle white parents among Indians and he will grow up like an Indian. Let the child born of criminal parents have a setting of morality and decency, and the chances are that he will not grow up a criminal, but an upright man. I do not say that heredity will not sometimes assert itself, of course. When the criminal instinct crops out in an individual it might appear as if environment were leveled to the ground, but in succeeding generations the effect of higher environment will not fail to become fixed.

We in America form a nation with the blood of half the peoples of the world within our veins. We are more crossed than any other nation in the history of the world, and here we meet exactly the same results that are always seen in a much crossed race of plants; all the worst as well as all the best qualities of each are brought out in their fullest intensity, and right here is where selective environment counts. All the necessary crossing has been done, and now comes the work of elimination, the work of refining, until we shall get an ultimate product that will be the finest human race which has ever been known. It is perhaps this country which will produce that race. Many years will pass before the finished work is attained, but it is sure to come. The characteristics of the many people that make up this nation will show in the composite with many of the evil characteristics removed, and the finished product will be the race of the future.

In my work with plants and flowers I introduce color here, shape there, size, or perfume, according to the product desired. In such processes the teachings of nature are always followed. Its great forces only are employed. All that has been done for plants and flowers by crossing, nature has already accomplished for the American people. By the crossing of bloods strength has, in one instance, been secured; in another intellectuality; in still another moral force. Nature alone could do this.

Man has by no means reached the ultimate. The fittest has not yet survived. In the process of elimination the weaker must fall, but the battle has changed its base from brute force to mental integrity.

Statistics show many things to make us pause, but after all the proper point of view is that of the optimist. The time will come when insanity will be reduced, suicides and murders will be fewer, and man will become a being of fewer mental troubles and bodily ills.

Wherever you have a nation in which there is no variation there is comparatively little insanity or crime, or exalted morality or genius. Here in America, where the variation is greatest, statistics show a greater percentage of all these variations. As time goes on in its endless and ceaseless course, environment will crystallize the in its endless and ceaseless course, environment will crystallize the American nation. Its varying elements will become unified and the weeding out process will probably leave the finest human product ever known. The color, the perfume, the size and form that are placed in plants will have their analogies in the composite, the American of the future.

And now, what will hasten this development most of all? The proper rearing of children. Don't feed children on mandlin sentimentalism or dogmatic religion; give them Nature. Let their souls drink in all that is pure and sweet. Rear them, if possible, amid pleasant surroundings. If they come into the world with souls groping in darkness let them see and feel the light. Don't terrify them in early life with the fear of an after world. There never was a child that was made more noble and good by the fear of a hell. Let Nature teach them the lessons of good and proper living, combined with an abundance of well balanced nourishment. Those children will grow to be the best men and women. Put the best in them by contact with the best outside. They will absorb it as a plant does the sunshine and the dew.—Luther Burbank.

THE READER MUST DRAW THE MORAL.

UP-TO-DATE FABLES. By R. B. Kerr.

All who have read these fables, originally published separately in LUCIFER, will be glad of their reappearance in book form. They deserve permanence, on account of the facility with which they can be applied to illustrate the true points of social questions. Their ingenuity and variety of conception, and the felicity of their style, ought to secure them an immediate sale, and that should bring an established general reputation. To review them is not so easy as to praise; for they would be spoilt by abridgment or reproduction, being, in fact, already very tersely written, but special characteristics may be pointed out which will justify the commendation to those who have not seen the apologues.

The amount of invention which the fables show is very considerable. They are only eight in number, but the same general thesis is suggested by a tale of the Amazons; the celebrated geese whose livers are fattened at Strassburg for the delectation of an epicurean world; the manners of an ascetic community in India; the music of the planet Jupiter; the customs of those who inhabit the asteroid Ceres; the warriors of Dahomey; the effects of ostensibly similar discipline on the boys and girls of two boarding schools, kept by the same governess; a trades union among the horses of Siberia, its success and the consequences. All these subjects have the interest of the bizarre and exotic in themselves, and the moral, that what an account of them so much resembles, is bizarre—but, I forgot, there is no such moral, unless you are wicked enough to think so.

The moral—if you will be perverse enough to extract one from a story which in no way encourages you to say there is any there—is not exactly the same for all the fables, but together they have the effect of bringing forth, in stereoscopic fashion, a single many-sided view which quite reverses that considered "proper." Why the women in almost every country amount to so little; why their thought is lost to the world of policy, philosophy, almost of literature and art; why they show such marked inferiority to the sterner sex, and are the well-known bulwarks of abuses bearing on no one so heavily as themselves, may be inferred from the way the men were reduced to a similar condition among the Amazons.

In the apologue of the Strassburg geese the arguments for the existing state of things, as concerns geese, are very fully stated in refutation of pleas for Higher Goosehood, and they don't seem to refute. But, of course, if you read women for geese, that is entirely at your own risk.

In India, as among the Neoplatonists, the possession of a body is esteemed very humiliating and the necessity of sustaining it a thing to be ignored as much as possible. In that Hindoo society described, accordingly, "any and all mention" of eating is obscene. If this rule and its related consequences suggest a parallel with anything else, that, reader, must be your fault—thunder and lightning, the blame can't belong to institutions sanctioned by the wisdom of our ancestors ever since the Devil put Adam and Eve up to making clothes! Perhaps the most suggestive idea in the whole collection comes from the planet Jupiter, where it is a capital point of morality to hear only one tune until the music-box gives out. But really there is nothing suggestive about it, unless you must make the medium who had been to Jupiter say something which she doesn't say. I never knew but one man who did seem to enjoy hearing the same tune all his life, and he was a blind organ-grinder, who got his living, like Mrs. Grundy, by being disagreeable to other people. Enough has doubtless been said already to illustrate the versatility of the treatment, and further analysis would be unjust. Fables, when they are good for anything, belong to literature, and the only way of profiting by literature is to read it.

C. L. JAMES.

Nothing but a false sentimentality, ignorance of the most important functions of life, or radical misconceptions of their dignity and nobility, can explain the attitude of those who would keep these great mysteries [of sex] out of the field of intelligent study and instruction—Christian Union, Nov. 19, 1892.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

DR. A. HOWARD YOUNG, Pueblo, Colo.—I have occasionally for the last few years read LUCIFER, but did not understand or appreciate its teachings. I wish to be classed among those who are in full accord with the teachings of Moses HARMAN, as I now understand them—the emancipation of woman. Enclosed find $1. I want LUCIFER. If you will send me sample copies I'll see that they are distributed to the best advantage possible. Give my love to your father and tell him I send him kind thoughts daily.

HERBERT C. DAVIS, State Secretary Socialist Party, Gary, Fla.—Enclosed find $1, for which please place me on your list as a subscriber to LUCIFER. If publication has been suspended apply the amount to the cause you are defending. I might add that as a Socialist I think you have the cart before the horse and that the reforms you advocate will come after and as a result of the impending economic revolution—but I suppose you have heard it before. At least in the fight for free speech we stand on common ground.

ELMER ELLSWORTH CAREY, Editor "Suggestion," Chicago.—Dear Mr. Harman: I wish to send my congratulations to you upon your election to martyrship; suppose now you have earned a place along with Garrison and John Brown and others who walked the path of duty, regardless of the stings of orthodoxy and respectability. I would like to come out and see you some Sunday. At the press writers' meeting the other day we discussed a plan to gather a number of your friends together and visit you in a body. I would be glad to join in such a movement.

[Visitors are not admitted to the prison on Sundays and holidays and I think that not more than three or four would be admitted at one time. I am sure my father would be glad to see his friends if permitted to do so, and would thank Mr. Carey and the other "press writers" if he could speak or write to them.—L. H.]

LIZZIE M. HOLMES, La Veta, Colo.—[Copy of letter to M. Harman]: You know how deeply I sympathize with you and words cannot make it more clear. After the experiences I have passed through it seems to me now that not to have been in prison for one's convictions betokens a lack of worthiness, ability, faithfulness or enthusiasm. You know Albert Parsons said a true radical might be ashamed if he had never been persecuted.

I know you are bearing this trial with a noble philosophy and you need not feel as abashed to meet your jailer's eye as he must to meet yours. But I wish some younger person could bear this confinement, willing as you are, because physically they could bear it better—though never with a higher or more courageous spirit than you will.

I am done exclaiming and being astonished or angry that brave and good people are persecuted, imprisoned and hanged in a country supposed to be free; I have lived through too much. I suppose all these things have to be—and the men who do them think they are right, according to their environment and training. You will say, as did the Christ, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." I hope and pray that you will endure your incarceration with strength and cheerfulness, and that you will not allow yourself to get sick or die in prison. Such a welcome you will receive when you come out! I will send some money to help LUCIFER in a little while. I just haven't got it now. With much love and helpful thoughts to you and the LUCIFER group, I am, yours fraternally.

MRS. M. LILLY-SLAIGHT, Minneapolis, Minn.—In your issue No. 1060 there was an article that interested me very much—"When Divorce Is a Blessing." Now I sympathize with the stand taken that a woman has just cause often for leaving such a man, but I can also look at the matter from the mother's standpoint—to leave him does mean to leave the children she loves and lose them; for you surely know that a married mother does not own her children in these United States of ours. So if she wants to retain her hold on them she must take the abuse their owner and hers wishes to heap upon her. Now doubtless this sounds much harsher than I mean to be, but it is a fact which has been proven repeatedly, and I know even now several similar cases. I love this, my native land, and can truly sing, "I love her rocks and rills, her woods and templed hills"; but I cannot be blind to even her faults, and the enslavement of women is certainly one of the darkest blots upon her beautiful banner—even though some women still protest that they would not accept suffrage and decry those who desire its advantages. I cannot agree with some of the sentiments expressed in your sheet, for I am glad to be known as a humble follower of the Man of Galilee. He is my dearest friend. Yet I am pleased to hear the opinions of those who do not see with me. I can see much of good in their thoughts even while I often deplore the evidest misunderstanding of the true mission of my Savior to them.

MRS. M., Park City, Utah.—Enclosed find $1 for books. Hope to be able to lead others to see the need of woman's emancipation. Am still a struggler myself, but am groping toward the light. I was brought up a member of the dominant church in this state, which believes in the entire degradation of women, their highest duty to God and man—principally man—being to "multiply and replenish the earth" irrespective of the health, wealth, mental, moral or physical ability of parents and consequently of the offspring. Oh! for a thousand LUCIFERS and Moses Harmans to help along in the great work of deliverance!

A SOUTHERN FRIEND.—No. 1062 of LUCIFER just received. I see that my subscription lapsed with No. 1059. Enclosed please find $5 and set my name forward one year and use the rest in any way that you think will be most conducive to stop the outrage being perpetrated upon your noble father. Personally speaking, his picture almost breaks my heart and I cannot look at it except through a veil of tears.

If I may suggest, as I see it, the only protection from the repetition of such outrages seems to lie in legislative action, and to get legislative action requires that public sentiment be educated to the demand for the repeal of the present censorship law. If the Free Speech League could have representatives at every newspaper convention and could keep agents in the field to visit and interest the newspapers in this one point, pleading not the right to discuss sex questions nor to favor sex freedom, forgetting all reforms that would be helped by the repeal, and only pleading for a removal of the censorship on the grounds of obscenity and compelling the department to prove fraud before declaring fraud orders and holding up mail, I believe this, with the added force of personal appeal of the electors who send the men to Congress or keep them at home, according as they do or do not represent them in legislation, would speedily get rid of the objectionable law. But who is really free? I could not do it, much as I like to fight for what I believe to be right. I would soon be where I could not send five cents to help in the fight if you should even publish this letter in LUCIFER.

To borrow from the aim of "Mother Earth," I believe in "the somber depth of silent preparation," and believe if a still hunt is made and the question kept just as separate from such unpopular issues as sex discussion as is possible, under the circumstances, that the majority of Congress will be glad to change the existing order, because in their secret hearts they are not in sympathy with prudery.

ADELINE CHAMPNEY, Cleveland, Ohio.—Here are a few more stamps for the Wakeman Letter, which have been distributed. The extra copies of LUCIFER received. I am glad you sent them; we have put them all out. It is an especially good number for distribution, containing Post's article and Moses' picture. But, oh! how impervious people are! I did not find my name in the list of letters that our dear editor had kindly been allowed to receive. I wonder if mine was too laudatory. It was chiefly taken up with a quotation from Thoreau. I inclose the passage to you. I will write again.

[Following is the quotation from Thoreau, to which Mrs. Champney refers]:

"I was put into a gaol once . . . for one night; and as I stood considering the walls of solid stone, two or three feet thick; the door of wood and iron, a foot thick, and the iron grating which strained the light, I could not help being struck with the foolishness of that institution which treated me as if I were mere flesh and blood and bones, to be locked up.

"I wondered that it should have concluded at length that this was the best use it could put me to, and had never thought to avail itself of my services in some way.

"I saw that, if there was a wall of stone between me and my townsmen, there was a still more difficult one to climb or break through before they could get to be as free as I was. I did not for a moment feel confined, and the walls seemed a great waste of stone and mortar. I felt as if I alone of all my townsmen had paid my tax. They plainly did not know how to treat me, but behaved like persons who were underbred. In every threat and in every compliment there was a blunder; for they thought that my chief desire was to stand on the other side of that stone wall. I could not but smile to see how industriously they locked the door on my meditations, which followed them out again without let or hindrance, and they were really all that was dangerous. As they could not reach me, they had resolved to punish my body; just as boys, if they cannot come at a person against whom they have a spite, will abuse his dog.

"I saw that the State was half-witted, that it was timid as a lone woman with her silver spoons, and that it did not know its friends from its foes; and I lost all my remaining respect for it, and pitied it."

SUGGESTIONS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In sending in names of new subscribers please state (1) if money for same is paid by said subscriber, or (2) is paid by remitter with knowledge and consent, or (3) without knowledge or consent of new subscriber. In the latter case, we want to write and ask if the person wishes to receive paper, so by having the information at first a great deal of labor is saved.

Those who do not wish to see their letters or names in LUCIFER should write "Not for publication" on each letter; for, while the majority do not object to their letters or extracts therefrom being used, a few do; and it would entail too much unnecessary labor to write to each for permission to make such use of their words.

IDEAL MARRIAGE.

In the ordinary marriage the two strangers promise to love, honor and cherish till death do part.

The Catholic church holds it a sin to break the tie. Christian churches discuss divorce, but cannot find a remedy for unhappy marriages. Theosophists teach that one must not break one's word; if he marry for better or worse and gets hell, he must stand it.

There is one reasonable way out of this trouble. One should not promise in marriage, any more than in a business contract, impossible things. The marriage ceremony should be: "We will love, honor and cherish as long as possible." It is absurd to promise, in ignorance of the other's characteristics, how long one can love, honor and cherish. To tie human beings together after love is dead and respect flown, is a terrible torture, and humanity in general will not stand for it.

The people make a great cry about the "children." Is it not better to part than live together in hatred and have more children?

Why not make a law which all can respect? A mean between the frivolous divorces and the mock, respectable martyrdom. If we only promised to love, honor and cherish as long as possible, each would strive to live to the highest to hold the other's esteem.

One suggests that we make marriage for some stated term, say ten years. That would not cover the question; for who can promise love for ten years any more than for life? As the majority of men are selfish, we would have to make laws to protect the wife and children at parting of parents.

There should be no disgrace to the woman.

The ideal marriage is a "partnership," not a "master and slave" condition, as now.

"Obey" should be left out of the contract. It is a crime to bear children without love; better race suicide.

BELLE GOODWIN FITCH.

The pressure of the general intellectual influences of the time determines the predispositions which ultimately regulate the details of belief; and though all men do not yield to that pressure with the same facility, all large bodies are at last controlled. A change of speculative opinion does not imply an increase of the data upon which these opinions rest, but a change of the habits of thought and mind which they reflect. Definite arguments are the symptoms and pretexts, but seldom the causes of change.—W. H. Lecky: Rationalism in Europe.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

A special number, devoted to Moses Harman, is promised by the editor of "Soundview," at an early date—probably in June or July. Special articles and a portrait will appear. Mr. Rader will divide receipts with LUCIFER on all orders which mention this notice. Price, 10 cents a copy, $1 a dozen, $7 a hundred. Contents and further particulars will be given in an early issue. Address L. E. Rader, Olalla, Wash.

PROSECUTIONS AND ATTEMPTED SUPPRESSION OF LUCIFER

At an early date—probably in LUCIFER No. 1065—we will publish a brief history of the attempted suppression of LUCIFER and the prosecutions against its editor. The first attempt to suppress this paper was made twenty years ago, and has continued intermittently ever since. A full history would make interesting reading and it will be written some time in the future. At present we can give only a brief sketch. It will, perhaps, be published in a small pamphlet, similar to the Wakeman Letter. We would be glad to hear from friends who would take copies for distribution, either in LUCIFER or the pamphlet form.

THE PETITION FOR THE PARDON OF MOSES HARMAN.

On page 507 will be found a copy of a petition for the "pardon" of the editor of LUCIFER which is being circulated by the Free Speech League. Friends wishing to obtain signatures may obtain blanks by application to this office, or the page from LUCIFER can be used, attached to blank sheets.

As to the propriety of even asking for a "pardon" for Moses Harman, there will be wide divergence of opinion. Many who might think it best to ask, if there were reasonable hope of the pardon being granted, will say that there is no possibility of such being the outcome, and, therefore, to make the request is to foolishly court the humiliation of refusal. In my opinion, however, the good gained would well repay the effort, even if it were certain that the imprisonment itself would not be shortened one day thereby. By circulating the petition hundreds and thousands of people, who have never heard of Moses Harman or of LUCIFER, will be led to investigate the causes of the imprisonment; will be brought to an understanding of the dangers which threaten the expression of any unpopular thought if such precedents as the imprisonment of Moses Harman are permitted to stand without protest. L. H.

The New York "Truth Seeker," of April 21, contains the following paragraph:

"A petition for the pardon of Moses Harman, a victim of the postoffice autocracy, is printed on another page. Every American citizen ought to sign it. We hope all of our readers will do so, and procure as many other signatures as they can. The petition will be presented about June 1, and it is necessary that what is to be done should be done at once, so that the signed petitions may be returned to this office by May 20."

The "Blue Grass Blade," reproducing the petition and commenting at length thereon, says:

"True, indeed, the Free Speech League is right when it terms Moses Harman as the last of the 'martyrs for a free press,' the last one made by breeders of anarchy to 'suffer for opinion's sake.' . . . But this is not the real question before us at this time. Right or wrong, Harman is in prison. The issue is to secure his freedom. This freedom can now only be secured through the medium of clemency from President Roosevelt. His conviction and sentence being affirmed on appeal, his liberation is now altogether in the hands of Roosevelt. The Free Speech League is now circulating petitions for signatures to present to Roosevelt which shall seek a pardon for Harman. This petition ought to be signed by every Freethinker in America and such an array of names sent in that the President can ill afford to ignore the demand. The 'Blade' now requests that its readers send direct to the league's headquarters for a copy of blank petitions, get it signed and returned it as instructed. The league's offices are at 175 Broadway, New York City."

SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY SENDS GREETING.

CHICAGO, April 7, 1906.

Moses Harman, Joliet Penitentiary, Illinois.

The Chicago Society of Anthropology, at its last meeting, by unanimous vote, directed its secretary to send its good will, kindly greeting and sympathy to you in your confinement; and, further, to say that its members earnestly hope that the postal regulations, which are not now clear to the great majority who have no other means than the United States mails for sending written and printed matter to friends or patrons, will in the very near future be replaced by a code of simple rules, accessible and intelligible to all, and that public opinion will soon secure the enactment of legislation that will enable patrons of the mail service of the United States to have the mailability of postal matter determined by competent judicial decree.

Believing that the authorities who have put you in restraint have made provision for preserving your health, I am, yours sincerely,

CHARLES J. LEWIS, M. D., Secretary.

POSTAL CENSORSHIP.

The postoffice authorities are doubtless performing a public service in depriving swindlers of the use of the mails, but it is intrusting them with a degree of power which may some day be abused, says a contemporary. Not only may it "some day be abused," but it is abused now. The postoffice censorship, intended to apply to those fraudulently using the mails, has become a most damnable tyranny. It is a constant menace to a free press and personal liberty.

We have in mind, as we write, Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, who is serving a term in the Illinois penitentiary because he published articles in his little paper which petty postal officials thought "obscene." They were republished by many influential journals, whose editors were not molested. Yet there is not a purer-minded man, with a cleaner life, in the whole land, than Moses Harman, convicted felon, aged seventy-five.—The Star (San Francisco, Cal.).

There is no greater immorality that a man can perform than to inflict on a woman an unwanted child, and there is no more cruel act than for a man and woman to willingly give birth to a diseased child.—Lady Florence Dixie.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 6 months and 14 days old. He has served 59 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. His task at present is breaking stone.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

The latest news received from our editor was on Tuesday, April 10, when he was permitted to see his friend and attorney, Mr. C. T. Brown, of this city. Mr. Brown had a conversation with him, of about an hour's duration, while the prisoner ate apples—his favorite fruit. He is not permitted to have fruit, except that which he can eat while with the visitor. His health is good and he is hopeful and cheerful, as always. He works from 7:30 a. m. to 12 m., and from 1 to 5 p. m., breaking stone. He still occupies a cell with a consumptive, but the warden ordered a change. He greatly enjoys the letters which he receives from his friends and requests me to say that he does not ask them to write lengthy letters, but that his greatest pleasure is in receiving messages, even if but a few words.

When I saw him soon after he was imprisoned I feared he would not survive, but now I believe that his strong constitution, his indomitable will and his calm spirit will carry him safely through hardships which would crush the average man of his years. He has lived simply and worked hard all his life. I am not sure that he has ever before spent much time in breaking stone, but he has endured all the hardships of pioneer life—has felled trees, dug out roots, blasted and mined when necessary, and all in spite of the fact that he was, for the greater part of his life, a cripple. He was never "too good" to do any necessary work and no labor which could benefit any one was beneath his dignity. And though it would seem that to allot the task of crushing stone to such a man as he is a waste of good material, yet we can feel assured that this is not the only work which he accomplishes in his imprisonment.

PROTEST OF A FRENCH EDITOR.

In LUCIFER No. 1063 mention was made of the fact that Paul Robin, editor of "Régénération," had written an article concerning the imprisonment of the editor of LUCIFER and had sent copies of it to several of the radical journals in France, but that none of them up to that time had published it. In a recent issue of "L'Action" the article was published in full. A translation of it follows:

IN FREE AMERICA.

A JOURNALISTIC FREE THINKER IN PRISON.—PROTEST OF CITIZEN PAUL ROBIN.

Citizen Paul Robin requests us to publish the following protest and we are happy to comply with his request:

We have already mentioned in "L'Action" the way in which freedom of thought is treated in free America, notably in the city where the magistrates, with abominable infamy, assassinated the martyrs of Chicago. It seems that justice in that country is administered at present much the same as it was in 1887.

Moses Harman, the indefatigable editor of LUCIFER, THE LIGHT BEARER, has come under the denunciation of the postal authorities, who are under the influence of the chief of puritans, Anthony Comstock, and has been condemned to one year in prison for the expression of his opinion. He was released temporarily under $1,000 bail, pending an appeal to the Federal Court of Appeals.

During the time he was out on bail the postal authorities confiscated eight issues of LUCIFER, alleging that they contained obscene matter. On January 4 Moses Harman was taken before the Court of Appeals, which promptly confirmed the judgment of the lower court—one year in prison with hard labor.

I repeat, that Moses Harman makes in LUCIFER the same propaganda, but much more moderate in form and depth, as that which we make in "Régénération." As a free thinker and radical he demands that woman alone shall decide when she wishes to become a mother, and he pleads for the right of the child to be born under good conditions. He says all this in the most delicate, reserved and irreproachable language.

It is especially this last point, so much in opposition to the doctrine of President Roosevelt, who wishes the greatest possible number of births in order to have the greatest possible number of docile brutes, which has enraged the puritanic Comstockians and the bigoted protestants.

Then, because of an expression of opinion on a question the most worthy of serious discussion, a venerable man of 75 years, a philosopher who has passed his life in efforts to ameliorate the condition of humanity from every point of view, must go to prison for one year and perform absurd and excessive tasks, such as picking old rope or other like stupidities, under the penalty of seeing his already insufficient, unnutritious food reduced in quality and quantity.

It is slow death, very slow, very dolorous, modernized by protestant hypocrisy under the rule of Roosevelt.

Shall there not be among the protests against so many other crimes committed by the authorities everywhere one voice to cry out in indignation against this series of infamies committed in the "classic land of liberty"?

It should be remembered that all the régimes of authority are alike. One atrocity committed in a certain place should not make us forgetful of others. Everywhere it is the same: The masters of the world, politicians and financiers, desire the greatest possible number of births, the greatest possible number of hired murderers, of human brutes resigned to their fate, in order to have a permanent industrial war in accord with the international wars.

To the authorities, antimilitarism and parental prudence are equally odious. In France steps have been taken already to suppress the first, and the assembly of false and inhuman savants called the Academy of Medicine, following the tyrannous example of the government, has taken up arms against the second.

In Spain, in America and elsewhere the struggle is on. In sending to all the oppressed our testimony of active sympathy we are doing our duty to them, as well as to ourselves. PAUL ROBIN.

HOW MEN DIE IN RUSSIA.

Ivan Nerodny, a Russian revolutionary, who led the attempt at mutiny at Cronstadt last year, and who was minister of domestic affairs in the provisional government of the Baltic provinces, has arrived in New York. He escaped from Russia in disguise early in January, with a 30,000 rubles ($15,000) price on his head.

Nerodny has a letter from an attorney named Riasner, who was an eye-witness of the execution of Lieut. Schmidt, of the Russian navy, on March 19 at Otchakoff. Schmidt was the leader of the revolt at Sevastopol.

"I saw the assassin of the Grand Duke Sergius hanged," writes Riasner, "yet that was as nothing by the horror of this shooting. My pen refuses to move when I think of it.

"It was 4 o'clock in the morning when Schmidt was led out for execution with the three common sailors who died with him. His struggle to the end was to save the three sailors. On the way to the place of execution he begged permission to send a telegram, taking all responsibility and exonerating the sailors. The admiral refused that.

"'Then let me at least die like an officer,' he said. 'Do not blind nor bind me.'

"They granted that, and decided that since he could see and the others would die blind, he should be shot first. Schmidt was placed with his back against a hill. Thirty men of his own command, many of whom loved him, were told off to kill him.

"Now the admiral feared that these men might not shoot at the word; so behind them he stationed 200 men with loaded rifles trained on every man of the firing squad. Their orders were to shoot instantly any man who failed to fire.

"Schmidt walked like a soldier to the spot. All the way he spoke incessantly to the soldiers who walked to the right and left, exhorting them to rise for humanity. A priest approached him.

"'No,' said Schmidt, kindly, 'I believe in no God except the good of humanity.' Then he stepped into his place.

"The officer had drawn his sword, when Schmidt called out: 'Wait, I want a glass of water. You cannot refuse that to a dying man.'

"It seemed a strange request, but they granted it. Hardly were the water bearers out of range when he raised the glass high above his head.

"'To the people of Russia,' he cried. 'To the Russian people and the social revolution.'

"These were his last words, for the officer cried, 'Fire.'

"Only sixteen of the thirty men in the firing squad fired. The rest lowered their pieces, overcome by the sublimity of this pledge in the face of death.

"The admiral kept his word. The sixteen who had fired were ordered rapidly out of line; the fourteen who failed were kept in place, their backs toward their death.

"'Fire,' said the officer of the 200 men behind.

"Probably not more than half of them obeyed, but it was enough. The fourteen fell as one man. Then they proceeded with the butchery of the three condemned sailors.

"What a day was this, comrade, in the history of Russia!"—Chicago Tribune.

POSTAL CENSORSHIP OF BANKING.

The Lewis case of St. Louis is a striking instance of the dangerous meddlesomeness of the postal department in private business. Lewis had undertaken to establish a banking business with certain novel features. Whether these features would be useful or not we make no pretense of saying. We are quite convinced, however, that postoffice "inspectors" (the official name for mail-bag detectives) are not qualified judges; and we doubt the competency of a postmaster general who collected campaign contributions from financial corporations to be used for his chief's election. Yet this postmaster general, upon the ex parte report of such detectives, did by arbitrary order close the mails to Lewis's banking enterprise. Of course that meant death to the enterprise, for mail facilities are vital to every modern business. The pretense was that the business was fraudulent. But this pretense has been killed by the report of the receiver of the assassinated enterprise, who says of it that every loan and investment has been liquidated 100 cents on the dollar with interest in full; that the depositors are being paid in full; and that he has already declared dividends to the stockholders of 85 per cent. If that was a fraudulent institution, making loans on wildcat securities, what shall be said of the honest ones whose securities do not pan out in full, whose depositors get but a fraction of their money back, and whose stockholders are lucky if they don't have to submit to an assessment? Besides this evidence of the legitimacy of Mr. Lewis's assassinated business, we have the signed statement of Alexander Del Mar, the distinguished publicist who is editor of the "American Banker," that he is satisfied after minute examination that the banking business in question, "however original its method of promotion, or however novel its features and plan of working, was an honestly designed and an honestly conducted institution, and one which, had it not been disturbed, would have proved profitable to its stockholders and depositors and even beneficial to the country at large, by increasing the revenues of the postoffice department, providing a safe and expenseless money order system and affording facilities to the multitude for obtaining small loans of money upon pledges. I am constrained to add that the dates and other details of the attacks made upon it by the several parties indicated point to a concerted effort, originating in trade rivalry and embittered by malice."

The fact that such a business could be ruined by the fiat of a cabinet officer is reason enough for overhauling the statutes under which an administrative department of the central government has drawn to itself such monstrous power.—The Public (Chicago.)

SPASMODIC FITS OF MORALITY.

We know of no spectacle so ridiculous as the British public in one of its periodical fits of morality. In general, elopements, divorces and family quarrels pass with little notice. We read the scandal, talk about it for a day, and forget it. But once in six or seven years our virtue becomes outrageous. We cannot suffer the laws of religion and decency to be violated. We must make a stand against vice. We must teach libertines that the English people appreciate the importance of domestic ties. Accordingly some unfortunate man, in no respect more depraved than hundreds whose offenses have been treated with lenity, is singled out as an expiatory sacrifice. If he has children, they are to be taken from him. If he has a profession, he is to be driven from it. He is cut by the higher orders and hissed by the lower. He is, in truth, a sort of "whipping boy," by whose vicarious agonies all the other transgressors of the same class are, it is supposed, sufficiently punished. We reflect very complacently on our own severity, and compare with great pride the high standards of morals established in England with the Parisian laxity. At length our anger is satiated. Our victim is ruined and heartbroken and our virtue goes gently to sleep for seven years more.—Lord Macaulay in his review of Moore's "Life of Byron."

A free press is the parent of much good in the state. But even a licentious press is far less evil than a press that is enslaved, because both sides may be heard in the former case, but not in the latter. A licentious press may be an evil, an enslaved press must be so; for an enslaved press may cause error to be more current than wisdom, and wrong more powerful than right. A licentious press cannot effect these things, for if it give the poison, it gives also the antidote, which an enslaved press withholds. An enslaved press is doubly fatal; it not only takes away the true light, for in that case we might stand still, but it sets up a false one, that decoys us to our destruction.—Rev. C. C. Colton.

These vigilants and purifiers, with that hypocritical severity which ever makes the worst sinner in private the most vigorous judge in public, lately had the imprudent impudence to summons a publisher who had reprinted the "Decameron" with the objectionable passages in French. Mr. Alderman Faudell Phillips had the good sense contemptuously to dismiss the summons. Englishmen are no longer what they were if they continue to tolerate this ignoble espionage of vicious and prurient virtuous "associations." If they mean real work why do they commence with scholar-like works, instead of cleansing the many foul cesspools of active vice, which are a public disgrace to London.—Sir R. F. Burton.

Our Yankee cousins stamped out slavery; one day they will unlock the gate and disemprison Liberty. All books of any note have been persecuted. The "Age of Reason" was put down by the police, and men gathered behind hedges to read by stealth copies they had bought with their united pence. If the Bible itself were, by some magic turn of Fortune's wheel, to fall again under the ban, it would be eagerly read, where it is now used in English parlor windows as a convenient stand for the flower-pot.—Carrington.

A PETITION FOR PARDON OF MOSES HARMAN.

To the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States:

Moses Harman, editor, of Chicago, is now serving a sentence of one year in the prison at Joliet, Ill., imposed by Judge Landis in the United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois, on June 29, 1905. Mr. Harman was convicted June 16, 1905, on the charge of mailing obscene literature, and the sentence affirmed on appeal. The prisoner began to serve his sentence March 1, 1906.

We, the undersigned, now ask for speedy pardon for the following reasons:

1. Mr. Harman, now 75 years of age, is illy fitted to bear unnecessary and undue punishment, and it is a hardship that will probably sacrifice his life. His sentence is excessive, or far exceeds any possible injury done by the prisoner to the postal service or any human being.

2. He is a natural born reformer; he has been a teacher, preacher, editor and reformer for fifty years, and proved himself an earnest, honest, steadfast, brave and unflinching Garrison type of man; and he is manifestly suffering now, as hundreds have before him, "for opinion's sake." We think it is time for a "free country" to cease making martyrs for a free press.

3. Mr. Harman has never catered to salacious tastes or to morbid minds in search of obscenity; his publications are of great value and appeal only to the few serious, thoughtful people who are students of important and unsolved problems in sociology.

4. No evidence has been offered of any actual harm done to man, woman or child by Mr. Harman's publications; the alleged evil is all fictitious or problematical.

5. Mr. Harman has been treated as an obstinate, unrepentant criminal; whereas he is simply firm in the conviction that he stands for an important right and duty, as did George Washington and Harman's own contemporaries, such as William Lloyd Garrison and Susan B. Anthony, and many others.

6. Mr. Harman believes in applying scientific methods in stirpiculture, for the improvement of the human race, and in so doing gives no more real cause for offense than do the publications of the United States department of agriculture offered to stock breeders and daily sent by mail. It is an unfair and unjust discrimination that throws Mr. Harman's paper out of the mail and puts him into the jail for reprinting United States official documents, while the United States officials go right on mailing the same, though they are "condemned" as obscene by the postoffice department.

7. No man should ever be punished under a law that is so uncertain that guilt depends upon the speculative opinion of a jury as to a psychological tendency, and that is the substance of the judicial test of obscenity. No man can know from reading the statute whether a given publication is criminal, because the law does not inform us what will be the jury's opinion of the psychological tendency, nor furnish either the public or the jury with a standard of judgment.

8. Such convictions as that of Mr. Harman do much to undermine respect for the administration of justice, and the pardon asked should be granted as promptly and for the same reasons as moved President McKinley to pardon Charles C. Moore, editor of the "Blue Grass Blade," who was convicted in Cincinnati on a similar pretense of "obscenity" under very similar conditions, and for the same reasons which also moved President McKinley to pardon Leroy Berrier, likewise convicted in Minneapolis.

9. The imprisonment of this aged reformer is a misapplication of the law, a disgrace to our republic and its main purpose, "the preservation of liberty." We therefore respectfully ask the President to bring this disgrace to an end with the least possible delay.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so patpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a precious condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this better distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy, we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. A Child of Love.

BY MARGARET GRANT.

The life history of a girl who comes into the world marked by the Bar Sinister of Love Out of Wedlock, and who makes a brave fight for existence without asking any favors from the world because of her sex. Some of life's problems are brought home to her and she is compelled to try to solve them.

Which is Nobler, Motherhood in Love or Legal Prostitution? Must a Girl be a Weakling Just Because She is a Girl? Is a Man a Woman's Natural Enemy, or Her Natural Friend? Must a Woman Traffic in Her Body in Order to Live?

These and other questions come into her life, as they come into the lives of all women; and bravely, nobly she tries to solve them; bravely and nobly she tries to live a sweet, pure life.

Her story is a romance, full of temptation, trial, danger. Born in a workhouse in New England, of a union unsanctioned by the law, she is left an orphan at a tender age and puts on boy's clothing in order that she may earn a living.

A sea voyage and a shipwreck take her into old Japan before the days of its modern civilization. There startling ideas of NUDITY, MARRIAGE, DIVORCE are brought to her attention; and she is taught to see that many of the ideas prevalent in her own land tend to impurity instead of purity.

Finally, filled with notions which are in direct variance with those of her own country, she returns home to fight for her existence, friendless and endowed with that beauty which is considered the lonely girl's curse in our land of boasted civilization.

But she is well equipped for the struggle. She is physically as strong as a boy, so that if need be she can give blow for blow. LOVE MAY LOSE, but she walks through dangers with a firm step, guided by a LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE. Sex has no mystery for her; she is pure and strong because SHE KNOWS.

Three young men, fighting like herself for life, become her companions. She shocks them. They live alone without a chaperon. They try to force their moral system on her; she teaches them hers. MORAL HEALTH contends with MORAL DISEASE.

The adventures of little Margaret in old Japan, being authentic, hold the reader entranced. It is a strange and lovely tale of the startling ways of a race which within twenty-five years has leaped from world obscurity to a first place in the ranks of world powers. She found herself in a land where all the men were gentlemen, all the women ladies; where marriages and divorces were private affairs; where children were never struck in anger; where sex matters were no more mysteries than food matters.

MINORITIES AND LIBERTY.

The development of free institutions in any country is a painful process—for the pioneers. The British minister of education has recently excused himself from interfering with injustice on the ground that "Minorities must always suffer." It is the old cry of the religionists who apologize for their cruelty on "natural" analogies. "Nature, red in tooth and claw," shrieks against a creed of mercy and justice to the weak. Providence continues persistently on the side of the big battalions.

Naturally, minorities must suffer. No minority, especially a very small minority, expects the practical convenience which numbers can alone give. We expect that the cost of producing a periodical with a small circulation and no advertisements must be immense in proportion to that of the "Times" or "Herald" type of journal. We take for granted that men and women with unpopular ideas will spend a strenuous lifetime in unremunerative (but not necessarily unprofitable) work, while the chorus-singer of "the largest circulation in the world" spreads himself out and has a good time. The lecturer for the minority has no quarrel with the small kerosene-lighted back street meeting place, what time he hears the sonorous organ pealing in the majestic cathedral of the crowd. A birth in a manger, a few disciples meeting at a poor inn, a feast of barley loaves and a few small fishes are natural disadvantages which small minorities accept with good humor and arguments in favor of a simple life. Diogenes does not even ask for a gold-plated tub.

Minorities must suffer, and the words are accepted by the common-sense components of the minority as the badge of their tribe without complaint, so long as the suffering is a deprivation and not an invasion. We accept loss, but we object to robbery. We submit to nature, because we cannot help ourselves—we object to our fellow-man preventing our coming to terms with nature. After all, minorities have some rights. No man has a right to invade the rights of others, even in a democracy. Comstockism is a poor substitute for aristocracy—some of us would prefer a cultured autocracy to an ignorant tyrant, whether his name be Majority or not.

Revolutions have had for their text the rights of the majority. Evolution weighs fitness, it does not count noses. We must preach (as all reformers have had to preach) the limits of democracy, the place of the individual, the rights of men against the tyranny of man.

To those who swear by the majority, logic asks, How do you recognise a majority? To ascend from the general to the particular: Have you asked the people of your United States whether they want Moses Harman kept in prison? Have the two sides of the case been carefully circulated amongst your democracy? Are the offending articles from LUCIFER being submitted to the people, saying, Is the editor worthy of jail? Have the electors even (that section of a section) been consulted? Did your candidates at the last election give even a general consent to the interference of the postal censors? Judged by their own standards the apologists of democracy must plead guilty to a crime against their own principles. I need not refer to the Declaration of Independence, since that document has already been declared by your government to be criminally seditious under certain circumstances.

Perhaps it is impolitic to argue general principles at the present time. There certainly must be many thinking and well-meaning people who disagree with our premises and disavow our conclusions, who, all the same, are at one with us in horror and repudiation of the abominable interference with the liberty of one who has deserved nothing but approval for his devotion to free speech, and his calm desire to go on working in his own way for the improvement of the race. To such helpers we must be generous in our thanks, but frank in our exposition of principle. We shall never do anything inconsistent with out appreciation of their support, and so long as they do not wish to hinder us we shall be proud of their company. They can console themselves easily enough if their enemies and ours warn them they are assisting our larger aims with which they may not agree. They and we are doing the same work now—we are breaking the fetters of the people. In the mental prison freedom stands half in the bondage of archaic laws. Not until every iron bond has gone can any of our lands see Freedom's face. When we have freedom we can choose—perhaps our way is not the best; we must be free to choose. That is our claim, and those who wait to ask the use that we shall make of our freedom show that they do not understand the word they glibly speak.

GEORGE BEDBOROUGH.

London, England.

A RECENT ENGLISH VOLUME OF MERIT.

A Vision of the Future. By Jane Hume Clapperton. London: Swan Sonnenschein. Price, 2 shillings 6 pence.

This work, by the well-known author of "Scientific Meliorism" and "What Do We Women Want?" can be cordially recommended to all students of social science, and particularly to those who, like readers of LUCIFER, are strongly interested in questions relating to sex questions, eugenics and allied subjects. The book has 342 pages. The first part deals with the industrial revolution and goes on to discuss the organization of industry. Part II has chapters on the law of population, the problem of sex, eugenics or stirpiculture, marriage, parentage. Part III is a plea for a more rational and humane method in the elimination of crime. Part IV is an analysis of the evolution of the emotions. Part V deals with the education of children. Part VI is a most interesting chapter, showing forth the needs of adolescence and a way of domestic reform. Part VII has to do with religion and religious life and the primal elements in humanity's evolution.

The whole book is suffused with "the enthusiasm of humanity," yet is distinguished by a strong vein of common sense which runs through its criticisms and its proposals, as well as by its feminine delicacy of touch and treatment in working upon such difficult and complex subjects. It is a true instinct which makes mankind cherish an ideal of sensitiveness and refinement in regard to subjects of sex, and this should not be overlooked by reformers in their zeal in carrying on the holy war against the hateful, demoralizing puritan perversion of that ideal. A few extracts from Miss Clapperton's book will give readers a taste of her quality.

"At the present moment, society has no scientific sex-philosophy whatever. It affects to be governed by puritanism—a vague doctrine belonging to the past history of the race and not in connection with any ethical code directed to the development of goodness through a careful regard to the happiness of man and the satisfaction of his normal human nature. Puritanism, whether affected or real, spreads abroad hypocrisy, deceit, lying; it tends to licentiousness in men and the utter defilement of women."

"Puritanism ignores the sexual needs of the young."

"The healthy functional and emotional life of love and gratified passion is the best preventive of hysteria, chlorosis, love melancholy, and other unhappy ailments to which our young women are cruelly and barbarously exposed, and which I do not hesitate to say make them in many cases feel their youth to be an insufferable martyrdom. There are no less serious evils which overtake masculine youth."

"The facts of prostitution alone would amply suffice to put puritanism out of court in social reform."

"The number of London prostitutes was estimated at 80,000 in the year 1870."

"Celibacy is a restraint commended and advised by Mr. Francis Galton. Scientific meliorism deliberately rejects it, for celibacy is a vital evil, destroying individual happiness and tending obviously to social disorder. Wherever love in its highest form exists, between two individuals, union is eminently desirable; but if either or both be afflicted by disease or hereditary taint, the sacrifice demanded of them is to carefully abstain from giving birth to children."

"The evils that infest and corrupt our social life, and that man must deliberately uproot and eliminate before general happiness becomes possible, are: poverty, i. e., a lifelong struggle to obtain food, shelter, clothing; the birth of individuals weak and unfit; disease, premature death; enforced celibacy; late marriage; drunkenness; disorganization of family life; prostitution; war; industrial competition; social injustice and inequality; individual tyranny; crime; barbarous treatment of criminals; disrespect of natural function and consequent injury to health; conventional folly; social repression of innocent enjoyment; religious bigotry; feebleness of religious guidance and confusion of religious thought."

For the practical remedies proposed for the cure of these evils—and the book abounds with a wealth of profitable and sagacious suggestions of methods of reform—we must refer the reader to Miss Clapperton's pages, with the assurance that their perusal will yield an ample measure of pleasure and instruction. F. W.

CART AND HORSE—WHICH IS WHICH?

The state secretary of the Socialist party in Florida thinks, "as a Socialist," that LUCIFER, in advocating women's freedom without reference to industrial issues, has got the cart before the horse. If this official utterance be mistaken, it is seriously; for the cart will not draw the horse—except, perhaps, down hill—and the practical purpose of social reform requires us to strike at the taproot of abuses rather than the branches, which have often been ranker for a little pruning. There is no other country, with elective legislators, which would stand as much executive lawlessness as does America.

It is now a hundred and eight years since Malthus published his thousand-times "refuted" and always unrefuted "Essay on Population." He showed that where conditions were most favorable to increase, population doubled, by genesis, every twenty-five years. He observed that the conditions producing this rapid multiplication were, by hypothesis, less favorable than those of Godman's Utopia, where all were to be guaranteed a living by the State. He proved, irrefragably, as any one who can use a logarithmic table may convince himself in five minutes, that no advances in agricultural methods would make the continuation of such an increase practicable; that, not in geologic aons, as some writers who know nothing about it suppose, but in less time than has passed since the Western Roman Empire went to pieces, it would, if its continuance were practicable, which, therefore, this is not, have stocked the globe beyond all possibility of finding food or even space. The tendency thus rushing towards an unattainable result, of course encounters checks; nor is there any difficulty about seeing what they are. War, with its sequelæ, such as slavery, landlordism and other tyrannies, is the chief. It is but necessary to remove that, without removing the original cause of mischief, as has been done in India and Ireland, in order to substitute pestilence and famine. But to all these checks (the positive) there is an alternative (the preventive). If a people can be taught the necessity of restraining the propagative instinct, that nation's progress is possible. If not, there is nothing ahead but decline. Godwin's mistake was in not recognizing this. That our State Socialists make exactly the same mistake is evident when they say that LUCIFER puts the cart before the horse. And because the common sense of worldly people does not recognize the impossibility of providing for indefinite increase, State Socialism, where most successful, as in France and Germany, succeeds only in demonstrating its own impracticable character. Instead of introducing a Fool's Paradise, where the soul that sinneth shall not die, it degenerates into a mere political party, puttering over initiatives and referenda, and ages of consent, and pensions, and other makeshifts, while things in general remain as they were.

But though Godwin did not see the necessity which Malthus saw, he did see that, on other grounds, the emancipation of women was demanded by our best interests. And those who have learned, not from him or Malthus alone, but both, see that the emancipation of women solves the problem. That peace, equality and prosperity should coincide, it is necessary that other agencies should be restrained. Men cannot be expected to restrain it of their own accord—smart and ambitious men will, but not the kind of men whom they enslave. But emancipated women will restrain it for them. Since the bourgeois system partially emancipated women by giving them remunerative work, this has been done to an extent which alarms Roosevelt. A radicalism which would throw them out of productive occupations and have the State provide for children, is a delusion and a snare. To Anarchistic Socialism, of the American type, the Malthusian theory, as John Stuart Mill predicted, is not an objection, but the most powerful of weapons. C. L. JAMES.

HOME LOVE—FREE LOVE

Our interest in Moses Harman, who is now serving a term in the Illinois penitentiary for expressing his views too plainly in print on the sex question, seems to cause one of our friends to think that we indorsed every conclusion that he advanced. This is a mistake. If a member of one of the political parties was put in jail for expressing his views on a political subject, would it necessarily follow that the persons who desired his release indorsed those views which got him into trouble?

The sex question has been shrouded in vulgar mystery about long enough. The public are demanding, and must have, knowledge on this subject. Moses Harman was trying to supply this knowledge to the best of his ability. The critical friend of ours alluded to, says that Harman advocated too much freedom; that such views would eliminate marriage, and thus destroy home and home life. I do not believe that such results would be possible. I believe that education on this question would, in every case, make the home ties stronger. And why, too, so much talk about free love? I am sure that no one wants that kind of love that can be bought. It must be free, or it is not worth having. That is the only kind of love that ever has made and ever will make a home permanently happy. Those perverts who advocate promiscuity under the name of free love are breaking every law of God or Nature and fully deserve the degeneracy that quickly takes their kind into oblivion. But we should remember that it is the enslavement of love, so-called; it is the turning of this human emotion into a marketable value, that has resulted in so much misery and general deterioration physically, mentally and morally.

Any man who advocates theories which strike at the home, is a public enemy of the worst sort. All normal boys and girls look forward with pleasurable anticipation to the time when they will have a home of their own. The home instinct is very strong in many species of birds and animals. The desire for a home, or the desire to mate, is an instinct. Our present educational methods are devoted largely to the elimination of this instinct, and as a result, the more education, so-called, the fewer homes you find.

The home should be the heaven of our earthly existence. It should be the ultimate outcome of every normal human life. Within its sphere should be realized all the exquisite outcome of every normal human life. Within its sphere should be realized all the exquisite anticipations of our early dreams. It must be admitted that the hard, cold, stern realism of the average home life does not fulfill our anticipations. These results have come about because of prudery, because men blindly enter the realms of home life. Comstockery is to blame for marital unhappiness. It is this vicious nastiness that has allowed men and women to mate in ignorance of all the laws appertaining to this relation. Moses Harman, now seventy-five years of age, shows by his features and fine head of white hair that his life has been clean and wholesome, and whatever his theories may be or have been, I do not believe they will do otherwise than make the home ties stronger and more permanent. It is to be hoped that his imprisonment will help to call the attention of the public to the need of a mighty reform relative to these vastly important subjects. —Physical Culture.

Tendency to disease and tendency to vice are of similar origin, and neither can be cured by punishment, vengeance or imprisonment; but all tendency to disease, peculiarities, fears, weaknesses and vices in young or old can be cured or modified by favorable environment, suggestive therapeutics, massage and physical culture.—Medical Brief.

Do not talk about disgrace from a thing being known when the disgrace is that the thing should exist.—Falconer.

TWO ANTIQUARIAN DOCUMENTS OF INTEREST.

While considering the matter of Adelia Queenie I happened to see the following in a magazine, which I will call

EXHIBIT I.

"The following letter was written by Rev. Dr. Cotton Mather in 1681. The original is in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society:

"'To the Aged and Beloved John Higginson:

"'There be now at sea a shipp (for our friend Elias Holcroft of London did advise me by the last packet that it would be some time in August) called the Welcome, which has aboard it a hundred or more of the hereticks and maligsants called Quakers, with William Penn the scamp at the head of them. The General Court has accordingly given secret orders to Master Malachi Huxett of the brig Porpoise to waylay said Welcome as near the end of Cod as may be and make captives of the Penn and his ungodly crew, so that the Lord may be glorified and not mocked on the soil of this new country with the heathen worshipps of these people. Much spoil may be made by selling the whole lot to Barbadoes, where slaves fetch good prices in rumme and sugar, and we shall not only do the Lord great service be punishing the wicked, but shall make great gayne [gain], for his ministers and people. Yours in the bonds of Christ. COTTON MATHER.'"

Exhibit II brings us into the future, 250 years hence, say A. D. 2155. It is not hard to imagine some one idly turning the leaves of a periodical and noticing something like the following:

EXHIBIT II.

"Below is given an extract from a legal document written A. D. 1905 by one of the officials of the old American republic. The official was a person named Higgins, and it appears that under the curious forms of government that existed in those days one man could sometimes overrule the wishes of a state or nation. The original document is preserved in the archives of the Historical Society of Kankakee, and its authenticity is unquestioned. The document in part reads as follows:

"'GOVERNOR HIGGINS' VETO.

"'This bill presents an astonishing proposition, but the most astonishing thing about it is that it passed both houses unnoticed and without opposition or discussion.

"'It is an insult to every faithful wife and to womanhood itself. The bill recites that Adelia Queenie is the illegitimate infant child of Charles Bell Barker and Adelia Gertrude Stringer, and enacts that the child is thereby made the legitimate child of its said parents in all respects, the same as if said child had been born in lawful wedlock.

"'The father at the time of the birth of the child had and now has a lawful wife living. He and the child's mother, with brazen impudence and utter disregard of the rights of the lawful wife and the rules of morality, unite in a petition to the legislature to legitimatize the issue of their lawless love.

"'If this bill should be approved, a legal status would be given to a semi-polygamous relation, and concubinage would become an honorable estate.'"

SUSAN B. ANTHONY'S VOTE.

An incident in the life of the late Susan B. Anthony, to which she delighted to refer, and which seems to have received but passing notice in the newspaper sketches of her life, was her arrest and trial on the charge of illegal voting. The Rochester "Post-Express" thus relates the incident:

The trial began in the United States Circuit Court at Canandaigua, June 17, 1873, upon an indictment charging her with having "knowingly, wrongfully, and unlawfully" voted for a representative in Congress in the eighth ward of Rochester "without having a lawful right to vote in said election district, the said Susan B. Anthony being then and there a person of the female sex as she, the said Susan B. Anthony, then and there well knew." Justice Ward Hunt presided; the prosecution was conducted by Richard Crowley, United States district attorney, and the defense by Henry R. Selden, of this city, formerly lieutenant-governor of the state and a member of the Court of Appeals. He was one of the ablest lawyers that ever practiced at the Rochester bar. Mr. Selden was assisted by John Van Voorhis. The trial was short; it proved conclusively that Miss Anthony had voted. Then a very elaborate argument was made by Mr. Selden. He attempted to show that she had a right to vote under the constitution of the United States, and then argued that she was guilty of no crime, even if she had no right to vote, because she thought she had a right, and had been so advised by counsel.

Then a remarkable thing occurred. Although a judge is not presumed to make up his mind until counsel has been heard, no sooner had Mr. Selden concluded than Justice Hunt drew from his breast pocket an elaborate written opinion, which he proceeded to read. He held that Miss Anthony had no right to vote, and was not to be excused by the plea of ignorance; but he then declared that there was no question for the consideration of the jury; he refused to allow Miss Anthony's counsel to address the jury and he directed the jury to return a verdict of guilty! Mr. Selden insisted that his direction was one "which no court had a right to give in a criminal case," but the clerk, under the direction of the judge, said: "Gentlemen of the jury, hearken to your verdict as the court hath recorded it: You say you find the defendant guilty of the offense charged: so say you all." No answer was made by any of them; neither by word nor sign did a single juryman indicate his concurrence. Mr. Selden asked that the jury be polled. "That cannot be allowed," said the court, and added: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are discharged," whereupon the jurymen left the box. Miss Anthony then made a speech, which the court endeavored to interrupt and prevent, and then sentenced her to "pay a fine of $100 and costs of the prosecution." Then Miss Anthony replied: "I shall never pay a dollar of your unjust penalty." Justice Hunt amiably remarked: "Madam, the court will not order you committed until your fine is paid." There were a great many things that Justice Hunt did not know, but among the things that he did know was this, that if he committed Miss Anthony for failure to pay her fine, her counsel would procure a writ of habeas corpus and bring before another court the lawfulness of a conviction without a jury.

Miss Anthony, of course, never paid either the fine or the costs of prosecution, and no appeal was ever taken.

A MENACE TO THE REPUBLIC.

The air of the great republic of America has been purified by its postoffice clerks in Chicago and Washington. Moses Harman, 75 years and six months old, is imprisoned at Joliet, Ill., for one year at hard labor, for publishing in his paper, LUCIFER, discussions by men and women, eminent in letters and science, on race degeneracy—its causes and cures. Contemplating the rapid multiplication of prisons, almshouses, asylums for imbeciles and lunatics, of the increasing weight of burdens upon the right-minded and strong-bodied, the editor of LUCIFER considers the question to be one of first importance.

Very few will disagree with Mr. Harman's premises, while very many will disagree with his theories and conclusions. But by no law under heaven has any man in the United States of America the shadow of a right to say Mr. Harman shall not express his opinion, without molestation. The spirit of the American people is dead within them if they submit to such an outrage. Thus any opinion on any subject that a mail clerk doesn't know the alphabet about may be suppressed according to his limited knowledge of obscenity or heresy. It was mere heresy in Mr. Harman's case. The mail-bag censor said to him, "Your ideas would overturn society," therefore you shall be shut up in a prison cell for one year, and the department acquiesced.

The ridiculousness of the contention has been fully shown. "The Public," published in Harman's own city, made full exposé, at the time, actually driving the Washington authorities into a corner, where they hid behind a cowardly and discourteous refusal to answer reasonable and legitimate questions.

The Boston "Woman's Journal," although not in accord with LUCIFER'S views, reprinted every line of the interdicted matter to show how puerile was the accusation.

But the point is, Shall a man, guiltless of any crime, be railroaded to the penitentiary, by government clerks acting as censors? The air of the dictatorship that vitiates Washington is poison to liberty and democracy. A storm of protest should be raised that will shake the walls of the capitol, if this be necessary, to restore one falsely imprisoned man to freedom.

The menace of graft and greed is not so threatening to the safety of the republic as this exercise of arbitrary and unwarranted power.

Mr. Harman's daughter was permitted a short visit with her father, in his cell, on the 26th of March. She found him suffering in health. He had been compelled to undergo vaccination and was ill from its effects. His cell-mate coughs continually as if from consumption. He has no employment, and paper and pencil are forbidden. Even his reading matter is censored. Some of his letters are not delivered because they speak words of praise and comfort. Says the daughter: "Write him, addressing his letters care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill."

We say: Do more than that. Moses Harman is fighting Freedom's fight—a fight for womanhood and manhood. Help him and his holy cause, not only with "words of praise and comfort," but in deeds. Help by giving according to your means, to a grand old man who, in durance vile, cannot help himself.—The Star (San Francisco.)

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

As the proposed story of the prosecutions of LUCIFER will monopolize the space in one issue of LUCIFER, we are postponing its publication to No. 1066. It is thought best to republish the "Petition" in this issue. The first attempt to suppress this paper was made twenty years ago, and has continued intermittently ever since. A full history would make interesting reading and it will be written some time in the future. At present we can give only a brief sketch. It will, perhaps, be published in a small pamphlet, similar to the Wakeman Letter. We would be glad to hear from friends who would take copies for distribution, either in LUCIFER or the pamphlet form.

TIDINGS FROM FRIENDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Many of our friends lived in San Francisco and other California towns which suffered from the earthquake. We are anxiously awaiting news of their safety. Among the few from whom we have heard are R. B. Kerr, who spent the winter in Oakland, and Mrs. E. H. Russell, of San Jose. Mr. Kerr says:

"I have got your letter of the 25th. The earthquake was not very serious here, though it sent us out to the street in our nightgowns and brought down all the chimneys. The only San Francisco Luciferites we have seen since the quake and fire are the Spradings. They were burnt out and are going to Los Angeles whenever they get their insurance money. They had seen the Cooks, who were also burnt out, and are now having a delightful holiday, camping in Golden Gate Park, and eating free meals at Uncle Sam's expense. Lydia Todd is no doubt all right, as she lives very far out. Mrs. Wermouth and Nielsen must have been burnt out, and I should think also Mrs. S. C. Smith. About the rest I can say nothing.

"We had a narrow escape of being in the thick of everything. We had decided to leave here on the day on which the earthquake occurred, and to spend the previous night with the Spradings; so that we should have been right in the midst of both quake and fire. (The quake was at 5:15 a. m.) Fortunately, God, who always watches over me in such matters, made me insist on putting off to a later day, much against Dora's will."

Of course thousands of the survivors solemnly believe that a special Providence saved them; cheerfully conscious of the fact that if he could and did save them, he could have saved those whom he allowed to perish.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Russell, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, is one of LUCIFER'S oldest friends, and is known and loved by many of our readers. Almost ninety years of age, she has demonstrated the possibility of "growing old beautifully," in every sense of the term. The following words are strongly and clearly penned:

"I am suffering with nervous prostration, the result of the dreadful experience I have passed through in the midst of the earthquake. I expected our new cottage (by the shaking it got) would fall about our ears, but it is not a great deal damaged. How sad I felt after reading your interview with your father. I sent him a letter yesterday. Dear Lillian, you are indeed doing splendidly in the manner you are getting up LUCIFER. What cruelty, that your father is not allowed to see it! Will nothing be done, I wonder, to shorten his time in prison?"

We hope our other friends will let us hear from them as soon as possible.

Just as I am sending the foregoing to the printers the following letter is received:

"SAN FRANCISCO, April 30, E. M. 306.

"On Wednesday morning, April 18, at 4:45, I heard an awful rumbling sound. At that same time my little house seemed to raise up and quiver, quake, snap, crack, and there seemed to be a splitting sound, too. I got up on my feet, but could not stand—the house seemed to squirm. I fell to my knees, but made another effort, and by holding on to window casings I finally got out of the house, out into the yard. The ground seemed to squirm like a bunch of snakes. I held onto the fence and looked around. By that time my neighbors were up, and as I only had on my night-gown I went in, brought my clothes to the door and dressed. Oh, now began the terror! No sooner had the roar of the quake subsided, when the city started to burn. The red glow stained the sky, all on the other side of the hill from our part of the city. From that moment until now I have done nothing but try to help those who were going to pieces. Day and night, through hunger and cold, terror and anguish, I have worked. My house is full of fire refugees. It has hardly a cup or plate left unbroken. Everything piled into the middle of the floor and had to be straightened out and put in its place. We had to live without fire, light or food for a long time. The city under martial law. Soldiers shooting down people that were going on errands of mercy. They love to shoot. One has enough to contend with; then we have to see those legalized murderers shoot down our friends and neighbors. What a shame! All done in the name of God and government. We are now out of water. It was shut off yesterday—said only for about twenty-four hours, but the people are afraid the water has given out. Just now a man came in and says they found a man in the reservoir; he looked as though he had been in a long time. The water smelled so badly that I could not wash my face in it, but did not know why. Oh, these awful times will surely do me. I am almost dead on my feet.

"LYDIA R. TODD, 248 Boutwell.

"P. S.—My little house is still standing, but has been dreadfully shaken."

The little home which was so nearly wrecked was the result of many days of the hardest labor performed by the hands of its owner, Lydia R. Todd. I believe she even did a part of the carpenter work herself, and a short time ago she wrote that it was almost complete, and she expected to have a house of her own and a place in which to entertain her friends. She is always ready to help others to the best of her ability, and I am sure that anything sent to her will be put to good use.

The plant of the San Francisco "Star," and all the property of its noble editor, James H. Barry, was destroyed. It is to be hoped that he will be able to resume publication, for the "Star" cannot be spared. A copy of the last number issued, dated April 14, reached us on the morning after the earthquake. The first words I read were an appeal for help for the sufferers from the eruption of Mount Vesuvius. "Those who have read Bulwer Lytton's graphic description of 'The Last Days of Pompeii,'" he says, "will form some idea of the horrors of it all, and their hearts will beat in sympathy for the dead and their purse-strings be loosened to give what aid they can to the living, terror-crazed sufferers."

When the "Star" is released it will surely receive the welcome which it so abundantly deserves.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 6 months and 28 days old. He has served 73 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. His task at present is breaking stone.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

LUCIFER No 1042, June 22, 1905—a double number—was accepted, weighed and the money for postage received at the Chicago postoffice. The edition was then confiscated and sent to the dead-letter office at Washington, to be destroyed. No notice was given the office at Washington, to be destroyed. No notice was given the publisher, and not until he received complaints of non-receipt by subscribers was he aware of the fact that their papers had not been sent to them. On being questioned, the superintendent of second-class mails at Chicago said he had been instructed by his superiors at Washington to read a copy of every issue of LUCIFER and confiscate all which were, in his opinion, unmailable.

LUCIFER Nos. 1043, 1045, 1046 and 1050 were held to be unmailable by Mr. Hull, the aforesaid superintendent, and copies deposited for mailing were destroyed. The higher officials in Washington concurred in the decisions in regard to these numbers.

Nos. 1053 and 1056 were held to be unmailable, but the department at Washington instructed the local officials that hereafter copies of "unmailable" issues should not be destroyed, but should be returned to the publisher.

No. 1058 was "unmailable" in the estimation of Mr. Hull, but it was a case of "when doctors disagree," for the Washington officials overruled his decision.

It should not be necessary to point out the dangers to the freedom of the press and the liberties of the people which are involved in thus making one man prosecuting attorney, judge and jury, with the power to deny the right of transmission to any publication which in his opinion is of a mistaken tendency.

And what are we going to do about it? Continue the publication of LUCIFER.

And what are YOU going to do about it? Shall we have your assistance?

LILLIAN HARMAN.

MOSES HARMAN'S MISSION.

Not as a writer nor as an author will Moses Harman be remembered in history, although he has won enviable fame as both; but as a liberator will he be known to future generations.

In his prison cell at Joliet he is today the most powerful advocate of sexual purity and the freedom of the press. His enemies are doing infinitely more for his cause than he could possibly do without their opposition.

Such men as Harman, born to serve, must go to jail, to the rack and the scaffold. This has always been so and always will, as long as a large majority of mankind are subject to the will of a small minority—as long as the world is ruled by ignorance and superstition.

To shed light has always been a crime, for the simple reason that light is a menace to the rule of darkness. If Moses Harman had shed as much blood as he has light he would be honored as some great conqueror, and instead of lying in a prison pen in the sunset of his life he would be feted as a popular idol and his statue would adorn the parks of the cities. Better a thousand times this pure man in the stripes of a felon than an apostate in purple and fine linen.

It is the very irony of fate that this apostle of purity should be punished for alleged impurity; that the gross and sensual in our sex life and social relations, so abhorrent to his refined and sensitive nature, and against which he has waged unceasing war, should have sufficient power to so distort his features as to have him appear the author of their being. The vulgar, ignorant censors of Moses Harman have no conception of his real mission; he is as great as they are small, and is destined to live as nobly as they are doomed to perish ignominiously.

From Jesus Christ to Moses Harman the fate of all true men has been the same; from Calvary to Joliet not one has escaped.

Not lightly are men considered who essay to serve humanity. The severest tests are applied to them and the extremest penalties imposed upon them, but the Moses Harmans no more shrink from the one or the other than if they were approaching their crowning festival.

In his prison garb today our elder brother is a powerful instrumentality in setting the dead hearts of the people to beating and opening their eyes to what is going on in the world. Every hour of his sentence will hasten by a year the end of mental and moral despotism.

Such freaks as Anthony Comstock are the products of a perverted social order and an abnormal civilization. Freedom will finally be achieved in spite of all the insects that light upon the chariot wheels of progress.

The capitalist system, based upon the private ownership by the few of the earth and the fulness thereof, is the prolific parent of ignorance and all the ills that ignorance entails, and when this is overthrown, as it certainly will be, such monstrous crimes as Moses Harman is now the victim of will be unknown.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

A special number, devoted to Moses Harman, is promised by the editor of "Soundview," at an early date—probably in June or July. Special articles and a portrait will appear. Mr. Rader will divide receipts with LUCIFER on all orders which mention this notice. Price, 10 cents a copy, $1 a dozen, $7 a hundred. Contents and further particulars will be given in an early issue. Address L. E. Rader, Otalla, Wash.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

FLAVIUS J. VAN VOORHIS, Indianapolis, Ind.—Will you send me two or three copies of petition for signatures? It does seem such an outrage against right reason and common sense that it is hard to be patient with such injustice administered in the name of justice.

HERMAN KUEHN.—Please send me a couple of copies containing the Parkhurst letter. I am getting some letters from people who seem to think that it was all in dead earnest, and I've forgotten what I said that could have given rise to that impression. Perhaps I'm not a success as an "ironicalist."

S. E.—I shall be able to send in a few names on the petition. I think the petition one of the best missionary documents and hope you will keep it standing. Better still, if you could manage to run your father's photo on reverse side. Please send me a few copies of last issue if available, and give my compliments to your father with best wishes.

LAURA H. EARLE, Mary Esther, Fla.—I enclose $1, to be used in any way that seems best to you, and I wish it were not so little. I did not believe that it would actually come to the point of your father's being put behind the bars. I suppose scarcely anybody did. Each new outrage of an irresponsible government is a fresh surprise. I have been glad to have your father's picture in the paper, never having seen it before. The face seems to express the man. I shall write to your father, although the cares and labor of my present life—that of a pioneer on virgin soil—gives me hardly time to write.

W. N. FERRIS, Big Rapids, Mich.—To my sorrow I have read of the trial and conviction of Moses Harman. I do not hesitate about signing the petition. I am in favor of free speech and I am certainly in favor of discussing sex questions just as frankly as I would discuss political questions. It is our only salvation. I can name publications that from the government standpoint ought to have been prohibited years ago. Had they been prohibited they would have been no less worthy of consideration. I have read numbers of LUCIFER. Since Mr. Harman's imprisonment I have contemplated becoming a subscriber. I sincerely trust that the specimen copies you speak of in your letter will arrive. They are not here yet. I can assure you that I feel deeply for Mr. Harman. Will send petition as soon as I can.

H. F. EBERS, Cazadero, Cal.—I inclose $1 to pay on my subscription. I have cut out the petition printed in the "Truth Seeker." Will try to get people to sign it. If you can spare some of No. 1058 or any other printed matter to give to people that sign the petition, then please send them to me.

[We will gladly send, on application, copies of LUCIFER and of the Wakeman Letter and Post pamphlet to friends who can use them when asking for signatures to the petition. In this way many who have never even thought of the questions at issue will have their interest aroused. Of course money is needed to pay expenses of publication and distribution, but as long as the literature is on hand and we have stamps for postage, no applicant will be denied merely because unable to contribute toward the expenses.]

C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kan.—I have so much to say—more than can be said in a letter—of your imprisonment. Let that go for shame to our country, our people, our authorities, our laws and our creeds. With the press literally rocking with disgusting sensualism unrebuked by Comstock or McAfee, the postal department tries to destroy the work of a Harman, Craddock, Berrien, Walsbrooker, Heywood, Wilmans, Whitman, Jesus. But it cannot, it shall not. The people are being stirred with a vital influx as never before. Everywhere limitations are breaking down before the spirit of brotherhood, companionship, love. The age of reconciliation is dawning. What if you are imprisoned? What if they confiscate our LUCIFER, robbing you of your production, me of my paper, for which I paid? These are but petty imitations of the fierce persecutors of the past. . . . You, dear friend, have made a glorious record. I am proud of knowing you, of having helped in a small way the good cause, of having been a party to the starving and maintenance of LUCIFER. You have done and are doing more good. Humanity is better for your work, your devotion, your heroism.

E. L., Cleveland, Ohio.—I take a sincere interest in the paper and the cause it stands for, and I appreciate Adeline Champney's thought that "Moses Harman is suffering imprisonment for me!" I cannot tell you how very earnestly I wish for the advancement of knowledge on the sex question. All the world is suffering through ignorance of it, but the torch-light of truth is still too strong for the eyes of the many—that is why Mr. Harman is in prison today. But many hearts are throbbing with pain and indignation because of it, and I feel and hope that a great good may come of it. I come in touch with but few people, and most of them conservative, but they one and all express surprise and regret that such a thing can be true. If Comstock must suppress obscene literature, I wonder why he does not begin with the daily newspapers of any large city.

WALTER REEEN, Omaha, Neb.—I inclose my subscription to LUCIFER for the next year and trust that you will experience the same success in managing LUCIFER for the next ten months as you had some years ago, when Moses Harman put the management of the paper in your hands. This subscription makes me a constant subscriber from the fall of 1894. Under another cover I mail last week's issue of the "Truth Seeker," with Captain French's poem on "Miss Cleopatra Cornstalk," and if same is not too long would suggest that all or part find its way into your columns. Anthony Comstock is the real enemy; it is he who has caused the theatrical managers, booksellers and McFadden et al. all the trouble, and such a poem is cutting and can be readily recalled to mind. I do not know if you have any subscribers in this vicinity, but hope you have. I have never destroyed a copy of LUCIFER or "Truth Seeker," or, for that matter, any reform journal, but have always scattered the seed here, there and everywhere.

KNOWLEDGE IS THE BASIS OF TRUE MODESTY.

I have conversed, as man with man, with medical men on anatomical subjects, and compared the proportions of the human body with artists—yet such modesty did I meet with that I was never reminded by word or look of my sex, of the absurd rules which make modesty a pharisaical cloak of weakness. And I am persuaded that in the pursuit of knowledge, women would never be insulted by sensible men, and rarely by men of any description, if they did not by mock modesty remind them that they were women; actuated by the same spirit as the Portuguese ladies who would think their charms insulted if, when left alone with a man, he did not at least attempt to be grossly familiar with their persons. Men are not always men in the company of women, nor would women always remember that they were women if they were allowed to acquire more understanding. As a sex, women are more chaste than men; and as modesty is the effect of chastity, they may deserve to have this virtue ascribed to them in rather an appropriate sense; yet I must be allowed to add a hesitating if, for I doubt whether chastity will produce modesty, though it may propriety of conduct, when it is merely a respect for the opinion of the world, and when coquetry and love-lorn tales of novelists employ the thoughts. Nay, from experience and reason I should be led to expect to meet with more modesty among men than women, simply because men exercise their understandings more than women.—Mary Wollstonecraft.

Wherever bibliolatry has prevailed, bigotry and cruelty have accompanied it. It lies at the root of the deep-seated, sometimes disguised, but never absent, antagonism of all the varieties of ecclesiasticism to the freedom of thought and to the spirit of scientific investigation. To those who look upon ignorance as one of the chief sources of evil, and hold veracity, not merely in act, but in thought, to be the one condition of true progress, whether moral or intellectual, it is clear that the biblical idol must go the way of all other idols. Of infallibility in all shapes, lay or clerical [as to sexual ethics or otherwise], it is needful to iterate with more than Catonic pertinacity, "Delenda est."—Thomas Huxley.

Full opportunity for full development is the inalienable right of all. He who denies it is a tyrant; he who does not demand it is a coward; he who is indifferent to it is a slave; he who does not desire it is dead.—Debs.

A PETITION FOR PARDON OF MOSES HARMAN.

To the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States:

Moses Harman, editor, of Chicago, is now serving a sentence of one year in the prison at Joliet, Ill., imposed by Judge Landis in the United States District Court of the Northern District of Illinois, on June 29, 1905. Mr. Harman was convicted June 16, 1905, on the charge of mailing obscene literature, and the sentence affirmed on appeal. The prisoner began to serve his sentence March 1, 1906.

We, the undersigned, now ask for speedy pardon for the following reasons:

1. Mr. Harman, now 75 years of age, is ilfy fitted to bear unnecessary and undue punishment, and it is a hardship that will probably sacrifice his life. His sentence is excessive, or far exceeds any possible injury done by the prisoner to the postal service or any human being.

2. He is a natural born reformer; he has been a teacher, preacher, editor and reformer for fifty years, and proved himself an earnest, honest, steadfast, brave and unflinching Garrison type of man; and he is manifestly suffering now, as hundreds have before him, "for opinion's sake." We think it is time for a "free country" to cease making martyrs for a free press.

3. Mr. Harman has never catered to salacious tastes or to morbid minds in search of obscenity; his publications are of great value and appeal only to the few serious, thoughtful people who are students of important and unsolved problems in sociology.

4. No evidence has been offered of any actual harm done to man, woman or child by Mr. Harman's publications; the alleged evil is all fictitious or problematical.

5. Mr. Harman has been treated as an obstinate, unrepentant criminal; whereas he is simply firm in the conviction that he stands for an important right and duty, as did George Washington and Harman's own contemporaries, such as William Lloyd Garrison and Susan B. Anthony, and many others.

6. Mr. Harman believes in applying scientific methods in stirpiculture, for the improvement of the human race, and in so doing gives no more real cause for offense than do the publications of the United States department of agriculture offered to stock breeders and daily sent by mail. It is an unfair and unjust discrimination that throws Mr. Harman's paper out of the mail and puts him into the jail for reprinting United States official documents, while the United States officals go right on mailing the same, though they are "condemned" as obscene by the postoffice department.

7. No man should ever be punished under a law that is so uncertain that guilt depends upon the speculative opinion of a jury as to a psychological tendency, and that is the substance of the judicial test of obscenity. No man can know from reading the statute whether a given publication is criminal, because the law does not inform us what will be the jury's opinion of the psychological tendency, nor furnish either the public or the jury with a standard of judgment.

8. Such convictions as that of Mr. Harman do much to undermine respect for the administration of justice, and the pardon asked should be granted as promptly and for the same reasons as moved President McKinley to pardon Charles C. Moore, editor of the "Blue Grass Blade," who was convicted in Cincinnati on a similar pretense of "obscenity" under very similar conditions, and for the same reasons which also moved President McKinley to pardon Leroy Berrier, likewise convicted in Minneapolis.

9. The imprisonment of this aged reformer is a misapplication of the law, a disgrace to our republic and its main purpose, "the preservation of liberty." We therefore respectfully ask the President to bring this disgrace to an end with the least possible delay.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

A Child of Love.

BY MARGARET GRANT.

The life history of a girl who comes into the world marked by the Bar Sinister of Love Out of Wedlock, and who has a brave fight for existence without asking any favors from the world because of her sex. Some of life's problems are brought home to her and she is compelled to try to solve them.

Which is Nobler, Motherhood in Love or Legal Prostitution? Must a Girl be a Weakling Just Because She is a Girl? Is a Man a Woman's Natural Enemy, or Her Natural Friend? Must a Woman Traffic in Her Body in Order to Live?

These and other questions come into her life, as they come into the lives of all women; and bravely, nobly, she tries to solve them; bravely and nobly she lives to live a sweet, pure life.

Her story is a romance, full of temptation, trial, danger. Born in a workhouse in New England, of a union unsanctioned by the law, she is left an orphan at a tender age and puts on boy's clothing in order that she may earn a living.

A sea voyage and a shipwreck take her into old Japan before the days of its modern civilization. There startling ideas of NUDITY, MARRIAGE, DIVORCE are brought to her attention; and she is taught to see that many of the ideas prevalent in her own land lead to impurity instead of purity.

Finally, filled with notions which are in direct variance with those of her own country, she returns home to fight for her existence, friendless and endowed with that beauty which is considered the lonely girl's curse in our land of boasted civilization.

But she is well equipped for the struggle. She is physically as strong as a boy, so that if need be she can give blow for blow. Love MAY LURE, but she walks through dangers with a firm step, guided by a LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE. Sex has no mystery for her; she is pure and strong because SHE KNOWS.

Three young men, fighting like herself for life, become her companions. She shocks them. They live alone without a chaperon. They try to force their moral system on her; she teaches them hers. MORAL HEALTH contends with MORAL DISEASE.

The adventures of little Margaret in old Japan, being authentic, hold the reader entranced. It is strange and new story she tells of the startling ways of a race which within twenty-five years has leaped from world obscurity to a first place in the ranks of world powers. She found herself in a land where all the men were gentlemen, all the women ladies; where marriage and divorce were private affairs; where children were never struck in anger; where sex matters were no more mysteries than food matters.

BRIEF HISTORY OF LATEST ATTEMPT TO SUPPRESS ALL FREE AND FAIR DISCUSSION OF RACE IMPROVEMENT.

POSTAL INQUISITION SECURES THE CONVICTION AND IMPRISONMENT OF MOSES HARMAN, PHILOSOPHER, SOCIOLOGIST AND REFORMER, ON THE FALSE AND MALICIOUS CHARGE OF PUBLISHING OBSCENE LITERATURE.

To the shame of America be it said that one of the purest-minded men the world has ever known is today serving, in the penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois, a sentence of one year's imprisonment at hard labor for the circulation of literature held by a detective, a prosecuting attorney, a judge and twelve jurymen to be "obscene, lewd and indecent."

Those who know Moses Harman, the venerable editor of LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER, know that his mind is incapable of harboring an impure or lewd thought. The writer of these lines has known Mr. Harman intimately for the last ten years and has talked with him on almost every conceivable subject of interest to humanity, including race culture and the relations of the sexes. In all that time never have I heard him tell a lewd story, or utter any word commonly regarded as vulgar or indecent.

To the mind of Moses Harman sex is too holy, too important, too significant to be discussed flippantly. In his mind there is nothing holier or more worthy of reverence than maternity. To use his own words, his battle which he has waged for more than a quarter of a century in behalf of coming generations is for "the right to be born well."

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE WORD LUCIFER.

He has waged this battle for more than twenty-five years in his paper called LUCIFER. It is my personal opinion that much of the persecution to which he has been subjected is due to the Latin name of his paper, the name Lucifer in the mind of the average reader connoting Satan, the scriptural devil. With this interpretation of the name, the shallow-minded jump to the conclusion not only that the paper is a vicious publication but that the publisher admits it by defiantly calling it by the "devil's name."

This question has been threshed over time and again in these columns, the editor contending correctly that the word Lucifer literally means the Light Bearer. In the issue of his paper of July 13, 1901, the editor said concerning a proposition to change the paper's name:

"For this issue it is sufficient, perhaps, to refer our readers to Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, edition of 1886, page 792. There the reader will find why and how it is that this most beautiful and suggestive, perhaps, of all the scientific names adopted from the Latin tongue, came to be used by the church as the synonym for the theologic concept of the 'Arch enemy of God and man.' The definitions there given of Lucifer and its cognate words, Lucid, Lucifer, Luciferous, Luciform, etc., closing with this comment, make the best answer to our critics:

"'The application of this passage in Isaiah [referring to Lucifer] to Satan and to the fall of the apostate angels, is one of those gross perversions of sacred writ which so extensively obtain, and which are to be traced to a proneness to seek for more in a given passage than it really contains—a disposition to be influenced by sound rather than sense, and an implicit faith in received interpretations.'"

UNRELENTING OPPONENT OF SEXUAL SLAVERY.

Those who got beyond their first alarm at the paper's name and gave it a careful reading soon became convinced of the absolute sincerity of its editor and of his lofty impulse to free woman from the sex slavery to which she is doomed by unjust marriage laws.

It is a common charge made by those who do not understand the teachings of Moses Harman that he seeks to destroy marriage and the home. Nothing could be more false—because it is a half-truth. He does seek to destroy any marriage which makes woman the mere chattel of man and deprives her of the control of her own person. He does seek to destroy miserable, unhappy homes, in which it is inhumane to bring up children, and to substitute for them homes founded on mutual love, in which only desired and welcome children are born.

ATTEMPTS TO SUPPRESS LUCIFER.

The offense for which Moses Harman is now in prison was the publication of two articles, both written by contributors, one of them as far back as February 26, 1903. For more than a year prior to his conviction he was harassed by the postoffice department, which resorted to various means to stop the publication of his paper. For a time Assistant Postmaster General Madden deprived it of its legal right to admission to the mails as second-class matter. This bureaucratic ruling was made on the plea that the paper was published merely to advertise books which its publisher had for sale. Mr. Madden was asked to state just what proportion of advertising of other persons than its publisher a paper must carry to entitle it to admission at second-class postage rates. But he declined to give a definite answer.

For many weeks the editor was compelled to pay 1 cent postage on each copy of LUCIFER sent to subscribers, but the fight against this manifestly unjust discrimination was carried to Washington and Madden was forced to revoke his ruling and readmit the paper at second-class rates.

Then followed a campaign of censoring the paper at the Chicago postoffice. Several issues were confiscated and destroyed on the charge that they contained obscene matter. One of the articles so declared obscene by Paul Hull, superintendent of second-class mail is the Chicago postoffice, was an editorial reprinted from the "Woman's Journal," published in Washington, D. C., by Alice Stone Blackwell. Naturally the charge that this editorial was obscene aroused the indignation of Mrs. Blackwell, and her paper vigorously denounced the hypocrisy of the attempt to suppress LUCIFER by false charges that the articles it published were obscene.

GOVERNMENT REPORT DECLARED OBSCENE.

Another article condemned as obscene was a brief extract from a report of the United States bureau of animal industry, which is issued by authority of congress and distributed by mail throughout the country by the thousands. But "the king can do no wrong"; therefore Mr.

Hull held that, although the government has the right to circulate obscene literature to farmers to guide them in the breeding of live stock, Moses Harman has no right to discuss in LUCIFER the important subject of the improvement of the human race. Among other articles declared obscene by Mr. Hull were various contributions by refined and intelligent men and women which discussed prenatal culture and sex ethics in manner removed the farthest possible from pornographic suggestion.

When repeated protests were made against this unrighteous censorship the declaration was made by one of the officials of the postoffice department that any discussion of the sex relations in a publication of general circulation is obscene. Appeals against Mr. Hull's refusal to admit the paper to the mails were made repeatedly, and at last the postoffice department, discovering that Mr. Harman was determined never to abandon his fight for justice, reversed one of Mr. Hull's rulings and declared that one of the articles which he had called obscene was not obscene. That practically ended the postoffice censorship. Of course, every issue of the paper still is read carefully before it is admitted to the mail, but no issue has been rejected since Mr. Hull's action was overruled.

As a matter of justice to Mr. Hull, it must be stated that when he received word that his ruling had been reversed by the department he said:

"Well, I am glad of it. It takes the responsibility off my shoulders. I acted according to my best judgment, and now that my ruling has been reversed it is up to the higher officials to pass on the admissibility of the paper."

INDICTED BY THE FEDERAL GRAND JURY.

Moses Harman was indicted by the federal grand jury for the northern district of Illinois on May 15, 1905, on a charge of publishing certain articles in violation of section 3893 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that "every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, print, or other publication of an indecent character" is unmailable matter, and that "any person who shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery anything declared by this section to be nonmailable * * * shall for each and every offense be fined, upon conviction thereof, not more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Two articles published in LUCIFER were complained of. One, entitled "The Fatherhood Question," was published February 26, 1903, over the signature "T. U. A." The object of this article was "to demonstrate that by a rational interpretation of the phenomena of sexual reproduction every prospective mother has the right, in the interest of her child," to select the best possible conditions for its production.

Of course, it is advisable for the farmer to provide the best possible conditions for breeding live stock; it is eminently fitting that the artisan should secure the best possible conditions for the production of his masterpieces. But to suggest that a woman, in the interest of the future of humanity, should demand the best possible conditions for the production of her child, according to the verdict of the jury which convicted Moses Harman, is a crime deserving of penitentiary sentence.

The entire article published over the initials T. U. A. was couched in inoffensive language and discussed the subject much as it is discussed by Darwin in his "Descent of Man." Had the article been submitted to any metropolitan daily for publication in the Sunday issue it probably would have been accepted and published as a matter of vital interest to humanity, and no one would have dreamed that there was the least suggestion of obscenity in it. The temptation to cite articles of this kind which have been published in the great newspapers and magazines of the country is strong, but I must resist it because of the limitations of space.

NOTED WOMAN SOCIOLOGIST AN OFFENDER.

Nevertheless, I will take this one chance of being sent to the penitentiary myself. Remember the law makes it a penitentiary offense even to tell where obscene literature can be obtained. So I have already laid myself liable, according to Mr. Hull's ruling, by telling the readers of LUCIFER that the United States bureau of animal industry is circulating a book containing matter so obscene that its publication in LUCIFER caused that issue of the paper to be excluded from the mails.

I do not know that the publisher of the "Woman's Journal" would send through the mail the copy of that paper which contained the editorial which, when reproduced in LUCIFER, was condemned by Mr. Hull as obscene. But if any discussion of the sex relations in a publication is obscene, I wish to call the attention of Mr. McAfee (Comstock's Chicago agent) to the fact that the "American Journal of Sociology," March, 1906, contains an article by Elsie Clews Parsons, professor of sociology in Barnard college, which must come under the same condemnation.

This magazine is published by the University of Chicago Press, backed by Rockefeller's millions. Will Mr. McAfee please prosecute it in the interest of public morality?

The writer of the article is the most noted woman sociologist in America and is connected with the woman's branch of the great Princeton university. If the reading of Moses Harman's little paper of small circulation would, in the language of Judge Landis, "have a tendency to corrupt the minds of those in whose hands the publication might fall, whose minds are open to such immoral influences," what must be the effect on the girls of Barnard college of reading the article on "The Religious Dedication of Women," written by their respected teacher of sociology and published in the "American Journal of Sociology"?

Personally I do not consider Professor Elsie Clews Parsons' obscene than the articles which Moses Harman was sent to the penitentiary for publishing. It contains nothing that possibly could deprave any mind, and, like the articles which caused Mr. Harman's conviction, could be regarded as obscene only by a person of unclean mind. Yet if LUCIFER'S articles were obscene Professor Parsons' contribution must come under the same condemnation.

In order to prove his sincerity and to rebuke the woman whose obscene contributions to the "American Journal of Sociology" are likely to corrupt the minds of the girls of Barnard college, as well as others who read that magazine, I call on Postoffice Inspector McAfee to secure the indictment of the publisher of the "American Journal of Sociology." Will he dare do it?

ANOTHER SAMPLE OF ALLEGED OBSCENITY.

The other article specified in the indictment under which Mr. Harman was last convicted was written by Sara Crist Campbell, formerly of Illinois, but now living in Oklahoma. Mrs. Campbell is nearly seventy years old. She had reared a large family and through her own experience she knew what women suffer through ignorance of the sexual functions. "More Thoughts on Sexology" is the title of the article written by her, which was printed in LUCIFER on December 8, 1904. That the article was written by a sane, healthy-minded woman who had the good of humanity at heart and no thought of impurity is proved by the following passage from it which was cited in the indictment:

"The wrongs that have grown out of misuse of the sex nature, more than anything else, cause me to believe that there is no intelligent power higher than man and woman. No intelligent power would make a humanity and endow it with a sex nature and let it use that nature to create the idiot, the insane, the murderer, the thief, the deaf, dumb and blind, the deformed and all the other human failures.

"There is no intelligent power above man. But evolution, that irresistible force in nature, of which humanity is a part, will in time create a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness; and humanity, now endowed with reason, must be free to solve all the problems of life."

LONG BATTLE BY LUCIFER FOR HUMANITY.

Exception may be taken to Mrs. Campbell's conclusion that "there is no intelligent power above man," but the charge against her is not heresy, but obscenity. The importance of a more general study of sexology, to which LUCIFER is almost exclusively devoted, is shown in Mrs. Campbell's declaration: "The wrongs that have grown out of misuse of the sex nature, more than anything else, cause me to believe that there is no intelligent power higher than man and woman."

For more than a quarter of a century LUCIFER has been a continuous protest against the misuse of the sex nature. Can anything be more immoral, even from a conventional viewpoint, than misuse of the sex nature? Naturally one would suppose there could not Yet the whole machinery of the federal courts is put in operation by Comstock and his agents to crush out of existence the man and the paper that have done more than any other agency to correct this misuse by intelligent discussion of the sexual relations.

THE AMERICAN JOUENAL OF SOCIOLOGY.

It must not be imagined that LUCIFER is the only paper that discusses this all-important sex problem. Watch the Sunday issues of the great metropolitan dailies and you will see that it is a subject of serious discussion by some of the most eminent men and women in the world. In Vol. X, No. 1, of the "American Journal of Sociology," is an extremely interesting article on this subject by the eminent physiologist Francis Galton, who has given the name "eugenics" to the science of race improvement, which is now beginning to command universal attention, although one of its pioneers and most strenuous champions—Moses Harman—to the everlasting shame of the twentieth century, occupies a prison cell because a callow Comstocker is unable to distinguish the difference between the scientific discussion of race improvement and mere pornographic literature. In another issue of the same magazine many pages are devoted to a discussion of Galton's theories by men and women eminent in sociologic research.

Incidentally it might be mentioned that the "American Journal of Sociology" carries a quarter-page advertisement of "A History of Matrimonial Institutions," by George Elliott Howard, which is said to touch "every problem involved in marriage and divorce." This book, openly advertised, contains valuable and interesting information of the relations of the sexes which, if republished literally in LUCIFER, would make LUCIFER'S editor liable to another indictment and conviction for the publication of "obscene" literature. And yet——

I wonder if Paul Hull, superintendent of second-class mail in the Chicago postoffice, reads the "American Journal of Sociology" as carefully as he reads LUCIFER?

I wonder if Mr. Comstock-McAfee ever heard of the "American Journal of Sociology"? I wonder if he would not be moved to seek another indictment against LUCIFER if LUCIFER should republish Professor Elsie Clews Parsons' article on "The Religious Dedication of Women"—notes and all—as it appears in the "American Journal of Sociology" for March, 1906?

MOSES HARMAN PLEADS NOT GUILTY.

Moses Harman was arraigned on May 22, 1905, in the United States district court for trial before Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis. When asked to plead to the charges made in the indictment he said:

"I am not guilty. I admit the publication of the articles as charged, but deny that they are obscene."

Upon this admission of publication the prosecution closed its case and Mr. Harman, the defendant, testified in his own behalf, as follows:

"My name is Moses Harman. I reside at 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Illinois. I was born seventy-four years ago in West Virginia, Pendleton county. I am the publisher of the papers in question. I have devoted a great deal of my time to the subject of what, for a better name, is termed Sexology. I do not regard the articles in question as lewd, lascivious or indecent."

On cross-examination he said he published LUCIFER in Kansas from 1880 to 1896; that he was convicted in that state for publishing articles which were deemed obscene, and that he was in the penitentiary at Lansing four months and in the military prison at Fort Leavenworth five months. He came to Chicago in 1896 and since then has published LUCIFER in Chicago. Continuing, he said:

"I have received complaints from a few private individuals—it is impossible to say the number—there were not many; I think not more than two. I am on record as objecting to the law against what is called obscenity, from the difficulty of defining what obscenity is. Every man has a standard of his own, and I doubt very much if there can be such a thing as a consensus of opinion on that subject. There are certain words used in certain connections and certain sights that I might call obscene, but only in particular connections; but for an investigator who is trying to find out all that may be known in regard to any subject, I doubt whether any word is obscene—I doubt if any word is obscene. I am inclined to take the opposite view. There is no such thing as obscenity to the investigator."

PURPOSE OF LUCIFER'S PUBLICATION.

When asked if his continuing to publish LUCIFER, after having been convicted twice, was for the purpose of showing his defiance of the law, the defendant answered:

"Not particularly—not particularly out of defiance—but I will say that incidentally one of the objects of the paper was the bringing about of a condition of absolute freedom of speech and the educating of the human race on higher and better lines than those commonly taught by what is called church and state—or what is called respectable—that is not just the word I want, either—by society—such as in the public schools, for instance. I found that the teaching was very defective in regard to human physiology and hygiene. The sex question was left out.

"I protested against this, believing that sexual hygiene and sexual physiology were really the most important, inasmuch as they had most to do with the welfare of the human being. The educational work of the paper was first and foremost; incidentally the securing of the repeal of the laws against obscenity, which I regard as a survival of the old laws against witchcraft and blasphemy."

The court refused to allow reputable men and women physicians to testify that the indicted articles were not obscene, but that on the contrary they were valuable discussions of the important subject of sexual hygiene. Although the court held that it was the jury's province to determine whether or not the articles were obscene he plainly intimated in his instructions that the court considered them obscene. The defendant was declared guilty and sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

In another place in this paper the trial of the case and the instructions of the court to the jury are reviewed by a lawyer who has been familiar with the persecution of LUCIFER from its beginning.

VARIOUS VOICES.

MAY ELMORE BENSON, Los Angeles, Cal.—I inclose my letter for your father to you, trusting to your wisdom whether it will pass the censorship of the prison officials. Having touched the hand and felt the heart of your revered father, while in Los Angeles, I can say with my dear ones, Alida Snow and Katherine Fry, that our deepest sympathy is with you and our heartfelt sorrow is his. No doubt he will be glad to know that some of the members, women only, of our one-timed Lucifer Club meet again at my home the first and third Tuesdays of the month, at 1:30 p. m.; meet early to have a long afternoon. We have a few who were not with us in our former meeting, and not all of the old membership. Gradually, wisely, we hope to grow.

ADELINE CHAMPNEY, Cleveland, Ohio.—We wish to ask you about the petition for a pardon for our dear Moses—does he know of the effort, and does he approve? From what I know of the nature of the man I have wondered if he would wish to ask for or to have his friends ask for a pardon for an offense of which he is not guilty. So, while we would gladly do anything in our power to help the dear old man, the brave old man, we hesitate about signing the petition until we know that he himself knows about it and desires it, for it seems to us a case in which his own wishes should be regarded. As we have seen nothing in LUCIFER to show whether or not he is aware of this effort, will you kindly send us just a line, so that we may understand the matter? I am very busy, but my heart is with you in your work, and with your father in his endurance, which is also good work for the cause. My heart—yes, and my head, too.

[Yes, my father knows that the "petition for pardon" is being circulated. Copies have been sent to him, but he may not have been permitted to see them. Of course none of his friends believe him to be guilty, and therefore the word "pardon" is a misnomer, but it must be used in order to comply with the necessary formalities. He does not ask his friends to sign the petition, but appreciates the efforts of those who do so, as well as the coöperation of all who help in any other way. I know that many have refrained from circulating the petition because they feel, with Mrs. Champney, that such action is not only humiliating but useless. I am sure, however, that the educational effect is good, even should the term of imprisonment not be shortened thereby.—L. H.]

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Up to time of going to press it has not been decided whether the history of the persecution of LUCIFER and its editor, printed in this issue, will be reproduced in pamphlet form or not, but we would like to know at an early date if many copies are desired by our friends. If published, the price will be 5 cents a copy, 25 cents a dozen. If a sufficiently large number are ordered within a week it will soon be ready for mailing.

LETTER FROM MOSES HARMAN.

The following letter, dated May 6, is the only letter which the prisoner has been permitted to send out since his incarceration, February 28. Two others, written previously, were withheld—we do not know for what reason:

SUNDAY, May 6, 1906.

Dear Daughter:

How are you all? I am hungry to see some one from home or to get more letters from home, from Chicago, and from friends everywhere. The last letter from home, as I think, was written one week ago today, by George O'Brien, in reference to his intended visit next day and his disappointment. It was a serious disappointment to me, also, for I, too, wanted to compare ideas and plans in regard to securing my release from prison—that is, I wanted to know just what it is that is being circulated for signatures.

In reply to many anxious inquiries, I will say that my health continues much the same as when Lawyer Brown was here, nearly three weeks ago. I then was quite hopeful, even sanguine, that the work on the rock-pile would be of great benefit to me in many ways. Since then I have had many hard days—that is, days when I would feel much less optimistic, and then I would be quite exhausted when quitting time came. Still I am hopeful, and though it is too soon to predict with confidence what the effect will be when the weather becomes hot, there is every reason to believe that the very fine weather we are now having will so build me up that I will be able to stand the work in hot weather without injury. As to cell, while conditions are better, I have not yet got a cell to myself.

As to books and papers, I think I have received all you speak of having sent to me. Not having so much time now for reading, I am not so anxious for more books. As to letters from friends, I have a bunch of about seventy letters and cards which I have been anxious to send home to you, so that you could answer each one separately, but so far I have failed.

Since the last batch of letters sent home I have received letters and cards from the following named friends: C. B. Wheeler, 6; A. E. K. Parkhurst, 3; Ada Morley, 6; J. Allen Evans, 1; S. C. Campbell, 1; T. Rathbun, 1; Hugh O. Pentecost, 1; Louis Roser, 1; C. V. Cook, 1; H. W. Rooser, 1; C. N. Greene, 2; Emma Greene, 2; Lena M. Lewis, 1; E. W. Chamberlain, 2; Lucinda B. Chandler, 2; George O'Brien, 2; Myra Pepper, 1; Charles A. Mitchell, 1; Benj. Fay Mills, 1; J. A. Price, M. D., 1; J. Harman, 1; C. P. Holt, 1; George Redborough, 1; S. S. Rockhill, 1; Pearl Johnson, 1; Kinghorn Jones, 1; Carl Nohl, 1; Laverne Wheeler, 1; Emma W. Best, 1; S. D. Bishop, 1; Susan Swaygood, 1; T. Griffiths, 2; Lois Waisbrooker, 2; J. F. Clark, 1; R. J. Warren, 1; Dr. Juliet Severance, 1; M. H. Coffin, 1; L. D. Ratliff, 1; E. H. Russell, 3; Elsie C. Wilcox, 1; Lizzie M. Holmes, 1; P. Ingrig, 1; R. F. Cheney, 1; Eugene V. Debs, 1; H. Hanson (Colo.), 1; A. Findenkellar, 1; J. E. Whitman, 1; M. Florence Johnson, 1; Katherine S. Fry, 1; D. Kotoku, 1; C. Severance, 1; Dr. L. M. Hammons, 1; Dr. Charles Lewis, 1; Olive Clifford, 2; Lillian Harman, 6. Am not sure that these are all. May have mislaid a few.

If possible, my dear Lillian, write a few lines to each of these good friends, to say that I greatly appreciate the kind attention, the fraternal sympathy, that prompted the writing of these letters and cards. And say that I hope to hear from them again, if they can find time to write. . . . Remember me to all good friends in Chicago and elsewhere. Ever faithfully and hopefully yours.

M. HARMAN.

[I should be glad to write the acknowledgments as he requests, but am so overwhelmed with work that it is impossible to do so at present. I feel sure, however, that our friends understand the situation and, knowing that the prisoner is not allowed to write, do not expect personal replies.—L. H.]

GOVERNMENT FOLLOWS MOSES HARMAN'S LEAD.

Notwithstanding the persecution of Moses Harman by callow ignoramuses who imagine they can stop the evolution of humanity, the work for which he has battled so strenuously for more than a quarter of a century goes bravely on.

Moses Harman always has contended that the proper breeding of human beings was of at least as much importance as the proper breeding of horses, cattle, swine, dogs, pigeons, poultry, etc. LUCIFER is the pioneer advocate of human race culture—of the right to be born well—of the science which the great Francis Galton has named "eugenics."

In season and out of season Moses Harman has contended for the right of woman to choose the best conditions for bringing a child into the world and for the equal right to refuse to bring a child into the world if for any reason she did not desire it. For this he has been persecuted by those who would keep woman forever in sexual subjugation to man. But the cause for which he has striven with such unremitting valor is here to stay. The seed which Moses Harman has sown in the Light Bearer has brought forth a glorious harvest.

Although one issue of the Light Bearer was excluded from the mail because it contained an article reprinted from a report of the United States bureau of animal industry, it appears that Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Hays has become interested in the science of eugenics and has determined to do all in his power to have proper attention given to the improvement of the human race by scientific breeding. Further details are given in the following article, published on May 18, in the Chicago "Evening Journal":

SCIENCE'S SKILL TO BETTER RACE OF MAN—BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION TO MAKE INVESTIGATION AND EXPERIMENT ON SUBJECT.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Can the human species be improved by scientific breeding? This weighty and interesting question is to be thoroughly considered by a "committee on eugenics" of the American Breeders' Association, of which Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Hays is secretary.

"The 'committee on eugenics' will investigate and report on heredity in man," says Hays, "and on ways of encouraging the multiplication of the good blood and discouraging the multiplication of the weaker and more vicious blood of the human family.

"The world has improved plant and animal products mainly by improving their food and their environment. The question is suggested naturally as to how heredity in man may be improved.

"The subject of investigating the heredity of man is comparatively much more difficult than in that of plants and animals. But it is so important that science and religion should join in an investigation at once conservative, careful and possibly constructive."

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 7 months and 12 days old. He has served 87 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. His task at present is breaking stone.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

HARMAN CASE REVIEWED BY A NEW YORK LAWYER.

[The following review of the trial and conviction of Moses Harman in the federal court of the northern district of Illinois, before Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, was written by a New York lawyer, who had no connection with the trial, but who has been a reader of LUCIFER for more than twenty years and is thoroughly familiar with the persecution of the editor from its beginning in Kansas:]

In July, 1895, Mr. Harman was transferred from Lansing to the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, whence he was released after the service of his sentence of one year, less two months allowed for good behavior. One might think, from all the foul abuse that had been heaped upon Mr. Harman, that he was incapable of good behavior, but here at least he got credit for it.

Soon after Mr. Harman's release from this imprisonment he removed the publication office of LUCIFER to Chicago, where he continued his work without molestation (except that several issues of his paper were stolen by the postal officials) until May 15, 1905, when an indictment against him was prepared by C. B. Morrison, federal district attorney at Chicago, and a federal grand jury was hoodwinked into approving the same.

CHARGES IN THE INDICTMENT.

This modest instrument set forth that the issue of LUCIFER dated December 8, 1904, and numbered 1028, contained matters too obscene, lewd, lascivious and indecent to be described, and, as if this were not of itself a sufficiently blood-curdling crime, the district attorney inserted as a makeweight a similar accusation as to No. 958 of LUCIFER, which was published as faraway back as February 26, 1903.

This indictment, which contributed so much to the purity of nations, came up before the court and a pretended trial was had June 15, 1905, in which the prejudices of the jurors were so aroused that they delivered the old man up to his mercenary tormentors.

RIGHT OF PROTEST DENIED BY COURT.

The record made up by the district attorney alleges that in imposing sentence upon Mr. Harman Judge Landis asked him if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him. Mr. Harman denies this and says this little ceremony was omitted and that he was prepared to state very cogent reasons why he should not be sentenced.

Mr. Harman being a man absolutely worthy of belief, the conclusion must be that the judge, fully conscious of the iniquity of the part he was playing, sought to avoid giving Mr. Harman any opportunity to justify himself. The sentence this time was a year's imprisonment in the state penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois.

The record shows other things, foremost among which is the picture of a kindly old humanitarian eager to be courteous, even under the most aggravating circumstances, toward the prosecutor, who misrepresented and maligned him and tried to prejudice the jury with the notion that former convictions had some bearing upon the case then at bar.

Even the judge, seemingly, tried to inspire the jury with the idea that "a man of his (Mr. Harman's) years should know better"—just as if it were a foregone conclusion that Mr. Harman had done something wrong. It should be stated here that Mr. Harman was over 76 years old, and had reached a time of life when an attempt to attribute pruriency to him is simply absurd.

FEATURES OF THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

Two features of the judge's charge in this case attract especial notice as indicating his animus.

First. "I charge you that you need not concern yourself in this case whether a time may come when a verdict of guilty here may result in the exclusion of the Holy Bible from the mail. The court will take care of that question when it arrives. Nor the exclusion of the works of Paine, Ingersoll or Shakespeare. These questions are not before this jury for determination."

The Bible, Paine, Ingersoll and Shakespeare were referred to by Mr. Harman's counsel, not to put any imputation upon those works, but to enlighten the jury as to what might and what might not properly be classified as obscene, and to show that the same plainness of speech which was the merit and glory of Mr. Harman's publications is to be found freely in our best literature and no one thinks evil of it, any more than they would of LUCIFER, if their ignorant prejudices were not aroused by designing trickery.

AS TO THE QUESTION OF INTENT.

Again: In one part of his charge the judge tells the jury that they "have a right to consider the fact that this man has heretofore been convicted of the same offense—that is to say, of violating the same statute—in determining the question of intent"; while subsequently in his charge he says:

"I charge you as a matter of law that the motive of this defendant is not to be considered by you in determining whether or not the articles published in these papers are lewd," etc.

It has been iniquitously held in some similar cases that the jury may not consider the motive or intent of a defendant, and had Judge Landis given such instruction he might have excused himself on the ground that he was blindly following a bad precedent, but no judge, up to this case, so far as I am aware, has gone to the extent of charging the jury that they may consider intent adversely, but not favorably, to an accused. Such, however, is the clear implication from this charge.

An appeal was taken, with as good results as might have been expected in early New England times in a case of witchcraft, and Mr. Harman is now in the state penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois.

REVIEW OF THE PROSECUTION IN KANSAS.

[The following review of the first arrest, prosecution and conviction of LUCIFER'S editor on the false charge of publishing obscene literature was published in the "Advertisers' Guide" (Stanley Day, editor) of July, 1895:]

THE PERSECUTION OF MOSES HARMAN.

"When the innocent is convicted the court is condemned."

In these days, when vital questions are probed to their very foundations, no honest man will shrink from any fact that analysis of his introspection into his physical, mental and moral nature reveals. The civilized world is networked with currents of investigation which a few years ago would have been smothered abjectly in faith. It is realized that between opposite extremes truth is found at the juste milieu, and an effort by the partisans of an extreme theory to suppress the publication of an opposing theory by force is as mischievous and wicked as it is lawless and dishonest. Error will always be exposed when truth is left free to combat it. And while the broad-minded investigator will go to both extremes and examine all sides of a question before settling down to a conviction, it is certain that, as long as men are free to choose whether they will investigate or not, no one has a right to complain that inquiries prosecuted by others are offensive to him. The forcible suppression of any sentiment however stultified or infatuated or of any language however harsh or offensive is so contrary to inborn American notions of freedom, fair play and justice that any attempt thereat calls forth prompt and indignant resentment.

The purpose of this writing is to show by a simple statement of facts some of the grotesque inconsistencies of an attempt to enforce in this country the suppressive methods of an inquisitorial censorship.

In 1881 the publication of a radical newspaper, LUCIFER, was commenced at Valley Falls, Kansas, the purpose being to provide a medium for the exchange and dissemination of radical thought and to stimulate progressive ideas in the social, economic, theological and philosophical fields of investigation. The merit of this unpretentious little paper lay in its fidelity to truth, and in extending hospitality to new ideas, and in candidly examining the value of their claims. No editors were ever more hearty, free or sincere than Moses Harman and his son George, and Edwin C. Walker.

While these men were quietly minding their own business and issuing LUCIFER weekly they were arrested February 23, 1887, on a charge of violating the Comstock postal law, and taken before United States Commissioner Wilson at Topeka, who held them to await the action of the grand jury, and upon executing bonds of $500 each to appear at the April term of court, they were allowed to go home.

Attending at the April term, they were told that nothing could be done with their case "on account of lack of appropriations," and again executing bonds to appear the following July, they went home.

At the July term they were told that the district attorney had decided not to present the charges to the grand jury "on account of the extreme heat," and for other frivolous reasons. Giving bonds to appear at the October term, they again went home.

This being forced to travel long distances fruitlessly, and to attend many terms of court accompanied by attorneys and bondsmen at considerable expense, was not the least oppressive of the many devices by which the prosecution exhibited its disposition to pester and annoy the defendants. Throughout the whole eight years of this outrageous persecution Mr. Harman has been compelled to give bonds a dozen or more times, a requirement as brutal as it was malicious, for one bond would have answered all reasonable requirement of the law. As the length of this narrative compels us to economize space, we cannot again refer in detail to each case in which a bond was required.

In October they again took the journey to court and were informed that they might return home and that they would be sent for if wanted.

A week after this adjournment it was discovered that they were wanted and they were accordingly sent for to come again to Topeka, where they were confronted with the most marvelous indictments ever incubated by a grand jury. These indictments, joint and several, charged the defendants with mailing a copy of each of five issues of their paper, to each of nine individuals, contrary to the statute. Ringing the changes and variations upon this theme amplified the indictments until they swelled up to 270 counts. The district attorney, like the drowning sailors, believing that some sort of ceremonial function was imperative at this juncture, required the defendants to execute another bond, which they did, and went home to unravel the intricacies of these complicated indictments.

Now, the purpose of an indictment is to inform the defendant what the charge against him is, but these indictments were drawn with the intention of concealing that information, and so effectual was the concealment that neither the defendants, their attorneys, the judge, nor even the district attorney himself could point to any one of the 270 counts which contained any intelligible accusation whatever against the defendants. So these indictments were quashed.

This would have been a good place for the prosecution to have stopped, but notwithstanding a remonstrance against the continuation of this farce, signed by one hundred of the best citizens of Valley Falls, the district attorney procured new indictments from a subservient grand jury.

By these new indictments, in 216 counts, the defendants were informed, for the first time, what articles they had published in LUCIFER that had set the indictment mill agoing and produced such a plethoric grist of counts, 486 in all, whereby so much filing of bail bonds was exacted. The articles which it was now pretended were so shocking as to require the persecution of the publishers were only four in number. As, subsequently, upon the trial, the district attorney admitted that he and the grand jury were mistaken as to two of these articles, and withdrew the charges relating to them, it will only be necessary for us to concern ourselves with the remaining two as to which the charge was pressed. These were (1)The now celebrated "Markland letter." (2) A letter written by Mrs. Celia B. Whitehead.

These letters are too lengthy to be reproduced in our present limited space. Readers who are unfamiliar with them will find fair counterparts of the Markland letter in a "Special Report on Diseases of the Horse," published and gratuitously circulated by the United States department of agriculture, and in a little pamphlet entitled "Our Suffering Sisters," issued by the International Medical Missionary Society. The Whitehead letter is an argument rather in favor of the law prohibiting contraceptics than otherwise.

The usual annoyance of arrest and bond filing followed.

Thus it will be seen that although charged with an indictable offense, it was two years after the pretended committing of the offense, and over a year after their first arrest, and then only by fighting for it, that the defendants could find out from the prosecution what the charge against them really was, and when they did find out they learned that the original indictments embraced some pretended offense which it was not deemed prudent to include in the second indictments.

In May, 1888, the defendants George Harman and Edwin C. Walker withdrew from the management of LUCIFER, and Moses Harman continued as sole editor. By reason of this withdrawal proceedings against the junior editors were nolle prossed on the trial. From this point, therefore, our narrative will concern itself solely with the conduct and fate of Moses Harman.

As soon as the charges took definite shape, LUCIFER'S friends clamored to know what it was all about, and on June 22 Mr. Harman reprinted the Markland letter in parallel columns with the 38th chapter of Genesis. This was done so that no one should be ignorant of the charge itself, nor of its frivolousness, that secrecy should not be added to the other disadvantages he would have to contend with, that it might be shown logically that, judged by the same tests which condemned the Markland letter, the Bible must necessarily be considered obscene, and furthermore, that something practical might be done to abolish such conditions as made possible the facts told in the Markland letter concerning the violation of a wife by a fiendish husband before her recovery from childbirth.

The other three indicted articles were republished July 20, August 3 and September 14, 1888, respectively, in especially large editions, thus demonstrating how difficult it is in this country to suppress thought, even though unprincipled men may be temporarily invested with power to hamper the press.

At the autumn term, 1888, the trial was put off until spring, because everybody was so interested in politics that the administration of justice in court was set aside as a matter of secondary importance.

Meanwhile discussion of the indicted articles had been growing very active, whereby the frivolities of the charges became more and more palpable, and sympathy with the persecuted editor more and more earnest and general, and moral and financial support was advanced for his relief.

At the spring term, 1889, defendant demurred to the indictment, and while this demurrer was pending Mr. Harman boldly advertised to send LUCIFER for one year with "Irene" for $1.75. The point of this lies in the fact that the author of "Irene," Mrs. Fowler, had just been indicted under the flimsy pretense that her book was obscene. The indictment against Mrs. Fowler was never brought to trial.

On May 24, 1889, Judge Foster rendered an opinion overruling the demurrer, in which he criticised the prosecution with merited severity, saying, "I have but little patience with those self-constituted guardians and censors of public morals who are always on the alert to find something to be shocked at, who explore the wide domain of art, science and literature to find something immodest and who attribute impurity where none is intended." On the other hand, he went so far aside from the real issues, and so far violated judicial impartiality, as to make a gratuitous and premature statement, implying that the Markland letter and the Whitehead letter excited impure thoughts in his mind, and so were really "obscene."

Mrs. Whitehead, long, well and widely known among progressive people as a woman of sterling character, was naturally indignant at the judge's imputation that she had written an obscene letter, and clipping her own and the Markland letter from LUCIFER, she mailed them to the judge with the request that he mark the parts in them which seemed to him indecent and return them to her. It might appear that, as the gravamen of the offense Mr. Harman was charged with was mailing these very articles, Mrs. Whitehead acted rashly in exposing herself to prosecution and inviting the judge to do likewise, but when we consider that all the obscenity there really was in the case lay in the prurient fancy of the judge and the prosecution, her act assumes a dignity far beyond any mere act of defiance.

Then followed a flood of criticism, and LUCIFER and other radical papers were filled with opinions from many as competent to write opinions as Judge Foster himself, even though not clothed with authority, and the judge and district attorney were overwhelmed with letters from all parts of the country. There was no doubt a strong sentiment throughout the country that Mr. Harman would not be honestly dealt with. This sentiment came from observation of the inconsistencies of the prosecution, as well as from a recollection of the outrage upon good old D. M. Bennett in a similar case. Under these criticisms the moral attitude of the prosecution became so contemptible that in the autumn the district attorney washed his hands of the business by continuing the case to April, 1890, before which time his term of office would expire.

The attempt at suppression had resulted in widespread notoriety for the indicted articles. They had been distributed by Mr. Harman and his friends until they were well known and thoroughly discussed by all the well-informed radicals in the country. Some thought that not merely were the articles not detrimental to public morals, but that to amend public morals their publication was an eminently meritorious act. Some maintained that while the constitution guaranteed freedom of speech, and liberty of sentiment, with no restraint as to form of expression, it was still injudicious to print articles which might be objectionable to good taste. But while all censored officials so false to their obligations as to persecute Mr. Harman for printing matter of his own selection in his own paper for those who wanted to read it, there were some who considered such a publication unnecessary, on the ground that inhumanities like that described in the Markland letter were so rare that it was not worth while to combat them as it might be if they were more frequent. For the enlightenment of this latter class, and to meet their objection, many instances like that narrated in the Markland letter were detailed by LUCIFER'S contributors, and among such contributions was a letter from Dr. O'Neill, describing a number of similar perversions.

Another arrest followed, February 18, 1890, on the O'Neill letter. Marshal Dillard, who had the warrant, was ordered to put Mr. Harman in jail in Valley Falls, and again in Topeka, but having no malice towards him, and full of confidence in him, he allowed him to go, unattended, on his promise to accompany him to Topeka next morning, but on arriving at Topeka the commissioner, to prevent his absconding, fixed bail at $1,000, and another bond was given.

On March 11 LUCIFER contained a letter from Mrs. Walsbrooker quite similar to the O'Neill letter. Of this the prosecution, with its usual consistency, took no notice.

On April 17 a pretended trial took place, of a character grossly discreditable even to the system of jurisprudence under which such an outrage is possible. Of this farce the following are some of the main features: The new district attorney, Mr. Ady, had assured Mr. Harman that he should have sufficient notice of trial to enable him to prepare properly. This assurance he dishonorably violated, hustling on the trial at a time when Mr. Harman was unprepared, and showing thereby an entire lack of any honest intention to try the issues in the case with fairness. On the day in question Mr. Harman's counsel, Mr. Overmyer, was in the deepest family affliction. His wife was not expected to live throughout the day and his child was dangerously ill. He was in no condition to try such a case. Other counsel was on the way from New York, intending in good faith to try the case upon its merits. These facts were fully detailed in affidavits on a motion to adjourn the case for one day, but while the prosecution had loitered along for four years, it now insisted that one day was too long a time for such an aggravated case of "obscenity" to go unattended to. No fair judge would have denied such an application for an adjournment. The application was, however, sneeringly denied by Judge Foster, who said to Mr. Harman: "If you had been as diligent in looking up counsel as you have been in instructing me in my duties you would not now be unprepared." Thus Judge Foster got square for some fancied slight to his ineffable dignity. No one has ever been able to tell with certainty what it was that piqued the judge and led him to take this mean revenge. Possibly something may have been written to him by some of Mr. Harman's friends which excited his spleen. Possibly it was the fact that just before the trial Mr. Harman had printed in LUCIFER the oath of office taken by the judge. If it was this latter act that the judge resented he would better have deliberated long enough to realize that from the mere printing of the oath there was no implication that the oath was likely to be violated, but on the contrary, all the presumptions were that the judge would live up to his oath. The judge directed the trial to proceed at once, and assigned as counsel a lawyer entirely unfamiliar with the numerous details of the case, who, instead of setting up a proper defense and arguing on the law and the substantial merits, interposed the preposterous plea of insanity. Against this course Mr. Harman protested with earnest vigor, but his protest was treated as if it were mere contumacious disorder, and the judge presided over this hideous, wicked farce with as much gravity as if he were honestly trying the case.

It must have been gratifying to the judge that the conviction which ensued was upon just those articles which he had gratuitously characterized as obscene in his opinion a year before, but the obscenity of which he had omitted to explain to Mrs. Whitehead. As it was, the verdict was a compromise, three of the jurors being disposed to acquit.

Judge Foster imposed the most brutal sentence ever known in a case of this kind, five years' imprisonment and a fine of $300, and in doing so again manifested a pique and malignity which showed him entirely unfit to fulfill judicial functions. This manifestation of pique was accentuated by the fact that at the same term of court another defendant confessedly guilty of an offense of the same nature was allowed to go on payment of the minimum fine.

No stay was allowed, and Mr. Harman was at once committed to prison. His letters at this time are models of dignified protest against wrong. He remained in prison until August 30, when by virtue of a writ of error he was released, after seventeen weeks' imprisonment. A new bond was required.

On October 16, 1890, a curious proceeding was had before Judge Phillips, somewhat in the nature of a trial, on the O'Neill letter, yet without a jury. The defendant was examined before the judge for about an hour and adjournments were then had to December 29, when the law of the case was argued by counsel and submitted.

The appeal in the Markland letter case was adjourned at this time to the spring term of 1891.

January 15, 1891, Judge Phillips brought in a verdict of guilty against Mr. Harman, and without his being present in court sentenced him to one year's imprisonment. Comparing the Markland and the Whitehead letters on one hand with the O'Neill letter on the other hand it will be seen that the present case showed an improvement in judicial moderation. Another improvement was manifested, for, an appeal being taken, the monotonous formality of giving bonds was omitted, the marshal saying: "Go about your business as usual —when I want you I know where to find you."

In March, 1891, a writ of error as to the O'Neill letter case was allowed by Judge Caldwell, and another bond was required.

On June 1 Mr. Harman attended in court with counsel to argue the appeals, but adjournment was had to the latter part of November, when both cases were submitted to Judge Caldwell.

On April 15, 1892, while these appeals were yet undecided, a high-handed trick was played upon Mr. Harman. A whole edition of his paper was stopped in the postoffice at Topeka. This was the second time Mr. Harman's enemies had recourse to this rascally trick, the first time being in October, 1890.

Early in June, 1892, Judge Caldwell filed his decision, setting aside Judge Foster's sentence in the Markland letter case. Thus it appears, while Judge Foster was so eager for conviction that he could not wait one day for the purpose of having a fair trial, that after six years of atrocious outrage, fiendish persecution, hideous perversion of justice, and contemptible trickery, the case stood just where it did in the outset, in June, 1886, when the Markland letter was first published.

June 13 Judge Caldwell filed a decision sustaining the conviction by Judge Phillips on the O'Neill letter and confirming the sentence, and a few days thereafter, to the eternal disgrace of our American judiciary, Moses Harman began a term of a year's imprisonment for exercising the American birthright of free speech.

On February, 16, 1893, on a petition for habeas corpus, Mr. Harman was discharged from imprisonment in the O'Neill letter case, upon the ground that the sentence of four months on each of three counts must either be held void for uncertainty, or else it must be held to mean that the sentences on all these three counts run concurrently, in which latter case the prisoner had more than served his term.

This left Mr. Harman with the old Markland letter case hanging over him—the case that was reversed and remanded "to be dealt with according to law."

After three years of inactivity and when everybody was in hopes this preposterous nonsense was so dead as to be incapable of resurrection, District Attorney Perry, who, with the change of administration, had been reappointed to succeed Mr. Ady, moved before Judge Phillips to correct the sentence and that an amended sentence be passed. This was very clearly inflicting two punishments for the same offense, but the district attorney seems to have had no shame and no moral sense to restrain him from making the contention that the previous proceedings were unlawful. The very proceeding that he instituted so dishonorably had not turned out as he expected, and so he declared it unlawful. The unlawfulness of the whole business was just what Mr. Harman and his friends had insisted upon from the outset. Had the case been "dealt with according to law" Mr. Harman would have been free from annoyance six years ago.

On June 1, 1895, Judge Phillips, the same judge who showed his incapacity for dealing with such cases "according to law" by his misfit sentence in the O'Neill letter case, undertook to correct the sentence inflicted by Judge Foster in the Markland letter case by the infliction of a new sentence, under which Mr. Harman was again arrested and at the present writing is lodged in the Kansas state prison at Lansing.

This is the history to date of one of the most flagrant violations of citizen rights ever perpetrated in this country. On a prosecution entirely groundless and unjustifiable an estimable old man, after being harassed unmercifully for eight years, has been swindled out of his liberty by a series of alleged trials which are a disgrace to our jurisprudence, and at last is in prison for having done an act for which humanity will long revere his memory.

That the publication of the Markland letter has resulted in great good no one who knows the facts can deny. But it ought not to be necessary in our civilization to make a martyr in order to take an advance step in the world's progress.

Mr. Harman in his persecution has the sympathy of all good men, and all to whom those presents may come are urged to respond in some form, spreading the light he has kindled, strengthening his hands for further conflict and helping to uplift humanity as he has done.

A special number, devoted to Moses Harman, is promised by the editor of "Soundview," at an early date—probably in June or July. Special articles and a portrait will appear. Mr. Rader will divide receipts with LUCIFER on all orders which mention this notice. Price, 10 cents a copy, $1 a dozen, $7 a hundred. Contents and further particulars will be given in an early issue. Address L. E. Rader, Olalla, Wash.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the common rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

VOICE OF PROGRESS.

By Heaven! it is a shameful thing
That, in this age of deepening night,
There live so few whose souls dare cling
Forever to the right!
By Heaven! it is a crying sin
That, in this hour of ripening thought,
Where so much greatness lies within,
So little is outwrought.

The world is full of puling fools
Who prate of love in sickening rhymes,
Or bring stale tomes of rusty rules
To curb the chafing times;
But where be they whose prophet-souls,
Outlooking on life's ocean waves,
Do warn us of the rocks and shoals
Which else become our graves?

What care we for our fathers' creed?
What reck we of the ancient themes?
Is Truth less true in newer deeds
Than in decrepit dreams?
All honor to our brave old sires—
The unforgotten, worthy dead;
Yet shall our loftier desires
Be on their dullness fed?

Give us new Truth altho' it break
Upon us with the lightning's flash!
Give us new Truth! The nations quake
Beneath the shifting crash.
Give us new Truth! Our souls despise
This blinding rush of deadly strife.
Past forms of Truth are present lies
Which canker all our life.

Therefore, new Truth! And let it burst
Like red-hot thunderbolts on those
In whom this fair world stands accurst
With such a hell of woes!
New Truth! Which evermore shall right
Earth's wronged and patient multitude;
And robe us all in rare delight
Of deep and earnest good.

COMSTOCK AND HIS METHODS.

An interesting case was tried in the United States district court in Milwaukee February 1. At the closing of the case, so goes the newspaper report, "C. N. Caspar, a Milwaukee bookseller, had pleaded guilty to sending objectionable literature through the mail and stood ready to receive his sentence. The case against him was worked up by Anthony Comstock, who wrote to Caspar, under an assumed name, from Chimney Point, Vt. The correspondence covered a period of several months.

"Comstock at first requested that some rare old books be sent to him. Caspar filled the order and the correspondence continued, Comstock gradually worming himself into the bookseller's confidence. Finally some highly colored pictures were asked for and received. These were sent by express. This, however, did not suit Comstock. These were sent by express. This, however, did not suit Comstock. These were sent by express. This, however, did not suit Comstock, as, of course, the United States laws [at that time] had nothing to do with a transaction of that nature.

"Accordingly he wrote to Caspar for more pictures, and said that the nearest express office was at Port Henry, N. Y., on the opposite shore of Lake Champlain. It put him to great trouble and expense to obtain packages from there, and he asked Caspar to send the matter by mail. Caspar fell into the trap and Comstock caused his arrest."

During the trial Mr. Comstock's conduct in leading Mr. Caspar into the commission of an illegal act was severely commented on by the attorney for the defense, Mr. E. P. Vilas, a brother of Senator Vilas, and before sentencing Caspar to pay a fine of $500 Judge Jenkins said:

"There are some offenses worse than the circulation of obscene literature. One of them is the practice of fraud and lying of which Anthony Comstock has apparently been guilty. Mr. Comstock may be able to reconcile his conduct with the laws of God and morality, but this court cannot do so. I cannot approve the conduct of the government officer who has lured the defendant into the commission of a crime. I am aware that such methods are often pursued in dealing with alleged criminals, but I am not willing to lend my assent to such doctrine. If government officers cannot detect criminals and enforce laws without resorting to dishonest practices, they had better resign their positions.

"Mr. Comstock is known as a very zealous agent in preventing the spread of obscene literature; but, in this case, instead of appealing to state law, which is ample for the emergency, he has seen fit to assume the name of another and lure the defendant into crime."

It is unnecessary to add anything to the words of Judge Jenkins, for the utterance of which many persons will feel thankful. At the same time it is well to remember that Anthony Comstock is not to be regarded as if he were alone in this matter. He is merely one of thousands of detectives who employ the same method—that of luring persons into crime for the sake of punishing them; he is merely a representative of a system which has the approval of a majority of the people—the spy system—a system of lying and treachery in the interests of morality. The people approve this system; they believe in it; they believe that society can be purified by the aid of spies and liars. It is a strange belief, but it is popular.

Once a year Mr. Comstock holds a meeting in New York city, which is attended by large numbers of our most respectable citizens, who listen to Mr. Comstock's reports of his work and applaud him to the echo for what he has done during the preceding year. Surely Mr. Comstock cannot be alone judged for doing what so many respectable and influential persons wish him to do and praise him for doing.

He is a meddler with other people's affairs, but he is encouraged in this meddling by probably ninety persons out of every one hundred, who profoundly believe in the wisdom of minding other people's business. He is a regulator of morals; but most persons believe that morals can and should be regulated by laws, detectives and policemen. Mr. Comstock is a creature of public opinion; he could not do what he does if public opinion were not behind him. Throughout the churches he is regarded as a veritable saint, and not many persons will approve of Judge Jenkins' criticism of him. Nor will Judge Jenkins' remarks injure him in the country at large, for he is far more powerful than any judge.

This is a Comstock age, a Comstock civilization. Anthony Comstock is the creation and embodiment of public opinion on the subject of compelling persons other than one's self to be good by law. Each person knows that he cannot be made good by law, but almost every one believes in trying to make others good by law. It cannot be done, but it will be a long time before people learn that. Meantime spies, detectives, sneaks and liars, providing they do their hateful work in the interests of morality, are praised and petted by the majority.

It is a merry old world, but it does the best it can under the circumstances.

HUGH O. PENTECOST.

The above article, originally printed in the "Twentieth Century," February 11, 1892—fourteen years ago—is republished because it is as true and as timely now as it was then. How prophetic have Mr. Pentecost's opinions of fourteen years ago proved to be concerning the security of Comstock's position as official filth-finder: "Nor will Judge Jeakins' remarks injure him in the country at large. He is far more powerful than any judge."

THE TRAINING OF THE HUMAN PLANT.

Under the above title a very remarkable article by Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, appears in the May "Century." This article should be read studiously by the LUCIFER family. It reaffirms in amplified form the principles announced years ago by Noyes in the founding of the Oneida Community, and sets us to wondering what results Noyes might not have achieved if his aspirations had not been extinguished by the overwhelming clamor of lewd and ignorant prejudice.

Mr. Burbank's successes in plant development have impressed him with the similarity between the organization and development of plant life and the lives of human beings, and he asserts that upon the wisely directed crossing of species by a rigid selection of the best and as rigid exclusion of the poorest rests the hope of all progress in human as well as in plant development, and he goes on to emphasize the chance now presented in the United States for observing and, if we are wise, aiding in what he considers the grandest opportunity ever presented of developing the finest race the world has ever known out of the vast mingling of races brought here by immigration. This noble aspiration is what led to the undoing of Noyes, to the condemnation of Heywood by a lewd judge, and to the present imprisonment of Moses Harman; but let us still hope that Mr. Burbank's work may meet more worthy consideration from a somewhat more enlightened public sentiment.

As the plant breeder finds among descendants a plant likely to be stronger than either ancestor, so may we notice constant changes and breaks and modifications going on about us in this vast combination of races, and so may we hope for a far stronger race if right principles are followed—a magnificent race, superior to any preceding. And Mr. Burbank points to the wealth of material from which combinations looking toward this result may be drawn, but the work of man's head and hands has not yet been summoned to prescribe for a development of the race. So far a preconceived and mapped-out crossing of bloods finds no place in the making of peoples and nations. An unconscious tribute to Moses Harman is in these words:

"It is only when some one breaks absolutely away from all precedent and rule and carves out a new place in the world that any substantial progress is ever made. . . .

"The wave of public dishonesty which seems to be sweeping over this country is chiefly due to a lack of proper training—breeding, if you will—in the formative years of life. Be dishonest with a child, whether your child or some other person's child—dishonest in word or look or deed—and you have started a grafter. . . . Nor can you be dishonest with your child in thought. The child reads your motives as no other human being reads them. The child is the purest, truest thing in the world."

And so on. He treats of the marriage of the physically unfit and denounces the silly notion of predestination, and urges, as Moses Harman has for years urged, the best possible conditions for that mysterious prenatal period in which the work of elevation should begin—"Throwing around the mothers of the race every possible loving, helpful and ennobling influence, for in the doubly sacred time before the birth of a child lies, far more than we can possibly know, the hope of the future of this ideal race which is coming upon this earth if we and our descendants will it so to be."

Mr. Burbank's article is too long and too prolific of thought to be fully treated within the compass of this brief notice, but I commend the article itself to the readers of LUCIFER as marking a new advance step in our work. Get it and read it at length.

ED W. CHAMBERLAIN.

FREE DISCUSSION IN EUROPE AND IN AMERICA.

There seems to be more freedom in the continent of Europe than in the continent of America to discuss the problems of sex. In the best bookseller's shop in Vevey, Switzerland—a shop devoted solely to the sale of high-class literature, not a general store—I noticed prominently displayed the following work, recently issued, "La Question Sexuelle," by Auguste Forel, professor of psychiatry at the University of Zurich—a book of 612 pages, with engravings. The nineteen chapters deal with all phases of sexual life in a calm, scientific way. This book, by an eminent savant, is sold freely, no one being shocked at the idea that such a question has considerable interest to thoughtful persons. It does not seem to corrupt the Swiss, this freedom to think and speak. I see no signs of degeneration or decadence.

On my way out here I bought at a railway bookstall in France a paper-covered volume, just published, "L'Avarie (literally, the damage), a Study of Social Hygiene," by Dr. H. Mireur, member of the French Society for Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxy. This book is an outspoken study of and an eloquent plea for social and sexual hygiene in regard to a widespread curse of civilization, a loathsome disease, which I need not further specify—one of those plagues which poisons the fount of life and annually destroys the health and happiness of millions, and which could be extirpated within two or three generations quite easily if the accursed demon of puritanical fear and superstition did not keep us, socially speaking, in the thick darkness of ignorance.

In Germany, Scandinavia, France, Switzerland, Italy, many students and thinkers work on these problems, and they are free to carry on the war against moral and physical disease and death. Why is it that the forces of ignorance and superstition seem to be so much more powerful in the English-speaking countries?

IMMORALITY IN LITERATURE.

The suppression of Bernard's Shaw's play, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," by the police of New York and the discussion of Shaw's dramatics by the critics bring to the front once more the old question of what is moral and immoral in literature. No one will deny that things have been written too disgusting for human beings to read. Books have been written for the sole purpose of appealing to the libidinous. The motive of their writers has been pecuniary gain and nothing more, and the observation of the Apostle Paul that "the love of money lies at the root of all evil," finds a pertinent illustration from these men.

But, on the other hand, books written from an entirely different motive have been classed as immoral, and it would be safe to hazard the assertion that there are few great works of literature that have not been denounced as immoral. The word "morals" comes from the Latin word "mores," a word which means customs. The morals of a community, when we reduce the word to lowest terms, are the customs of the community. Now, when a man attacks the customs of a community he may be called immoral. The book that attacks the customs of a community may be called immoral. But it does not follow that the attack upon these customs is due to any evil intent on the part of the author. On the contrary, his motive may be of the highest, his protest against the customs or morals of the community being based on what appears to him a higher conception of morals than the one that now obtains credence. This is probably the case with Bernard Shaw. We are not saying that he is in the right, but all of his antecedents are testimony that his work is not intended to appeal to the depraved in man, but is intended to start a higher current of feeling than that which prevails today. . . .

The human race must acquire "the philosophic mind" that Wordsworth tells us comes with the years. With a philosophic mind Bernard Shaw and all other writers with new ideas would be quite safe. The great works of literature could then be read with profit and their "immorality" would be the antechamber to a higher morality. As it is, books once pronounced immoral have a striking habit of becoming moral in time, while the sinner of yesterday is the saint of today.—Denver Republican.

"Surely the individual who devotes his time to fearless and unrestricted inquiry into the grand questions arising out of our moral nature ought rather to receive the patronage than encounter the vengeance of an enlightened legislation."—Percy B. Shelley.

"He that will not reason is a bigot; he that cannot reason is a fool; he that dares not reason is a slave."—Sir Wm. Drummond.

THE BUSINESS WOMAN AND HOME LIFE.

The business woman of today stands out in bold relief, and forms a strong contrast to her sisters who have preceded her. She believes in personal freedom and self-support, and refuses to be a mere appendage to some man; and if she marries she marries as an equal, and not as a dependent.

The question of feminine support must be answered in one of two ways. Either the woman must gain her own livelihood or become the beneficiary of man. Father and mother cannot last forever, and eventually support must come outside the ancestral home.

The maiden of past centuries tried to solve the problem by trying deliberately to capture a husband and make him pay the bills. When she succeeded she practically gave up her liberty, and too often she became the slave of man, for money is might. If she failed in her quest, she often felt as if her life was a failure and trembled lest she should be called an "old maid." During the long, dark centuries of the past, woman has, generally speaking, been subservient to man, and her condition has been anything but enjoyable. Man has been the unit and woman the cipher. Behind us is barbarism, where woman has been the drudge of man. Even today in Tunis and Algiers a wife can be bought for the price of a mule, and in India the laws of Menu declare that the wife may be the slave of her husband, and the widow the slave of her eldest son.

Woman has often sighed for freedom, but not until this stage in human evolution has woman been able to secure it. She is not so anxious to marry as she was formerly, and she certainly will not marry unless assured of considerate treatment. She will not "give up an $800 job for a $600 man" unless he is kind and she is very much in love. This bachelor maid is proud of her ability to support herself, and refuses to be unequally yoked to any man. Under these circumstances we must expect fewer marriages in proportion to the population.

The industrial woman, leaping into the ranks of open competition, tends to reduce the wages of the men, and so far forth incapacitates them for marriage. This will reduce the number of homes, leaving ramps of unmarried men on one side and spinsters on the other. But, although the weddings will be fewer, those couples who do marry will be happier, because they stand on the same footing, and mutual affinity will be the basis of marriage in place of mercenary motive. The business woman will know the value of a dollar and be able to sympathize with her husband in his daily toil. Should her husband attempt to maltreat her she has courage enough to separate from him and return to self-support. Being fearless and decided, she will be respected and well treated. The broader outlook she has acquired in the business world will make her a superior wife and a more capable mother. The era of feminine imbecility and cowardice is fast passing away, and in its place we find the new age of well-rounded, exalted womanhood.—The Rev. John L. Scudder, First Congregational Church, Jersey City.

DIVORCE HER ONLY RELEASE FROM TORTURE.

Preaching at the Normal Park Methodist Episcopal Church, Buffalo, N. Y., the last Sunday in April, on "The Foundation of the Home," with special reference to the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, which, the speaker said, by a majority of one, "illegitimatizes thousands of innocent children, and carries grief and consternation into many of the most prominent homes in the land," the Rev. Dr. F. J. Chase said:

"A Christian marriage presupposes a marriage of both soul and body, from which there can be no divorce. But the sad fact remains that a very large percentage of marriages are not Christian in the exalted sense in which Christ spoke. In order to remedy the evils arising from unhappy marriages the church has attacked the symptoms, and resorted to the law, instead of going to the seat of the trouble. It is not better divorce laws, but better marriage laws, that we need most. The church often acts in a very unchristian way in dealing with the divorce problem. To deny the communion to a woman who has made an unfortunate marriage, and secured a divorce; to attempt to deprive her of domestic happiness, and brand her as unclean and curse her in the name of God, is almost unthinkable. It ignores the fact that many marriages God never had anything to do with, nor never will, except to curse if perpetuated.

"When an innocent or foolish woman is swindled into matrimony by an unprincipled man, the quicker the legal tie is sundered the better after she finds it out. It is a crime against nature to make her heartache and heartbreak lifelong. The laws of nature existed before the laws of church or state.

"If every couple loved each other truly there would be no need of divorce laws. Divorce laws are for the adjustment of wrongs and the maintenance of the standard of morality. Were no deceptions practiced, no hasty and ill-advised marriages, no surprising revelations after marriage, no debauchery, no crimes, no unspeakable wrongs done, this were a simple problem.

"The minister and the doctor best of all know of the domestic sadness and marriages that are only in name. I have known scores of young women who, too late, have found themselves tied to vile rascals whom they hate down deep in their hearts with a perfect hatred. The doom to health and happiness is written over the doors of their homes. Every room and piece of furniture, and every picture on the wall cry out against the wrongs of the innocent victim. If in desperation she flees from that hell called a home, the finger of scorn is pointed at her. If she would seek adjustment of her wrongs in court, the law says she must show black and blue spots on her body produced by the man who promised to protect, love or cherish her, and even then the adjustment is only partial. It's worse to pound the soul than the body. If she would have absolute freedom she must have eye-witnesses to facts very common, but almost beyond her ability to prove. The outraged woman has the worst of it all around.

"It is a fact that a majority of the guests at the average wedding regard matrimony as a sort of a joke. The average minister will marry all who comply with the legal conditions, and with few questions. Yet if it proves to be an unhappy marriage he shows little sympathy for their pain, and condemns them as criminal if they try to escape from the limbo into which they have thoughtlessly fallen.

"The very atmosphere around the average wedding is laden with the trivial and insincere. The way our young people as a whole view matrimony beforehand is in striking contrast with facts afterward.

"'I am marrying one man, while my heart belongs to another,' sobbed a young woman to the maid who dressed her hair for the marriage to a millionaire six months ago, who today is suing for a divorce in a Newark court.

"But it may be said, 'She should have looked out for that.' Yes, indeed! And George Eliot, too, and William Shakespeare, and John Wesley, and Bishop Hurst and thousands of others. There are many things that cannot be foreseen.

"If either one of the parties has been insincere, the ceremony and relation in the sight of God is void. Shall they, then, be kept tied together by law and forced to fight each other to death in the name of God? A woman who has been swindled and had her heart broken by a wretch is to be pitied. The state has no moral right to make her agony lifelong, nor the church to try to make it eternal, if she breaks the unholy bonds and asserts the rights of her nature."

REAL RACE SUICIDE.

Dr. Harold N. Meyer, of Chicago, speaking at a dinner of the Physicians' Club, had the courage to ease his mind on the subject of race suicide in a manner to win applause from many who have felt themselves unable to cope with our enthusiastic president and his optimistic supporters. "The sociologists who coined the phrase 'race suicide,'" observed Dr. Meyer, "have mistaken a healthful symptom for a social disease. At the beginning of the last century this country had 4,000,000. At the beginning of this century we had 80,000,000. In another hundred years we shall be jammed together, 360,000,000 souls, all struggling for a livelihood."

One of the causes of sorrow in the world is the too rapid increase of the human race. Those white-faced women who reeled to the English government offices, intoxicated with anger, despair, hunger and maternal pity, carried children in their arms, had little ones hanging to their skirts, and left a restless brood at home. They had brought them into the world knowing they could not provide for them, and that the little ones must grow up, as their parents had before them, with want waiting at their doors, with vice for their companions, and with a pauper's grave offering them rest at the end. If they, and their fathers before them, even unto the tenth generation, had shown a more sincere compassion for posterity, there would not be this hungry army of the rejected beating with futile hands upon the doors of destiny.—Lowry's Claim.

"Better a thousand fold abuse of free speech than denial of free speech. The abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race."—Bradlaugh.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

BY WAY OF EXPLANATION.

To speak of the difficulties under which LUCIFER is issued is not pleasant to me. To do so could so easily be construed by the reader into an attempted apology for deficiencies, or an appeal for sympathy. When it became necessary for me to take up the work of my father, I already had the greater part of my time occupied in caring for home and children, but have been able to carry on the publication of LUCIFER thus far fairly satisfactorily to myself. Now, however, the correspondence has fallen so behind that an explanation seems absolutely necessary. Our children are remarkably strong and healthy, but are now suffering from a "visitation of Providence" in the form of whooping cough. My work on LUCIFER has heretofore been done principally at night, as our baby sleeps from 7 till 6, and this is his first illness in his eight months' experience of life. But now I am able to do little work at night, because of his illness. I hope that I will soon be able to have more help, and in the meantime must ask our friends to have patience. Nearly all of LUCIFER's subscribers are our personal friends, and I am sure they will not condemn me for giving first thought and care where the need is the greatest. LILLIAN HARMAN.

ARE MORE LAWS NEEDED?

Belle Goodwin Fitch, describing "Ideal Marriage," in LUCIFER, No. 1064, suggests that more laws are needed to gain the ideal.

"Why not make a law which all can respect? . . . As the majority of men are selfish, we would have to make laws to protect the wife and children at parting of parents."

Marriage has always been more or less an ideal to those directly concerned. If it has dwindled to a low-down, worn-out and disgraceful condition, it is because man, in his ignorance, has made scores of laws to protect it, and this very protection was the poison that has wrought the dismal results. The low standard of the whole present system of society can to a great extent be traced to the innumerable laws made by innumerable lawmakers, ignorant of natural laws and development. Thus, no idea or ideal can be protected, preserved or elevated by mere laws. What we need are less laws, the less the better, and still better if intelligence will aim at none whatever.

To "make a law which all can respect" is an impossibility, and even if it were possible there would be absolutely no need for it, for a thing we all can respect does not need to be fenced in with a law. If you cannot protect your own ideal, a law will surely never do it. Liberals and radicals, who more than anybody else have to suffer under the laws, ought to stop yelling for more.

CARL NOLD.

TRUTH NEEDS NOT FALSEHOOD'S SUPPORT.

As human intelligence advances it sees the absurdity of basing ethical belief and rules of conduct on mythical legends of the past. Truth needs not the support of falsehood, and it was somewhat of a shock to me to see in LUCIFER No. 1065 a communication from Elmer Ellsworth Carey, reproducing an alleged "historical document" which went the rounds of the press fifteen or twenty years ago, and after investigation was declared by the "Twentieth Century" and the "Truth Seeker" to be a clumsy forgery.

Mr. Carey found the document reproduced in a magazine, with this introduction: "The following letter was written by Rev. Cotton Mather in 1681. The original is in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society."

Persons who have made inquiry declare no such document is "in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society." It evidently is a deliberate forgery, and as such, whether it represents the known spirit of Cotton Mather or not, is unworthy of citation by any lover of truth. SIDNEY HOLMES.

PREJUDICE EXTINGUISHES PSYCHOLOGY.

The aberrations of the sexual instinct are, to a great extent, unknown, even to psychologists, because it is very rarely that an author is found who has the courage to undertake the elucidation of forms of mental disease, the symptomatic details of which are repulsive to the moral sense; and, moreover, the hesitancy of authors to touch the subject is increased by the fact that, in dealing with it, they come to be associated in the public mind with traders in obscenity. . . . From a juridical point of view, an appreciation of this is of great importance, and we may say that at present prejudice usually extinguishes psychology, and the aberrations of sexuality are universally regarded, not as the outcome of mental disease and the object of medical treatment, but as heinous crimes, to be punished with the utmost rigor of the law.—Medical Press and Circular (London), Aug. 17, 1898.

"HUSH!" DOES NOT END THE MATTER.

From age to age the established guardians of public morals have held that it is not safe to impart knowledge on the subject of generation, about which knowledge is so much needed and desired. When the wondering child comes to father or mother with curious questions he is at once silenced with a commanding "Hush!" and goes away wondering and questioning still more. The child grows to youth, and stealthily obtains some snatches of knowledge which only sharpen its appetite for more. And that appetite leads him to swallow with avidity whatever information he may obtain on this subject, however foul it may be, with merely sensual, profane and degrading associations. If the obscene-book vendor finds here a market for his wares it is because we have unlawfully withheld knowledge which it is the lawful right of every human being to possess.—Loring Moody, in "Heredity."

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 7 months and 26 days old. He has served 101 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. His task at present is breaking stone.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

* * *

LUCIFER No 1042, June 22, 1905—a double number—was accepted, weighed and the money for postage received at the Chicago postoffice. The edition was then confiscated and sent to the dead-letter office at Washington, to be destroyed. No notice was given the publisher, and not until he received complaints of non-receipt by subscribers was he aware of the fact that their papers had not been sent to them. On being questioned, the superintendent of second-class mails at Chicago said he had been instructed by his superiors at Washington to read a copy of every issue of LUCIFER and confiscate all which were, in his opinion, unmailable.

LUCIFER Nos. 1043, 1045, 1046 and 1050 were held to be unmailable by Mr. Hull, the aforesaid superintendent, and copies deposited for mailing were destroyed. The higher officials in Washington concurred in the decisions in regard to these numbers.

Nos. 1053 and 1056 were held to be unmailable, but the department at Washington instructed the local officials that hereafter copies of "unmailable" issues should not be destroyed, but should be returned to the publisher.

No. 1058 was "unmailable" in the estimation of Mr. Hull, but it was a case of "when doctors disagree," for the Washington officials overruled his decision.

It should not be necessary to point out the dangers to the freedom of the press and the liberties of the people which are involved in thus making one man prosecuting attorney, judge and jury, with the power to deny the right of transmission to any publication which in his opinion is of a mistaken tendency.

And what are we going to do about it? Continue the publication of LUCIFER.

And what are YOU going to do about it? Shall we have your assistance? LILLIAN HARMAN.

G. B., Chicago.—Your agitation has our full indorsement. Send us all the material you have and can obtain. We will translate it for the "Packet." Also send a cut of Mr. Harman. It must be of interest to every thinking and feeling human being to see a picture of one who, for love of truth and for his fearless and open expression of his opinions, suffers punishment at the hands of a stupid and prejudiced court.—Question Box in "Arbiter Zeitung" (Chicago).

The infamous prostitution of official power by the postal authorities in aiding Comstock to puritanize America and blot out human liberty is doing more to spread anarchy than all the propaganda by the anarchists themselves.—S. E. Shepherd.

POSTOFFICE PATERNALISM.

The incarceration of Moses Harman in a federal penitentiary, serving a year's sentence for sending objectionable matter through the mails, is one of the obscure martyrdoms which occasionally disgrace our boasted freedom. One of the articles for which he was sentenced was a reprint from the "Woman's Journal," and was an editorial written by Alice Stone Blackwell. This fact alone should show the utterly unwarranted character of the charge. The other article condemned was written by a woman of 70. Both these articles aimed to point out the cruelties and immoralities possible under the supposed license of legal family relations.

It is altogether outrageous that a fine old grandfather should be serving a prison sentence for printing in his paper the words of honorable women which he believes to be needed for the uplifting of human conditions. The general ideas advocated in the paper published by Mr. Harman are not under discussion. It was not for his philosophical or governmental theories he was condemned. No laws prevent a man from airing impracticable and erratic notions. He was condemned for giving publicity to most important educational discussion upon subjects that affect the very foundation of human welfare. To say that such discussion is always, and however expressed, a crime, is an insult to the intelligence of all earnest citizens.

The wrongs committed under the cloak of the postal laws are growing more numerous and glaring. A censorship which makes it a crime to enlighten the people on matters which pure-minded and thoughtful people regard as crucially important is an outrage not to be tolerated under forms of law among a free people.—Denver Times.

SALUTARY KNOWLEDGE IS SUREST RESTRAINT.

There are not a few who are averse to having the subject (of prostitution) so much as mooted among those whose purity and virtue are the objects of their concern. The very title of such a book they would, if it were in their power, keep from meeting the eye of any member of their domestic circle. Such attempts at entire concealment, however, can, in few instances, in a world and a city like ours, prove successful; and in some cases there is reason to fear, where there is most the appearance of success, the failure is really the greatest; the very eagerness to conceal, on the one side, giving rise to the greater secrecy and reserve on the other. I say this for the purpose, not of repressing prudent vigilance, but of modifying overstrained and morbid apprehensiveness, which, instead of accomplishing the desired ignorance, may hinder the restraint of a salutary knowledge.—Ralph Wardlaw, D. D.

THE INSTINCTIVE YEARNING FOR FREEDOM.

Chief among my well beloved is a dainty little maiden three years old. Wishing to give her a present the other day, I said to her:

"Elizabeth, if you could have the thing you most desired in the world, what would you ask for?"

"I would walk around the block by myself, without anybody holding my hand," she instantly replied.

Truly, thought I, out of the mouths of babes and sucklings proceedeth wisdom. Without knowing it the child had solved one of the great problems of her age and sex.

Why do children show so little filial affection? Why are boys and girls so anxious to get away from home?

Why are women, as a sex, so dissatisfied with their lot?

Sages and moralists have philosophized about it in vain, but this little child had divined the truth out of her own unconscious and instinctive yearning for freedom and liberty.

As far as her own personal experience went, she was born with the traditional golden spoon in her mouth. She had the most devoted of parents; the most competent of nurses; every luxury that money and love could procure; but she lacked the one thing in the world that is the ultimate passion of the human heart—independence, freedom, the sense of standing alone, the right to walk around the block without anybody holding her hand.

And in voicing this desire she spoke for all children, and all women.

It is one of the idiosyncrasies of love that the more we love, the more tyrannical we are, and the more devoted and conscientious a child's parents are, the more the unfortunate little creature is kept a close prisoner.

Nothing arouses our sympathy so keenly as the sight of the little homeless street Arab, jumping off and on cars, and hawking papers far into the night, but he is really often not to be so much pitied as the petted darling of a fond mother, who never lets him out from under her eyes, and who keeps him under as ceaseless surveillance as if he were a Russian political suspect.

Practically all the conflicts between parents and children arise out of the child's longing for liberty, and the parents' determination not to grant it.

There is not one child in a thousand among well-to-do people, who are able to give what they consider sufficient care to their children, who is ever permitted the slightest independence of action or thought.

This is what makes poverty a blessing to children, and the reason that so many of our most famous men and women, and our most daring and original thinkers, have sprung from the humblest ranks in life.

The parents were so hard worked and so busy that they didn't have time to boss all originality out of their children.

The little ones were allowed to walk around the block without anybody holding their hands; they were allowed to develop their own individuality, and grow up into what God intended them to be, instead of what their mother and father tried to make them.

Of course, it is necessary for a child's immature judgment to be guided in many ways by the older experience of its parents, but when it is not a question of actual principle, it is better to give the girl and boy liberty to do as they prefer.

If they make mistakes they will learn from them.

Any way, it hurts less to fall and bruise yourself when walking alone than it does to fret because somebody is holding your hand, and certainly it puts the parent in a more attractive attitude to be regarded as a counselor and friend, than as the warden of a penitentiary that one has determined to escape from as soon as possible.

If you'll get deep enough into a child's confidence you'll find that its one burning desire—the one dream of what it intends to do when it gets grown—is to get away from mamma and papa, and do some perfectly simple thing that it is not allowed to do at home.

It is merely a break for liberty, and it does look as if parents ought to have enough common sense to make home so free that the girls and boys will want to stay in it.—Dorothy Dix, in Boston American.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

MRS. H. M. J., Temple, Ind.—I inclose to you a dollar that I regret very much has not been paid sooner, and I would be very glad to multiply it by a thousand. I was so glad to see your picture in "To-Morrow." I shall have it framed. I am not in sympathy with your views on the sex question, but very much in sympathy with the result to which your life work will lead, and I know you as a conscientious and honest man.

MRS. O. E. L., Park City, Utah.—"Sex Radicalism" is great—the best I have read, as it begins at the root instead of lopping off branches. I would like to get something suitable in teaching children, as I am very poor in expression. Could you suggest anything? We have sent in about twenty-five names on the petition for your dear father's release to the Free Speech League and sincerely hope it will have a good effect.

W. G. MARKLAND, Chattanooga, Tenn.—Herewith I send you a petition for the president's waste-basket; also $1 for your breadbasket. In your father's case, no one can do it justice. There are infamies that defy expression. I sometimes feel that "the hemlock" would taste best if drank in silence, for silences do break sometimes—I refer to petitions. It's bad enough to ask and be refused. It is a fearful thing to ask and receive with an implied bond attached, yet I may be in error.

W. C. BEHLEN, Cleveland, O.—How a blind world misjudges freedom! Ignorance, cruelty and invasion are always the essence of the state. The state cannot logically do otherwise, for its own preservation depends upon the suppression of the individual. It may imprison Moses Harman's body, but it cannot chain his great mind; it may force him to break stone, but it cannot force him to be false to his convictions. . . . Environment is the mother of heredity. Heredity and environment make us what we are. They are correlative factors in the law of evolution.

MRS. C. H. S., Utica, N. Y.—While south this winter I saw several copies of your LUCIFER and I am much pleased with them. I did not know there was such a paper printed before. I am highly pleased with it. Will you kindly send me some samples, so I can give some to my friends? And if you have some back numbers and can spare them, I will be grateful to you. I hope shortly to subscribe for the same, and many of your books I must have. Why, I am just starving for such good, sound reading, and wish I had heard of you years ago, but I hope to make up for lost time in the future. May heaven give you all the power possible to continue your good work for many years to come.

J. W. WATKINS, Quenemo, Kan.—It has been a long time since I heard from you. Was sorry to know of your father's trouble again. I do hope he will come out all right and in good health, so he can fight more battles in the cause of human freedom, and especially for the emancipation of women. The cause of human progress in all lines never had a better outlook than at the present moment; the sun of intelligence is rising higher and the clouds of ignorance are melting before its onward march to liberty. Tell your father I have not forgotten him, nor while life lasts will I ever forget the noble fight he has made and is making for all mankind. I am inclosing you $1 to oil LUCIFER's machinery and keep it running while the grand old captain is serving an unjust sentence in prison for teaching the truth. I hope you are in good health and that you will so remain to keep the old banner afloat.

J. B. BILLARD, North Topeka, Kan.—Inclosed find a few names on petition for pardon of your father. Have signed it very reluctantly, for I feel it is humiliating to ask for the pardon of a person who has done no wrong. We should ask for justice and not pardon. Am satisfied several thousand names could be obtained in Topeka to the petition if a few good workers would canvass the town and I thought of hiring a man myself for a week to do so, but many feel as I do and do not think the petition would do any good any way, and think the money will be better spent in helping you sustain the paper. However, I here inclose $10 for sustaining fund. When you publish the sketch of the prosecution, either in LUCIFER or pamphlet, send me about fifty copies and I will distribute them as far as I can. Accept my sincere sympathy for your father and my sincere wish that his physical strength will endure the hardships of his unjust imprisonment.

W. F. JAMIESON, Pentwater, Mich.—Abuses of power by men in office in the postoffice department have steadily, stealthily grown. One year ago this very day I was in court to be tried for "preaching" a printed "sermon." I did not trouble Freethought papers with my incarceration in a lovely jail. I was so good and p-u-r-e that the sheriff let me out (on $300 bonds) after three-fourths of a day in his parlor. I was treated like a prince. I had told the justice to his face that I had not one word to take back; that I told the truth in that sermon; that a fine of $100 and a term in jail had no terrors for me. The jury stood two to one against me, after a two days' trial, but my persecutors gave it up. Why should I be free and Moses Harman in prison? The remembrance of wife's mental torture of five hours' duration, while the jury were "deliberating" on my fate, can never be forgotten by me. "Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them." So I pass around the petition for Moses Harman's pardon and send it to you.

ELIZABETH M. F. DENTON, Wellesley, Mass.—I must assure you that while I have shared your anxiety, your vexation, your indignation throughout this unjust treatment, I have rejoiced in the even temper your father has maintained, and in the clear conception which had so characterized his discussion of this, one of the fundamental problems of our time, and one which will no doubt vex the race through many generations to come. But, really, is there not a more widespread recognition, in these later years, of the fact that woman must have an opportunity for higher culture and a more noble life than formerly, if the race is to be improved? It seems so to me. Of course I mean not here and there a woman, but woman as distinguished from man. Please give my sympathetic regards to your father and tell him that in my heart I thank him for attempting the great work he has so far succeeded in doing so well. But, Lillian, we cannot have him kept in prison, and no government can afford to keep such a man there. Surely some one must arise who will be able to shock the nation into a sense of its stupid blundering in this case as in so many others.

VIRGINIE D. HYDE-VOGEL, Denver, Colo.—I have just sent off a belated petition, hoping that the main one has been a bit delayed and can catch these last few names. I have worked good and hard for this, partly out of my regard for your father's character as a reformer, partly because my own literary work rests under such disabilities because of the "tone" (as the publishers call it) of it, due to the leaven of new thought. I have distributed the petitions you sent me, and also got a number from New York. I have distributed altogether about a dozen (of course you can't just always tell how those turn out which get out of your hands), and have "personally conducted" three or four. I sent one to Spokane, one to St. Louis I think, two back to New York, had one sent to Boulder and one to Grand Junction. . . . The editorial I enclose was from the "Times" (the afternoon edition of the "News") and was written by Mila Tupper Maynard (probably you know her), a very prominent Socialist, who is also an editor on that paper. She signed one of my petitions and the editorial was the result. I wish you all good fortune in the matter.

F. E. STURGIS, East Pasadena, Cal.—A sample copy of LUCIFER containing the petition for the pardon of your father, Moses Harman, has just come to my hand. Please accept my thanks for the paper and my heartiest sympathy for yourself and father. I will secure all the names I can on the petition and forward the same to New York as quick as possible. . . . For nearly a year I have been trying to aid in an effort to get Dr. Sonnanstine, of Colorado Springs, Colo., formerly editor of "The Pink Iconoclast," out of prison. You undoubtedly are familiar with all the particulars of his incarceration. Have contributed to Freethought magazines and endeavored in other ways to arouse interest among Socialists and Freethinkers, hoping that it would hasten either a pardon or a Freethinkers, hoping that it would hasten either a pardon or a rehearing of the case before another court. I believe that, like your father, Dr. Sonnanstine is a noble man, striving for the betterment of his fellows, and that he was innocent of the crime charged to him—that it was a parallel to Bennett, Heywood, Moore, Berrier and last, but not least among many such persecutions, your own father. A few days since I received a pathetic letter from Mrs. York, 323 Church street, San Francisco, the wife of the veteran Freethought lecturer, Dr. J. L. York, in which she writes that the doctor is very sick; that they have had to move from their former home (presumably because of the earthquake and fire) and are in dire distress. She has been in poor health several years and both are above 70 years of age. Can you not mention the case in next issue of LUCIFER?

CHARLES CARRINGTON, Paris, France.—I am profoundly moved at the idea of your father being in prison. For a man to live to his ripe age, all his days alive with intellectual activity, and then to be cast, like another Apostle Paul, into prison for the chaste expression of new doctrines, is a piece of work that will one day make the cheek of thoughtful Americans tingle with shame. It is true that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," of any church, of any doctrine or creed, but Chicago should not require martyrs at this time of day, and such a martyr! I have seen nothing for my part in LUCIFER that could compete by a long way for sheer indecency with certain passages in the "Holy Bible." No doubt this latter is a fine model of pure English, if regarded as mere literature, but some of its morality is detestable, if morality be preached by examples. In the quiet of my French garden I read over again a few Sundays ago the story of David and his loves, and it struck me as one of the most erotic storiettes that has come under my notice, and quite on a level with the floweriest Gallic fiction. Why are not the traders in these old-world Hebrew stories prosecuted, if American legislators be fair and just? I send my greetings to your father.

ED SECKERT, Randolph, Kan.—I sent up a petition yesterday to the "Great White Throne," Washington, D. C., asking freedom for your noble father. What it lacked in quantity was more than made up in quality—the best men and women in this part of Kansas—readers, thinkers, students, people who dare to call their souls their own. Another petition will follow from this little place. . . . You have no idea how those efforts to righten a grievous wrong done an innocent, honest, earnest, brave old man are eagerly taken up, inquired into and promptly and cheerfully signed by people who probably had never heard the sad history of the case, or even the name of your father. . . . Now, I want to send a line to the aged martyr; just a ray of light through the barred window of his cell. But how to word that friendly message confronts me with a hard puzzle. . . . I was glad to see a sign of life in last number of our mutual, highly esteemed, grand old nonagenarian friend, Mrs. E. H. Russell, of San Jose, Cal. I recall at this moment with mingled feelings of pleasure and sadness the many happy hours she, along with your father, spent under our cozy cottage roof tree, and how earnest and candid your father talked while munching apples. Will you kindly send me Mrs. Russell's present number and street? Since the earthquake especially I have been anxious to drop her a line, but have been unable to locate her street, since several of her letters to my lamented wife and to myself have been mislaid.

WHERE THE HARM LIES.

The light of knowledge may be painful to those unaccustomed to it, as unmodified sunlight is to the eyes, and many prefer to spend their days in boudoirs with latticed windows and colored lights; but science, to which we owe such far-reaching material and intellectual advancement, the glory of our generation, cannot stop on their account, and no demand of this sort has any prospect of winning general approval. What is it, then, that makes the result of modern investigation appear dangerous in the eyes of so many men? Can the truth as such be harmful, and therefore objectionable, supposing that we had the truth, and that it opposed all tradition? The answer will be, no; but the remark will be added that the truth is no staff for halting souls, and that dazzled eyes cannot endure it. Consequently the harm lies not in scientific knowledge, but in the weakness of souls and eyes. Here, then, is where the mistake lies, and where relief must be administered. It is not new truth which threatens danger, but the old error, in which the human mind has been kept so long, and which some would like to retain longer. The danger is that all our institutions, home, school, church, public life, social order, and systems of government, being based on and adapted to these old errors, should fail to perceive that it is their business gradually to adapt themselves to the better knowledge. Only on condition that they do this can the widening of the chasm and the violent collapse of what has become antiquated be avoided.—Dr. Ernest Krause, in Open Court.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 36, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this better distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

A Child of Love.

BY MARGARET GRANT.

The life history of a girl who comes into the world marked by the Bar Sinister of Love Out of Wedlock, and who makes a brave fight for existence without asking any favors from the world because of her sex. Some of life's problems are brought home to her and she is compelled to try to solve them.

Which Is Nobler, Motherhood in Love or Legal Prostitution? Must a Girl be a Weakling Just Because She Is a Girl? Is a Man a Woman's Natural Enemy, or Her Natural Friend? Must a Woman Traffic in Her Body in Order to Live?

These and other questions come into her life, as they come into the lives of all women; and bravely, nobly, she tries to solve them; bravely and nobly she tries to live a sweet, pure life.

Her story is a romance, full of temptation, trial, danger. Born in a workhouse in New England, of a union unsanctioned by the law, she is left an orphan at a tender age and puts on boy's clothing in order that she may earn a living.

A sea voyage and a shipwreck take her into old Japan before the days of its modern civilization. There startling ideas of NURITY, MARRIAGE, DIVORCE are brought to her attention; and she is taught to see that many of the ideas prevalent in her own land lead to impurity instead of purity.

Finally, filled with notions which are in direct variance with those of her own country, she returns home to fight for her existence, friendless and endowed with that beauty which is considered the lonely girl's curse in our land of boasted civilization.

But she is well equipped for the struggle. She is physically as strong as a boy, so that if need be she can give blow for blow. LOVE MAY LOSE, but she walks through dangers with a firm step, guided by a LIGHT OF SELF KNOWLEDGE. Sex has no mystery for her; she is pure and strong because KNOWLEDGE.

Three young men, fighting like herself for life, become her companions. She shocks them. They live alone without a chaperon. They try to contends with MORAL DUALISM.

The adventures of little Margaret in old Japan, being authentic, hold the reader entranced. It is a strange and new story she tells of the world obscurity to a first place in the ranks of world powers. She found herself in a land where all the men were gentlemen, all the women ladies; where marriage and divorce were private affairs; where children were never struck in anger; where sex matters were no more mysteries than food matters.

Bound in cloth, stamped with gold, $1 a copy, postpaid.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JUNE 21, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1068

TO AN UNBORN PAUPER CHILD.

Breathe not, hid Heart: cease silently,
And though thy birth-hour beckons thee,
Sleep the long sleep:
The Doomsters heap
Travails and teens around us here,
And Time-wraiths turn our songsingings to fear.

Hark, how the people surge and sigh,
And laughters fail, and greetings die;
Hopes dwindle; yea,
Faiths waste away,
Affections and enthusiasms numb;
Thou canst not mend these things if thou dost come.

Had I the ear of wombed souls
Ere their terrestrial chart unrolls,
And thou wert free
To cease, or be,
Then would I tell thee all I know,
And put it to thee: Wilt thou take Life so?

Vain vow! No hint of mine may hence
To theeward fly: to thy locked sense
Explain none can
Life's pending plan:
Thou wilt thy ignorant entry make
Though skies spout fire and blood and nations quake.

Fain would I, dear, find some shut plot
Of earth's wide weald for thee, where not
One tear, one qualm,
Should break the calm.
But I am weak as thou and bare;
No man can change the common lot to rare.

Must come and bide. And such are we—
Unreasoning, sanguine, visionary—
That I can hope
Health, love, friends, scope
In full for thee; can dream thou'lt find Joys seldom yet attained by human kind.

THE NEED OF KNOWLEDGE ABOUT SEX.

Under this title Grace Potter writes in "Physical Culture" of the formation of a society in New York which advocates teaching sexual questions in public schools. It is an encouraging sign when educators are seen awaking to the necessity of enlightenment in regard to these vital facts, even though their first thought is that instruction must be law-injected. Superstition in church and state has fostered ignorance, and now we are asked to look to church and state for enlightenment! Consistency, however, is the trait least to be expected in human nature. When the desire for knowledge has grown sufficiently strong many conditions will be altered to make way for the satisfaction of this desire. If the official declaration that "any and all discussion of questions of sex is unmailable" should be applied to all publications, the postal department would surely be kept busy throwing out an ever-increasing number of publications. Fortunately, there is no possibility that any number of officials hostile to education can suppress the demand for knowledge.

This is the article by Grace Potter, as it appears in "Physical Culture" for June:

To those who can read the signs of the times it is becoming more and more apparent that, in this country at least, communities are becoming divided into two camps regarding many of the questions that are of importance to us as a race. Especially is this so in the case of those which have to do with the functions of sex and the side issues which spring from it, either directly or indirectly.

So it is that on the one hand we find ignorance and its mate, prudery, working hand in hand to the end of keeping lawful knowledge regarding sex from the people, and thereby causing the latter to suffer the countless ills which arise from lack of comprehension of this most vital of matters. Anthony Comstock is an embodiment of this alliance of nescience and hypocritical affectation.

On the other hand we have those sincere and intelligent souls who believe that the truth never works harm, but lastead infinite good, and especially that truth which applies to the science of sex. Such are individuals like Felix Adler, Rev. Lyman Abbott, Prof. Burt Wilder, of Cornell College, and many others. On the one side and as exponents of the gospel of darkness we have one or two viciously prominent individuals and a number of purblind nobodies. On the other we have men who are leaders in the world of religion and science, and the vast army of those who are in a state of permanent revolt against the tyranny of prudery.

This condition, as far as the intelligent are concerned, is crystallizing into a number of organizations which have for their end the extinguishing of Comstockery and its spawn, vice and bigotry, and the enlightenment of the world in general in regard to those subjects to which allusion has been made and which are of such vital importance to it. A case in point is that of an organization that has recently come into being in New York City, named the American Society of Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxis—which means the society for the prevention of disease by sanitary and moral measures. The efforts of the society are directed exclusively against those diseases which have their origin in the social evil. Its members are proposing to do some radical work. They have a standing committee on education, which studies ways and means of educating the public on subjects which, thanks to prudery, are usually tabooed. There is a committee which aims to study the underlying as well as the auxiliary or contributing causes of the social evil. And last but not least, there is a committee on legislation, composed of seven lawyers, which is to frame such legal measures as shall be found necessary to promote the objects of the society. At a recent meeting of the organization some of its leading members made brief speeches which embodied their aims and purposes. Dr. Prince Morrow, the president, said:

"Men and women all over the United States are being aroused to the fact that there are a large number of their fellow-beings who are a menace to the community, because suffering with certain infectious diseases. Agitation of this fact has resulted in the establishment of many branches to this society, whose aim is to limit those diseases. At the last meeting of the Detroit branch there was a public discussion of a long and varied nature. Twelve months ago such a meeting would not have been possible. At present, however, representative men and women, college presidents, doctors, lawyers, educators and ministers of the church dare to break away from traditions of the past and publicly identify themselves with the movement."

Dr. Bulkley, another of the speakers said:

"We have a gilded Tenderloin district on the west side in New York, an immense red-light section on the east side, and the unspeakably bad resorts along the water front. This society would fall far short of its duty did it not give consideration to the submerged tenth. Besides the dangers which those run who frequent the places mentioned, there are to be considered also the dangers to their innocent associates. There are thousands and thousands who contract these diseases as innocently as children contract measles. The most deadly of these diseases is extremely infectious during its first stages. One woman who came under the notice of a specialist had contaminated 300 men in ten months. Statistics show that 50 per cent of the married females suffering from it get it from their husbands during the first few months of married life. Children inherit it. It may be given by kissing. A wet-nurse may take it from the baby she nurses, who in turn caught it from its mother before birth. A person with ever so small a cut on his finger may catch it if he touches a handkerchief or towel used by a syphilitic. In Russia, in some of the small villages, one-fourth of the whole population is infected.

"Gonorrhea also has a frightful history. Twenty per cent of all the blindness in the United States comes from gonorrheal infection. Eighty per cent of all deaths among women from pelvic diseases arise from the same malady."

Rev. Father Wynne thought that there should be both collective and individual instruction to deter young men from contracting sexual vices, and to assist them in ridding themselves of those already learned. The craving for enlightenment among young men and boys makes it imperative that clean-minded, well-informed and accurate teachers go over the matter with them in a friendly way. This could be done without shock to either listener or teacher if neither one has transgressed the laws of sex. Shame is one of the penalties and deceit one of the obliquities which result from ignorance of or the perverted use of the sex function.

Dr. David Blaustein, of the Educational Alliance, declared that the teaching should not be individual but collective. "It might be given in Bible classes. But in looking over the lessons for the coming year I see that the book in the Bible which contains more important lessons than any other is absolutely neglected, as it usually has been in years past. I refer to Leviticus, which contains much valuable information in regard to cleanliness and temperance in reference to sexual questions."

Dr. Margaret Cleeves spoke on the question of instruction to young women of the working classes. "It is a mistake," she said, "to think that ignorance and innocence are one and the same. Among the working classes there is more likely to be instruction given by the mother to her daughter than in higher life. This, the tenement-house mother sees, is a necessity. The crowded rooms in which they live makes it imperative that a girl be told the facts of life very young. And so, as best she may, the tenement mother teaches her daughter what a society woman would shrink from mentioning. The working girl does not always have a mother to do this, however, and when she does there is always supplementary information needed to be given by some one with a thorough knowledge of physiology and hygiene. Preliminary instruction in sexual physiology would well be given in the public schools. The law requires children to attend school until fourteen years old and they are then of an age to need and receive instruction of this kind. The large department stores employ a physician, while some of them have both a man and woman doctor who could well give personal instruction to the young women under their care. The professional philanthropist is not a good person to rely upon for teaching of this kind, as he or she always approaches the subject with so much mawkish sentimentality that a perverted impression of the subject is created upon the untrained mind."

Another physician said that women should be instructed about procreation and the common diseases of the procreative organs. "It is a point of the greatest delicacy with a physician," he declared, "that he does not reveal to an afflicted wife the cause and character of a trouble if it arises from her husband. But she ought to have such a knowledge of such matters that she would know without her doctor telling her. Naturally he does not want the responsibility of breaking up the home."

"Ninety per cent of all the patients admitted to insane asylums during the past two years are there on account of venereal disease," stated Mr. Edward Devine, of the Charities Society.

Theodore Schroeder, author of "The Evolution of Marriage Ideals," said that fully one-half of the men and women of New York do not accept from any priest, minister or church a ready-made code of morals in sexual questions any more than in religious questions. Those who do not get one from the church must formulate one for themselves according to the facts in nature. There was no book, so far as he knew, which attempted to evolve from natural law a code of morals applying to married and unmarried life. "For the purpose of 'protecting the morals' of the medical profession as well as the laity," added Mr. Schroeder, "the valuable psychological studies of sex made by Havelock Ellis are denied the privilege of the mails. According to Anthony Comstock, the authority whom we allow to dictate to us in such matters here in the United States, any chapter on sexual science in any text book of physiology is obscene literature. In order that prudes of this kind may not inflict ignorance upon us in regard to sex subjects some legislation is necessary."

To which last remark we add a hearty "Amen."

MENACE TO SOCIALISM IN POSTAL LAWS.

An open foe can be faced, but a secret one may destroy you before you are aware. And a very insidious foe is now undermining socialism, using that word in its broad sense.

In Chicago the federal courts have lately convicted two people, a woman and a man, of the "crime" of circulating "obscene" literature. Who are these people—are they pimps and panderers, retailers of foul photographs, prints and shameless tales? Not at all. I know them both and can speak from actual acquaintance. Dr. Alice B. Stockham is a woman advanced in years, a noted physician, author, publisher, of unspotted personal life, deeply religious, a leader in the great new-thought movement, perhaps beloved by more actual and prospective mothers than any woman in the United States. For years Dr. Stockham has devoted herself to teaching in the most careful, conscientious and considerate manner the truths of their own bodies to young girls, wives and mothers. I know from actual conversations I have had with her, from advice she has asked of me, how painstaking her efforts have been to teach all necessary facts in a manner so delicate as to offend no dictum of good taste, no law of court or convention. Far too careful I have always felt her to be. But her success has been great. Her book "Tokology" has sold to the number of half a million copies, been translated in foreign tongues, and is a household treasure throughout the world. Her book "Karezza" has brought happiness to uncounted homes, and her book on "Tolstoi" (whom she visited in Russia) is one of the best pictures of the home life of that great man ever drawn. This pure-minded, motherly woman, this scientist and philanthropist, has been indicted by the grand jury of Chicago, tried, convicted, and, together with her manager, fined a sum which, including costs, amounts to over $1,000—and for what? For sending out through the mails (although she was arrested for violation of the postal laws and on complaint of a postal inspector), but by express, not a printed book or paper, but a typewritten essay of medical advice to prospective brides and bridegrooms on the important functions they were about to assume, sent under sealed cover and only to those needing and requesting it.

Near the same time Moses Harman, 74 years old, whose personal character has never been assailed, was arrested for sending through the mails an essay on "Sex Radicalism," a scientific discussion of the subject by Dora Forster Kerr, wife of one of the active western socialists. A work able, strong and clean. He was tried by jury, but was refused the privilege of addressing them and sentence was passed for one year's imprisonment at hard labor, without permitting him to speak at all in his own defense. Protesting against this in a double number of his paper, the periodical was held up in the post-office, decided by the postal authorities obscene, sent to Washington and destroyed, all without notice to him, trial, or redress, or even restitution of postage paid. It was decided to be obscene because of two articles—both by women. I have read both. The language is exceptionally clean, as might be expected from refined ladies, and both are an appeal to the moral conscience to lessen sex-indulgence and consider sex more holy. Is this obscenity?

Has it come to such a pass, then, that in this country physicians are forbidden to send sealed letters of medical advice to patients if the subject be sex, that high-minded scientists, authors, editors are forbidden the discussion of sex, even when they are working for self-restraint and what they consider higher, holier standards? That is exactly it. The Postal Inquisition has passed the stage of attacking words and now attacks ideas. The judge in the court convicting Dr. Stockham is said to have given it as his opinion that all discussion of sex, public or private, was improper, and decisions and opinions of judges quickly become precedents and fixed in law.

Now what is the cause of this extraordinary persecution and what is it moving to accomplish? Is this thing what it appears to be on the surface? For a long time the capitalistic class in this country has been in a state of alarm over the growing restlessness of the proletariat and the spread of socialistic feeling of various kinds. Not lacking acumen, this class has perceived that the only way to stop this was to suppress free speech, free press and the organization of workingmen. But to do this instantly was impossible. It had to be done gradually, but it had to be done, or the social revolution was sure. Little by little this work has gone steadily on. All workingmen know how free speech has been prevented, wherever possible, how police and military have been increased and strengthened and granted larger and more arbitrary powers, and they see how employers' unions, and courts by their injunctions, are working to crush the labor organizations. All passions, all prejudices, are appealed to, and now the law, now the mob, are tools. But few see the steady motion to suppress free press. Partly this is being done by bribing and buying up and otherwise controlling the great papers. But the smaller papers are more refractory—their editors are free lances and come-outers. To suppress these the law concerning second-class matter is fitted and has been applied almost exclusively in muzzling them. All socialists know how "Wilshire's Magazine" was driven to Canada by a most arbitrary application of this law, and the number of smaller papers wiped out has been very large. The "Comstock" law against sending obscene matter through the mail was another tool. These astute legislators were not slow in seeing that all sex-reformers soon came to see that no advance could be made under present conditions—that equal rights for women, the economic independence of women and in general liberty, equality and coöperation were essential absolutely to better sex conditions; and that all socialists soon had to consider sexual evils of today as imperative points of reform. Therefore to suppress sexologists, sex-reformers, sex-students was to suppress socialists. That is the real motive and spirit back of all this. By commencing indirectly, by vague laws against obscenity, and to protect and regulate the mails, the authorities are gradually gaining and closing a grip that will finally enable them to suppress any book or paper dangerous to their interests and to establish a complete and vigorous censorship. A law forbidding the sending of anarchistic matter through the mails, interpreted as the law against obscenity now is, would enable the postal authorities to suppress and destroy, without notice, trial, or redress, any issue of any socialist paper they pleased, if not to arrest and imprison the editors. It is to this end the whole thing is clearly working. There is nothing the ruling classes, the world over, fear like free speech and free press. And all socialists the world over, realizing this, should demand and work for absolute free speech and free press. It will not do to admit any exception, or that exception will at once be seized and utilized to nullify the rest.

There is in New York City an organization, the Free Speech League, which exists for this end. Let every reader of this become a member. The yearly dues are $1. Address Edwin C. Walker, 244 West One Hundred and Forty-third street, New York City. Remember, this is the foundation.—J. William Lloyd, in "The Ariel" for April.

[When M. Harman was arrested he was charged with sending copies of LUCIFER, containing the essay on "Sex Radicalism," through the mail; but this charge was dropped. The indictment was based on two other articles, as most of our readers know.]

SPURIOUS MODESTY HARMFUL.

Among refined people, at least, the matters involved [in "Ethics of Marriage"] are reserved for private investigation and reflection. In as much as the sources of knowledge and methods of research are not open and familiar to many, and silence is preserved concerning them, they fail to be considered, and the results are error, vice and often crime, and consequent injury and misery. Among men of intellectual culture it is commonly supposed to be a mark of delicacy not to refer to the topics of this treatise without special occasion and serious reason; among women of the same kind and degree of culture it is deemed to be a mark of true modesty. Between men and women of this class they are never mooted. To such persons it may be said, there is occasion and there are many serious reasons for a candid, careful and complete consideration of these matters always, and especially at the present time. The reasons are such as to require a surrender of reserve and the breach of reticence. And this need not impair the purity of a true refinement nor the delicacy of a true modesty. . . .

It is worth while, however, to inquire how it has come to be true that matters which are so central in our physical life, so essential in their relation to the condition, character, career and destiny of every individual, so fundamental and vital to every institution and interest of society, cannot be "even so much as named among us." This fact alone is one of the most significant among the many indications that human nature has been strangely inverted and foully corrupted. Veil these matters from our eyes as we may, they stare upon us in their manifest consequences. . . .

To a very large number of those who commonly make objection to works of this order or public addresses on these topics as indelicate if not impure, it is not important to make an explanation, much less an apology. They are too often moved by prejudice and sentiment, the latter as irrational as the former. Every thorough teacher of righteousness who has been pressed by a conviction of duty to refer with severe cautiousness to these topics in public assemblies has learned of expressions of opinion and feeling not complimentary to his judgment and taste. Yet he has been able to discover that among his least lenient judges are men who do not always obey the precept, "Let no filthy communication proceed out of your mouth"; women who are familiar with a certain sort of French romances, men and women who sit together before the stage, on which the actresses appear certainly not "clothed" if they be "in their right mind." They are forced to think that there may be a form of modesty which is really spurious and that fault-finding may be retaliation for fault found and set forth to the wounding of the heart through the conscience.

All profound moralists affirm that it is not only a privilege but the duty of a man who knows what others do not know, yet need to know, to teach them; who sees the wrong they do not see, and yet commit, to correct them; who perceives the peril they do not discern, yet rush upon, to warn them; who anticipates the ruin they do not forecast, yet surely go to meet, to save them. Woe to him if he shuns the duty! In the end the sting of a just conscience, the condemnation of just men and the judgment of a just God will find him.—Rev. J. T. Duryea, in "The Ethics of Marriage."

THOUSANDS HURRIED TO PREMATURE GRAVES.

Years back, when I was first impressed with the importance of a widespread knowledge of sexual subjects, and was surprised at the deplorable ignorance of the people, and the silence and narrow-minded prejudices of the medical profession, I determined to devote a great portion of my time to the delivery of popular lectures upon these and kindred subjects. . . . I expect to receive from some narrow-minded people, as heretofore, only opprobrium for my efforts, but I have become familiar with this, and it passes by me as the "idle wind which I regard not." I have the gratifying reflection that the noble-minded and true of both sexes continue to send me words of encouragement and urge me on in the same course I have hitherto pursued. . . . Notwithstanding the acknowledged fact that there never was a period in the world's history when knowledge was so generally diffused among the people, and within the reach of all classes, as at the present time, yet it is a deplorable fact that a knowledge of the laws of life—of the formation and functions of the generative organs—upon which health so greatly depends, knowledge so crude, is so little understood, except by the favored few, that hundreds of thousands are, through ignorance, hurried to premature graves that might have lived to old age, had they possessed a true knowledge of the physiological and organic laws, observance of which are so essential to sound health and longevity.—Theodore E. Kinget, M. D.

NO REAL SAFETY IN IGNORANCE.

The author is aware that many individuals disapprove altogether of any publication of this kind (on "Prostitution"), on the ground that the disclosures necessary to be made are apt to minister to an already vitiated taste, or to familiarize the minds of the young and inexperienced with subjects that have a tendency to mislead or deprave them. Suppose this ground were admitted to have some force, what, it may be asked, is to be done with a system so debasing in its nature and so ruinous in its results? Is it better to suffer it to go on perpetuating itself and contestedly to behold it carrying down its thousands to a gloomy grave and into a still gloomier eternity, than to make a determined effort to resist its progress, simply because such an effort may perhaps minister to a vitiated appetite or exert a deceitful influence upon the mind of some thoughtless youth? Even on the assumption that some hopeful youth may have his moral principle shaken, still the evil to be remedied is of so gigantic a nature that its arrestment would not be too dearly purchased were the supposed consequences necessarily connected with it. But it may, after all, be a question whether such an idea be not visionary.—William Tait, Surgeon.

Man has a right to think all things, speak all things, write all things, but not to impose his opinions.—Machiavel.
